I am not undertaking to say what will be the final decision of the Supreme Court. I was greatly impressed on Saturday last with the points made particularly by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON] when he read from observations of the Supreme Court of the United States. I can well see how the Supreme Court of the United States may sustain the position taken by the State of California. But the point to which I address myself is that there is room for doubt, and until the question has been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States it would seem to me that the Congress is acting prematurely in giving away such rights as the Government may have in and to these lands. As to whether or not lands under the ocean are to be considered as public lands within the State, raises a delicate legal question. In the first place, the language "within its limits" as applied to the State, would obviously include, according to the very language set forth in the constitution of California, the property extending three English miles into the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. KNOWLAND. So the Senator has no doubt that the geographic limits of the State of California, as set forth in the constitution of 1849, and as a part of the compact by which she came into the Union, do extend out three English miles along the coast line of the State of California.

Mr. DONNELL. I would say to the Senator that the language of the constitution certainly so provides.

Mr. KNOWLAND. So I believe my able colleague, for whom I have the greatest respect, will appreciate the position of the people of California who feel that the pending proposal is an attempt to take something from that State which is as much a part of it as the Sacramento Valley or the San Joaquin Valley.

Mr. DONNELL. I appreciate the Senator's point, and it may well be so determined eventually by the Supreme Court of the United States. A former Secretary of the Interior, and a former and the present Attorney General of the United States do not regard the decisions with respect to submerged lands, as cited by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, as being decisive of the question with respect to submerged lands lying coastwise against the State of California. I point out to the Senator that the language in the enabling act to the effect that California is declared to be one of the United States of America, states further—

> Be it further enacted, That the said State of California is admitted into the Union upon the express condition that the people of said State, through their legislature or otherwise, shall never interfere with the primary disposal of the public lands within its limits, and shall pass no law and do no act whereby the title of the United States to, and right to dispose of, the same shall be impaired or questioned.

I ask the Senator this question: If it be conceded that the instant before the State of California was admitted to the Union the title to the 3-mile strip along the coast of California was public land of the United States, and belonged to the United States, does not the Senator concede the fact that to be that the language to which I have referred in the act of admission immediately raises the legal question of whether or not the State of California has any right to dispose of those lands which, if the premise which I have indicated is correct, were public lands of the United States. Does the Senator care to express himself on that point?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I think the Senator has raised an intricate legal question. I do believe that Court decisions—I do not have them before me but I believe that they can be produced during the day—are to the effect that lands under navigable waters and under navigable streams are not public lands.

Mr. DONNELL. I should like to read the remainder of the act of admission, if I may. It is not very long.

Immediately following the language I have read is a semicolon, and thereafter follows that language:

And that they—

That is, the people of the State of California—

shall never lay any tax or assessment of any description whatsoever upon the public domain of the United States, and in no case shall nonresident proprietors who are citizens of the United States, be taxed higher than residents; and that all the navigable waters within the said States shall be common highways, and forever free, as well to the inhabitants of said State as to the citizens of the United States, without any tax, impost, or duty therefor: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as recognizing or rejecting the propositions tendered by the people of California as articles of compact in the ordinance adopted by the convention which formed the constitution of that State.

This act of admission appears at page 452 of Ninth United States Statutes at Large.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator at this point—I do not want to take up his time on it—that in my opinion the people of California have very faithfully carried out their part of the bargain of their admission to statehood, as indicated by the distinguished Senator in the passage from which he has just read, and it was not until 1945, over 90 years after the admission of California to statehood, and some 150 years after the existence of the United States as a republic, that Mr. Ickes filed suit and challenged the title of the State to its tidelands out to the 3-mile limit. So the first reneging on the 3-mile agreement came in 1945.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an observation?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Certainly.

Mr. DONNELL. As was mentioned on Saturday, the ruling of the Department of the Interior, by Mr. Ickes, in 1937, was it not, was a direct reversal of his previous decision, was it not?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I may have said 1935. I think it was 1945.

Mr. DONNELL. Possibly 1945. The date is immaterial, and I do not have it before me. At any rate, he made it under the authority of the act set forth in his letter to Mr. Proctor that the United States Government had no title. He wrote that in 1933. Later on he made the express statement to the effect that, in view of the fact that he had found a doubt to exist, he no longer adhered to that position, but thought that it was a matter that should be determined before the policy of the Department should be thereafter carried into effect.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I think that was in 1945.

Mr. DONNELL. That was in 1937, but his testimony, as it was read rather extensively on Saturday, was given in February 1946.

Mr. DONNELL subsequently said: Mr. President, as to the question of date which occurred in the colloquy between the distinguished Senator from California and myself, I should like to quote from page 9430 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 19, 1946, this excerpt from the testimony of Mr. Ickes, as follows:

Until 1937, these applications were denied by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and, in those cases where appeals were taken to the Department, his decisions were affirmed * * * but applicants and their lawyers continued to insist that the United States does own the land and the oil and that the Department does have the power to grant them oil and gas leases. So we began to have doubts * * * consequently, since 1937, action on all of these applications, of which there are about 200, has been suspended pending a judicial determination.

ADMISSION OF WOMEN SECRETARIES AND CLERKS TO SENATE FLOOR

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I desire to bring up a matter possibly of personal privilege or by way of parliamentary inquiry as to the interpretation of the Rules of the Senate. Apropos of our extended discussion last week regarding equal rights, it would seem to me appropriate that before considering the equal-rights amendment the Senate should take the mote out of its own eye before it plucks the beam out of the eye of the States. So I should like to have a ruling of the Chair as to whether, under the rules, female clerks may be allowed the privileges of the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Rule XXXIII, on page 38, of the Standing Rules of the Senate provides as follows:

Clerks to Senate committees and clerks to Senators when in the actual discharge of their official duties. Clerks to Senators to be admitted to the floor must be regularly appointed and borne upon the rolls of the Secretary of the Senate as such.

The Chair believes, and the Parliamentarian concurs in the opinion, that a woman clerk to any Senator or to any committee has the same rights as a man clerk, as if she were a man clerk. Therefore, under that ruling, the Chair holds that they are entitled to the floor.

Mr. BREWSTER. I very much appreciate the ruling of the Chair. In view of what the practice of former years has been in general regarding it, I think it would be well if the Senate now should express themselves or else forever after hold their peace.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair suggests that if some Senator would appeal from the ruling of the Chair, it could immediately be established.

At any rate, the Chair will ask unanimous consent that that ruling may be the ruling of the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection; so the ruling of the Chair is endorsed by the Senate.

Mr. BREWSTER. I very much appreciate it.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry on the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Is the Senator from New Mexico correct in understanding that the ruling applies to any female who might be a clerk of a standing committee, or does it apply only to the help in a Senator's office?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It applies to both; it applies to clerks to Senators when in the actual discharge of their official duties and clerks to committees.

Mr. BREWSTER. I had immediate business that required the attention of my clerk, and I desired that I should have the facilities afforded.

Mr. WHERRY subsequently said: A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. Is not this the first time in 160 years that a woman has had the privilege of the floor of the Senate as clerk to a Senator?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that is true.

Mr. WHERRY. I should also like to ask, does not the interpretation placed by the Parliamentarian upon the rule as to who is eligible suggest that there should be no misunderstanding as to borrowed help, whether they are men or women, that is, that to be entitled to the floor one must be carried on the pay roll of the Senate as clerk to a committee or clerk to a Senator?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Chief clerk to a Senator and the clerk to a committee.

Mr. WHERRY. In that status, of course, they take the same position as male clerks, but unless they are carried on the rolls as clerks to Senators or clerks to committees, they are not entitled to the privileges of the Senate floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. BREWSTER. I think it is a well-known fact that the chief clerks of a very substantial minority, if not a majority, of Senators are women, and that is why it seems to me very appropriate that we should now discard the practice which has formerly prevailed.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield?

Mr. CARVILLE. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. I merely call the attention of the Senate to the fact that last week we voted on the question of equality between men and women. The ruling of the President pro tempore of the Senate this morning indicates that certainly, so far as the Senate of the United States is concerned, there is equality between men and women.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DONNELL. I understood the Chair to rule in the light of rule XXXIII. Am I correct in that understanding?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DONNELL. I observe that the language at the conclusion of the rule reads:

> Clerks to Senators, to be admitted to the floor, must be regularly appointed and borne upon the rolls of the Secretary of the Senate as such.

I thought I heard the Chair refer to chief clerks. May I inquire of the Chair whether or not the ruling is confined to chief clerks, or does it apply to any clerk in the office of a Senator?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. One clerk is carried on the rolls as the clerk of a Senator, usually referred to as the secretary to the Senator; and they must be in the discharge of their duties, as the Senator knows.

The Chair will state that he is very happy that the Senate has sustained the ruling made by the Chair on the question.

Mr. BREWSTER subsequently said: Mr. President, in connection with the episode which occurred a few moments ago, I ask unanimous consent that all the colloquy respecting the interpretation of the rule as to the admission of women clerks be placed together in the RECORD. It has been suggested to me that at this historic moment it might be proper to place in the RECORD the name of the young lady who was admitted to the floor, who happened to be my clerk, Mrs. Frances E. Dustin, who has been associated with me, both while I was Governor and since I have served in the House and in the Senate, for 20 years. I should appreciate having her name incorporated in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request is granted.

TITLE TO LAND BENEATH TIDAL AND NAVIGABLE WATERS

The Senate resumed consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 225) to quiet the titles of the respective States, and others, to lands beneath tidewaters and lands beneath navigable waters within the boundaries of such States and to prevent further clouding of such titles.

Mr. CARVILLE. Mr. President, when the pending joint resolution, House Joint Resolution 225, first came to my attention, I was disposed to favor its adoption. The matter of legal ownership of submerged and tidelands was one to which I had not heretofore given any serious attention. On reading this resolution, however, I find that it contains an unusual, even a startling, proposal of far-reaching consequences.

It is here proposed to—

> Quitclaim all right, title, interest, claim, or demand of the United States of America in and to all lands beneath tidewaters and all lands beneath navigable waters within the boundaries of each of the respective States.

The serious consequences of a quitclaim deed to either private or public property is too well known to the Members of this Senate to need elaboration by me. There is a finality to such an action which should suggest extreme caution before that step is taken. This is especially true if the quitclaim document is signed without the receipt of any financial consideration.

At this point I should like to observe that if the Government of the United States owns any property in the lands in question it is being given away by this joint resolution.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield?

Mr. CARVILLE. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. I ask the distinguished Senator if he is acquainted with the telegram of Alan Bible, the attorney general of Nevada, in which he says:

> I have joined with 45 other attorneys general in brief in support of such resolutions so as to set forth the position of Nevada on this matter before your committee. The resolutions seem the only safe way to prevent the confiscation by administrative or judicial action of lands confirmed to the States over a century of judicial history. While Nevada has no tidelands nor submerged lands on the sea its interest in lands below inland navigable waters is threatened in principle by the theory these resolutions are designed to repudiate.

Mr. CARVILLE. I know of that letter. In fact, I was Governor of Nevada at the time, and discussed this matter with the attorney general. As I stated in the beginning of my remarks, I was disposed to favor the adoption of the pending joint resolution, having talked this matter over, but it seemed there were legal complications which made it dangerous, to my mind, for the resolution to be adopted, or for this matter to be settled, until such time as the Supreme Court could pass upon the question.

Mr. WILEY. I take it the Senator feels that the right of petition is also a right in the States as well as in the citizenry of the Nation, and when some forty-odd States ask the Congress to define a policy in order to remove a cloud to title, these States have a right to be heard, as they were heard by the committee—and have the determination as to such policy.

Mr. CARVILLE. Answering the Senator I would say I do not understand that the States have asked Congress to define a policy in order to remove a cloud to title. This matter was not before the Supreme Court when the States were considering the question and I consider if there is a question of a cloud on the title it is a legal question and should be decided by the Court.

Now, Mr. President, continuing my remarks, referring to the matter of no consideration being contained in the joint resolution for the quit claiming of this land, the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] mentioned the ownership of properties along the tidelands by the States.

Another question arises in that connection. If the Federal Government has ownership along the tidelands, and probably extending into the tidelands, that raises a legal question insofar as the tidelands are concerned.

There may be some conflict of opinion as to the value of the property proposed to be quitclaimed by this joint resolution, but there is no dispute as to the fact that that value amounts to billions of dollars, a large part of which consists of proven and potential petroleum deposits.

Under the Constitution the Congress is the trustee for, and has the power of disposing of, under enacted law, the public lands of the United States. Whether that power may legally be exercised to the extent of disposing of these lands without adequate consideration is at least doubtful, but there is no doubt at all that the Congress has no moral right to so dispose of such lands.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CARVILLE. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. I think the Senator a moment ago stated that the Federal Government had vast sums of money invested in docks or other improvements at different places along the shores of the United States. I should like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that there are uncounted numbers of cases in which the Federal Government, desiring to improve its navigation facilities along one or the other coast, has sought to secure title to the lands which it desired to improve, and in every instance which has come to my attention—and I can furnish the Senator with a great number of instances—the title has come either directly from the State, or by mesne conveyance from the State, and the several attorneys general of the United States have passed upon such titles, and have put their stamp of approval upon them, so long as the titles were clear from the State to the Federal Government.

Mr. CARVILLE. I thank the Senator. I cannot say that I am familiar with that phase, because I have not gone into that particular feature of the matter, but it is an argument in answer to the Senator from California upon the proposition.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield?

Mr. CARVILLE. I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. As I look at the report of the committee, it seems that they say the proposed action would not—> in the opinion of the committee, give away anything to which the United States has any justifiable claim, but merely removes a cloud from the judicially established title of the States and their grantees, caused by the assertion of claim by certain Federal administrative officials.

The report further states—

> It preserves the title of the United States to such lands where they have been lawfully acquired by donation, purchase, or otherwise.

Does not that protect what the Senator has in mind?

Mr. CARVILLE. If the joint resolution means that, yes; but in answer to the Senator's first question, the Federal Government must feel that it has some ownership in the land or it would never have begun the suit, and if the Federal Government has no ownership in it, it is useless to pass the joint resolution.

Mr. HAWKES. Of course, sometimes when one person claims he owns a thing another person may claim an interest in it, and they have to settle the dispute. As I understand, that is what the joint resolution is intended to do.

If I may read further from the report, it states:

> The resolution does not affect the right of the United States to acquire such lands lawfully in the future for any Federal purpose; nor does it, of course, abridge any constitutional power to regulate and control commerce and navigation.

I desired to interrupt the Senator only to say that it seems to me that the joint resolution very definitely states what is set forth in the report. They seem to be in consonance, so far as my understanding of the situation is concerned, and I think that should satisfy the junior Senator from Nevada that the United States is not giving anything away, but is only attempting to settle the question as to who has the right to the land under the navigable streams.

Mr. CARVILLE. If there is ownership in the land so far as the United States is concerned, then there is ownership in the mineral rights and oil rights which I claim are being given away. I imagine, from the nature of the discussion which has taken place in the Senate, that the very reason this suit has been instituted is to determine that question, and I may say to the Senator from New Jersey that I feel that before Congress takes it upon itself to give the land away, the Supreme Court, to my mind, should decide the question and then we would know whether we had anything to deed away and whether we are entitled to any consideration if we did deed it away.

Mr. HAWKES. I may say to the Senator from Nevada that I view the matter a little differently. I think this is a legislative rather than a judicial question, and I do not think the Supreme Court should enter into legislation when we have a Congress to determine who owns or has rights to this tidewater land. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. CARVILLE. Mr. President, the very fact that a quitclaim is proposed naturally infers that some claim of title exists in the United States and only a sufficient and considerable tangible consideration or a very great public service would justify this body in giving its approval to such a quitclaim.

On these grounds alone, I find it impossible to give my approval to House Joint Resolution 225.

The joint resolution contains another provision which, it seems to me, is of profound significance. I call to the special attention of the Senators the following language of the joint resolution:

> And excepting therefrom such lands beneath tidewaters and such lands beneath navigable waters, and such interest therein, as the United States is lawfully entitled to under the law as established by the decisions of the courts of the State in which the land is situated.

Senators will note that this paragraph of the joint resolution proposes to limit the possession and ownership of such lands by the United States to such thereof "as the United States is lawfully entitled to under the laws as established by the decisions of the courts of the State in which the land is situated."

Definitely and clearly the joint resolution proposes to divest the Federal courts, and especially the Supreme Court of the United States, of jurisdiction over cases of extreme and fundamental importance in which the United States is a party.

Section 2 of article III of the Constitution provides:

> The judicial power which extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority: * * * to controversies to which the United States shall be a party—

And so forth. I am sure that no one in this Chamber will contend that the United States is not a party to any action affecting the fundamental question of ownership of these lands. The same Constitution which provided for the organization and continued existence of the Senate also equally provided for the existence of the Supreme Court of the United States and other Federal courts and defined and limited the powers of the Senate and of those courts.

It was never intended by the framers of the Constitution that State courts would have the authority to infringe on the zone of jurisdiction of the Federal courts as such zone of jurisdiction was established in the primary law of this Nation.

I submit that for those reasons that portion of the joint resolution is clearly unconstitutional. It would be idle for the Senate to ignore the manifest purpose of the proponents of this joint resolution or to overlook the fact that a case is now pending before the Supreme Court of the United States in which case the United States is plaintiff and the State of California is defendant and which case involves submerged lands which the joint resolution proposes to quitclaim in order to divest the Supreme Court of jurisdiction.

I think it is a self-evident fact that Congress has no power to divest that court of jurisdiction which has been expressly conferred upon it by the Constitution.

In my opinion the passage of the joint resolution instead of ending litigation would increase it. It would also be idle for the Senate to ignore the fact that major oil corporations are tremendously interested in the passage of the joint resolution. It is not my purpose to pass upon the legal merits of their claims under leases from the State of California to extremely valuable oil deposits. Neither do I profess any capacity to foretell what the decision of the Supreme Court will be on this important question.

But on one point I have no doubts and that point is that the controversy herein involved is now before the Supreme Court of the United States, the constitutionally created body for the consideration of such a case, and that the Senate should not, by the passage of the joint resolution, attempt to divest that Court of the jurisdiction under which it is now lawfully functioning.

Let me add in closing that the passage of the joint resolution would create two highly dangerous precedents: (1) the precedent of disposing of the public lands of the United States by what amounts to a quitclaim deed, and (2) an attempt by this constitutional legislative body to curtail by indirection the powers of the equally constitutional judiciary.

Mr. CAPEHART. I send to the desk an amendment to House Joint Resolution 225 which I offer and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURDOCK in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 3, beginning with line 14, it is proposed to strike out "such boundary line extends oceanward beyond three geographical miles" and in lieu thereof to insert:

> at the time of the admission of such State into the Union, such boundary line extended oceanward beyond three geographical miles, giving due recognition to any changes in such coast line since occasioned by reason of fill-in or natural accretion.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President——

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McCARRAN. How does the time now stand, and whose time have the recent speakers been occupying?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the time as it now stands.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. Mr. MCCARRAN has 72 minutes remaining; and the intervening time since he spoke, 12:27, including the time occupied by Mr. KNOWLAND and Mr. CAPEHART is charged to the time controlled by the opponents.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President——

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, how did the proponents lose approximately 40 minutes?

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. Mr. WILEY began speaking at 11:30 and concluded at 11:42, consuming 12 minutes. Mr. KNOWLAND began at 11:42 and concluded at 12:03, consuming 21 minutes, or a total of 33 minutes, which, deducted from the total time allotted to Mr. MCCARRAN, 105 minutes, leaves 72 minutes.

Mr. McCARRAN. As I understand, the Senator who now has the floor, the able Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], is speaking on the time of the opponents.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

M. DONNELL. I do not understand how much time is yet available to the opponents of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the remaining time available to the opponents of the resolution, for the benefit of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McCARRAN. As I understand, the time was to be allotted by the majority leader [Mr. BARKLEY], who is of the opposition, and by myself, in charge of the joint resolution. Has time been allotted to the Senator who now has the floor? What time has been allotted him, and how are we to arrange the time so that the Senator from Kentucky will have some time at the end of his period for his own presentation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair is advised that no time has been allotted, but that the time which has been occupied has been occupied by Senators merely rising and claiming recognition.

Mr. McCARRAN. I should like to have the time so arranged that the Senator in charge of the bill will have some time at the conclusion. I am perfectly willing to allocate time. I know that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], and the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], were speaking as proponents of the joint resolution; but I should like to be advised as to the time, so that I may allocate to myself a sufficient period of time to meet the problems which have been presented by Senators.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I shall require only a minute.

Mr. McCARRAN. It is not my minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that neither the Senator from Nevada nor the majority leader was present to allocate the time. Hence the time was disposed of to Senators claiming recognition. As the Chair understands, each side has remaining approximately 72 minutes.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On whose time is the Senator now speaking?

Mr. CAPEHART. The time of the opponents of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, the amendment which I have just sent to the desk is very simple. It will take me only a moment to explain it.

The amendment would give to each State in the Union 3 miles oceanward from its shore line unless when admitted into the Union it had more than 3 miles. Texas is an example of a State which had more than 3 miles when admitted into the Union. Its boundary extended 9 miles from shore. My amendment would give to each State 3 miles, and would give to those States which had more than 3 miles when they were admitted into the Union whatever was allocated to them or given to them legally when they entered the Union.

Mr. President, I think that is as far as the Federal Government should go. I do not believe that the Congress wishes to give any State more than 3 miles, or more than it had when it was admitted into the Union. My amendment would estop any State from acquiring in the future more than 3 miles, or more than it was legally given when it was admitted into the Union.

On Saturday, it was felt that possibly the amendment which the able Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] offered, which amendment was adopted, would cover this situation; but I now find that it does not. Therefore I hope that this amendment will be adopted, because I feel certain that no Senator wishes to give away mineral rights or oil rights to any State which is not entitled to them.

This controversy seems to have revolved around the State of California. If I correctly understand, the whole problem started as the result of litigation by the Federal Government against the State of California. Under my amendment the State of California would be given 3 miles; the State of Texas would keep its 9 miles; the State of Louisiana would have 3 miles. I do not know to what distance oceanward the boundaries of the New England States go, because when the Thirteen Original Colonies came into the Union they were given a certain distance into the Atlantic Ocean. I do not know what that distance was; but whatever it was, they would keep that territory. That would be their boundary line.

If we do not adopt some such amendment as this, in my opinion—although I am not a lawyer—there would be nothing to prevent a State from doing what Texas recently did. Texas called an extra session of the State legislature and fixed the boundary of that State at 31 miles into the Gulf of Mexico. When Texas came into the Union its boundary extended 9 miles offshore. Recently at a special session of the State legislature the boundary was extended to 31 miles.

Recently the State of Louisiana held a special session of the State legislature and the boundary of the State of Louisiana was extended 27 miles.

If we are to settle the question of boundaries once and for all, let us settle it, and let us say in this proposed act that each State shall be entitled to 3 miles, and that every State which had more than 3 miles when it was admitted into the Union may keep that boundary; but hereafter that shall be the boundary of each State, and it can add no more.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McCARRAN. When the vote is called for, from whose time will the time required for the vote be taken? My judgment is that these amendments should be acted on at the last, after the debate is concluded, so that no one will lose any of his time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The position of the present occupant of the Chair is that it was understood at the time when the unanimous-consent agreement was entered into that the votes would be taken on all amendments and on the joint resolution beginning at 3 o'clock. The present occupant of the Chair is disposed to rule at this time that votes will not be in order until the hour of 3 o'clock has arrived.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CAPEHART. Do I correctly understand that the ruling of the Chair is that when the hour of 3 o'clock arrives, the amendment will be voted on?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that the amendment of the Senator from Indiana is presently the only amendment pending. In the opinion of the Chair, the Senator's amendment will be entitled to be voted upon first when the hour of 3 o'clock arrives.

Mr. CAPEHART. That will be promptly at 3 o'clock; will it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. CAPEHART. That is perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan is recognized. The Chair desires to ascertain in whose time the Senator from Michigan is about to speak.

Mr. FERGUSON. I was about to state that, Mr. President. At the last session, I requested from the able majority leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], some time on the pending measure. Thirty minutes has been allotted to me from the time of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. President, in our consideration of the pending measure, I think we should try to ascertain, first, what we are attempting to do by it. It appears to me that we are trying to give a quitclaim deed to certain property.

The next question is, Who owns the property?

After ascertaining the answers to the two questions I have already stated, the third question would be, naturally, whether the United States should give a quitclaim deed to the property.

Mr. President, there is no doubt that the Congress of the United States can convey the property or assets of the United States. We must begin with that proposition. But I think it is most important that we ascertain, first, who owns the property to which we are about to give a quitclaim.

The joint resolution says that its purpose is to quiet the title of the respective States and others—meaning other property owners holding title under the State—to lands beneath tidewaters. That is one thing as to which the attempt to give a quitclaim is being made.

Second, the attempt to give a quitclaim is being made with respect to lands beneath navigable waters within the boundaries of said States, and to prevent the further clouding of such title.

On the third page of the joint resolution certain language appears which I desire to read. I wish to read what the United States attempts to reserve. I think this is very important. The question is whether we are giving all the title and all the rights to the property in question. On the third page, in line 5, we find that the United States Government is attempting to retain the following: "retaining, however, to the United States of America its present powers of regulation and control for the purposes of commerce, navigation, and the national defense."

Mr. President, its present powers are what the United States is attempting to reserve. I should like to have pointed out what are the present powers which we are trying to reserve. It appears to me that it is very important that we ascertain what those powers are. Are they those which relate to criminal actions? Are they those which relate to taking minerals or vegetable or marine life from the water itself? Do they apply to the subsurface oil and minerals?

All that it is attempted to do here is to retain in the United States its present powers. I think we should go into that question before we undertake to grant all the rights of the United States Government to the land under the high seas.

Now going down to line 9, we find the following, in connection with the question as to what we are trying to transfer:

As used in this joint resolution, the phrase "lands beneath tidewaters" shall include (1) all land permanently or periodically covered by tidal waters up to but not above the line of mean high tide and oceanward to a line three geographical miles distant from the coast line—

Mr. President, what is the coast line? We have talked about the bays and we have talked about off-shore land. Let us consider the situation in Florida, where there is a line of islands some miles off the main shore. Are we to measure the distance of 3 miles from the coast line from the main shore or from the line of islands? In short, Mr. President, what is the coast line? In the joint resolution, no definition of "coast line" is provided. Is the distance of 3 miles to be measured from the outlying line of islands or is it to be measured from the main coastline? Nothing is said in the joint resolution about what the coast line is.

But let me continue—and to the boundary line of each respective State where in any case such boundary line extends oceanward beyond three geographical miles.

Mr. President, I can find decisions which indicate that when the Thirteen Colonies came together to form the Federal Union, they were sovereign nations and whatever ownership they had extended as far out as international law would permit. There is a conflict in international law on this question. The Senate is discussing the question of the 3-mile limit insofar as the United States is concerned. We have never said that international law allows the United States to claim rights only 3 miles out into the ocean. During the last war our Government undertook to place the limit hundreds of miles out into the ocean. I am unable to find any place in the law or any authority which establishes the limit as only 3 miles out.

Mr. President, other nations, such as Norway, Sweden, and Russia, have never adopted the 3-mile limit in international law. But here we are trying to legislate upon this great problem which involves not only the United States in its domestic action, but from the international standpoint.

First of all, in my humble opinion, we should try to ascertain what we are attempting to do. Last September the President of the United States undertook to make rules and regulations concerning the continental shelf. Now we understand the continental shelf at places to extend 100 miles and that over it the water ranges up to 600 feet in depth. If the Thirteen Original States owned or had title for a distance of 3 miles, they owned the entire continental shelf, and the United States does not have anything to do with it, under the contention of the proponents of this proposed legislation.

Mr. President, I mention the Thirteen Original States for the reason that I think it is very material that we understand that there are three kinds of States, insofar as this question is concerned. Mr. Edward Borchard, who is professor of international law at Yale University, writes in the American Journal of International Law for the month of January 1946, on page 66, as follows:

Looking first at the State and Federal practice, we find the following evidence: Of the 22 coastal States in the United States, three classes may be distinguished: First, those which were the Original Thirteen Colonies; second, Texas; and third, the States admitted from territories of or cessions acquired by the United States. The first group were independent countries or States and never surrendered to the Federal Government their boundary on the open sea or their common-law jurisdiction over the marginal seas for submarine resources beyond.

I wonder what the Senators who represent the original 13 States think of legislation which would reserve to them only 3 miles and concede to the United States Government all the other area, when we read that the original 13 States never surrendered anything, and, therefore, if they own it, they own to the end of the continental shelf, or at least so far as international law allows them to own or gives them title.

These problems are of an international character. Within the short time which has been assigned to the discussion of the joint resolution, we have not had opportunity to discuss the international problems involved. Those problems were not considered by the Judiciary Committee. They have not been considered in the reports. We are now considering an amendment which would reserve to all coastal States a part of certain lands. The problems I have suggested arise when the Senate endeavors to pass on the question now befor it.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. I understand the Senator feels that there are very substantial and important legal questions involved in this matter. Am I correct?

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, my work as a Senator has required me to make a search and study with regard to problems other than the one now confronting the Senate. However, I went into this question immediately when it came to the floor of the Senate. Practically ever since then I have been reading the law on the subject I find that there is a great conflict in the law. No one seems to know exactly what is the law on the question relating to the continental shelf, or on the question relating to the 3-mile limit.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator indulge me in order to illustrate the conflicting opinions which prevail among outstanding lawyers in our Nation?

Mr. FERGUSON. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. DONNELL. On page 304 of the hearings before the Committee on the Judiciary there appears a copy of a resolution which was adopted by the assembly and house of delegates of the American Bar Association at its annual meeting held in Cincinnati, Ohio, the week of December 17, 1945. The resolution reads as follows:

Whereas since the formation of the Union the States have claimed and exercised title to dominion and control over the lands under their navigable waters both inland and offshore upon the coasts, and such titles of the States have been recognized and upheld both by the courts and by the executive departments of the Government for 150 years: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the American Bar Association, That we earnestly urge the National Congress to take immediate action recognizing and confirming this ownership by the several States.

Mr. President, I invite the attention of the Senator from Michigan to the resolution which I have read. I point out also the fact that in the report of the proceedings of the section of mineral law, at the very same Cincinnati meeting to which I have just referred, there appears a report purporting to be over the names of 19 lawyers, headed by Roy W. Johns, chairman, who is a lawyer in Philadelphia. I read the following:

The question of title to submerged oil deposits has been a matter of long-standing controversy. While 8 years ago congressional sentiment appeared to favor the Federal Government's claim to such deposits, today the Congress is being urged to enact legislation recognizing the title of the several States to lands between the low-water mark and the 3-mile limit.

The Federal Government's claim to ownership of submerged lands appears first to have been raised in 1937 when Senator Nye introduced S. 2164 (75th Cong.) for the purpose of establishing title in the United States in lands between the low-water mark and the 3-mile limit, and to set aside such lands containing oil deposits as a naval petroleum reserve. Senator Nye subsequently introduced a substitute bill (S. J. Res. 208, 75th Cong.), which in addition to claiming title to submerged lands in the United States, directed the Attorney General to assert title to such lands and the oil deposits contained therein. This latter bill passed the Senate on August 19, 1937, but no action thereon was taken by the House.

Mr. President, I invite the attention of Senators to the language which I have read.

I should like to trespass for a moment further in order to read the following observations from the same report of the committee in the section of mineral oil of the American Bar Association, as follows:

While these bills were pending in Congress, the Department of Justice, with the approval of the Department of the Interior, filed a suit in the Federal District Court of Southern California seeking to enjoin Pacific Western Oil Corp. from further operations on a lease executed by the State of California, under the State leasing act, on lands between the low-water mark and the 3-mile limit. When this suit was filed on May 29, 1945, Attorney General Biddle issued a statement in which he said:

"The suit filed today at Los Angeles involved a submerged area near Santa Barbara, Calif., from which oil is being taken by the Pacific Western Oil Corp. under lease from the State of California. Pacific Western Oil Corp. is operating oil wells extending beyond low tide about one-third of a mile into the sea. These operations are, therefore, within the so-called marginal sea which is the area from the ordinary low-water mark to the 3-limit limit. This suit is being brought to determine not only the legal rights of the United States and the State of California, but also the respective rights of the United States and the other coastal States where there are oil deposits.

"The theory of the Government's claim in the present case is that the United States acquired all submerged deposits in the marginal sea by the treaty of cession with Mexico in 1848 and that these deposits did not thereafter pass to the State by virtue of its admission to the Union.

"The suit is designed to settle a problem which has been the subject of genuine controversy and which has overhung titles in the marginal sea. The suit does not involve tidelands or lands under inland waters, though the status of these will no doubt be clarified to some extent by the decision. The suit does not involve lands under the high seas, as to which no drilling operations have been found to exist. Moreover, the suit does not make any claim to an accounting for the past extracting of oil."

I ask the Senator if he does not regard these expressions of opinion by distinguished lawyers on both sides of the question and by the Attorney General of the United States in presenting the view that the Government of the United States acquired the deposits, and that title did not pass to the State of California, as indicating that there is a genuine difference of opinion between lawyers of high standing throughout the Nation.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, my answer to the Senator is that I agree with him that there is a difference of opinion among outstanding lawyers with reference to the question involved. Not only does the difference exist in the language read by the able Senator from Missouri but I find that throughout all the decisions, and throughout all the textbooks which I have examined, there is a conflict of opinion. No one seems to know and no one seems to be able to obtain decisions which will determine the ownership of the land. Every case which has been decided rests upon its own feet.

Mr. President, I wish to continue with the reading from Professor Borchard's article describing the three classes of States:

These they still retained when acquiring statehood. Texas claimed ownership or jurisdiction over three leagues, or about 10½ miles of marginal sea, and still retained that jurisdiction after admission as a State in 1845. The new States, carved out of Federal territory or acquired, received such jurisdiction over the marginal sea as the Federal Government had theretofore held in trust for the eventual State, which was to be on a common footing with the other States.

All the States, whatever their origin, can legitimately lay claim to the common-law right to exercise sovereignty over the marginal sea, subject to such Federal rights as may be exercised, claimed, or reserved by or to the Federal Government in the Constitution, and common-law jurisdiction to control their natural submarine resources on the continental shelf beyond the marginal sea.

Mr. President, it will be noticed that Professor Borchard is there talking about the exercise of sovereignty. There is more than one kind of sovereignty. There is sovereignty in relation to criminal law. In a case recently decided in Florida a man was prosecuted for taking sponges 7 miles from the shore, not within the 3 miles at all. The conviction was sustained, not on the ground that Florida was the owner of the land or the owner of the sponges, but on the ground that the criminal jurisdiction would extend out that far, and also on the ground that the man was a citizen of Florida. So we find there are different kinds of jurisdiction.

We talk about the exercise of sovereignty over the marginal sea, but we also say subject to the Federal rights "which may be exercised, claimed, or reserved by or to the Federal Government in the Constitution and the common law jurisdiction to control their natural submarine resources on the continental shelf beyond the marginal sea."

Mr. President, that is why I have raised a question, referring to page 3, as to the words "retaining, however, to the United States of America its present powers." We are limiting the amount of power we are reserving to the United States.

As this great Nation develops, Mr. President, we may desire many more powers. We may for the defense of this great land need more powers than the present powers. Back in the 1700's we used 3 miles as the distance because that was the distance cannon shot could be fired from our shores. What are we thinking about today? How far can a cannon now shoot from the shores, if we are to use that as the means of determining how much land we have? Missiles can now be sent hundreds of miles out. And here today we are legislating on this important question without considering these very important matters, not only from the standpoint of our domestic life, but from the standpoint of our international relations.

Mr. President, this matter should certainly go back to the Committee on the Judiciary where all the serious problems which are involved should receive attention.

I continue to read from Professor Borchard's article:

How far this shelf claim extends, whether or not beyond the point where the depth reaches 100 fathoms, as some geologists assert, we need not finally determine. It seems from an announcement published simultaneously with the proclamation that the United States claim is limited to the place where the continental shelf reaches a depth of 100 fathoms or 600 feet. Perhaps "areas controllable from the shore" suffice. Certainly it would be timid not to lay claim to such resources and not to contest the foreign objection should any be raised.

Mr. President, let me state the difficulty with the proposed legislation as I see it. The Attorney General of California has acted. I am not criticizing California's claim to this oil, but my idea is that we should determine first who owns it. The Attorney General of California has seen fit to arouse the attorney general of every other State in the Union. He has brought up the question of navigable streams. He has apparently caused the attorney general of the State of Michigan to believe that if we do not pass this proposed legislation today, every navigable stream in which a small stick of timber could be floated will be taken over by the Federal Government; that the State of Michigan will be ousted from it, and that every navigable lake in the State of Michigan will be taken over by the Federal Government. I know we all fear the encroachment of the Federal Government, but we should know, first, who owns the property about which we are presently to legislate.

Mr. President, I should have no objection to releasing the Federal Government's claims. The Federal Government does not have any claim, it has never exercised any claim, over the navigable streams. I desire to prove that, and I think I can prove it by the petition of the Attorney General of California in the United States Supreme Court. That is what we should be concerned with: What is the litigation; what does it involve? I read:

STATEMENT IN SUPPORT OF MOTION

The purpose of the litigation is to establish the right of the United States in the bed of the Pacific Ocean adjacent to the coast of California beginning at low-water mark and extending seaward to 3 nautical miles. This suit does not involve any bays, harbors, rivers or other inland waters of California, nor does it involve the so-called tidelands, namely those lands which are covered and uncovered by the daily flux and reflux of the tides. It is limited solely to that portion of the open sea embraced within the 3-mile belt, sometimes referred to as the marginal sea.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I merely wish to call the attention of the able Senator from Michigan to the point which he raises relative the activity of the Attorney General of California in suggesting to the attorneys general of other States the dangerous precedent which would be established.

The Senator has made reference to the fact that, in his opinion, the same principle would not necessarily apply in the case of navigable streams or inland lakes. I desire to call his attention to the fact that in the leading case of Illinois Central Railroad v. Illinois ((1892), 146 U. S. 387, at page 435), the Court, in dealing with this precise question, as it pertains to Lake Michigan, said:

The same doctrine is in this country held to be applicable to lands covered by fresh water in the Great Lakes over which is conducted an extended commerce with different State and foreign nations. These lakes possess all the general characteristics of open seas, except in the freshness of their waters, and in the absence of the ebb and flow of the tide. In other respects they are inland seas, and there is no reason or principle for the assertion of dominion and sovereignty over and ownership by the State of lands covered by tidewaters that is not equally applicable to its ownership of and dominion and sovereignty over lands covered by the fresh waters of these lakes.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I am glad to have that read into the RECORD at this place, but that does not change what the Attorney General is trying to do in his original proceeding before the United States Supreme Court, and the decision made by the Supreme Court of the United States would not involve Lake Michigan and the other Great Lakes, nor would it involve navigable streams or navigable lakes. It would involve only that which is involved as set out in the petition, and that is what concerns the State of California.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I do not think it has been claimed here, certainly not by the proponents of the pending measure, that the pending suit against the State of California in and of itself is applicable to other States. What we have maintained, and do vigorously maintain at this time, is that the principle which might be established by that suit in taking away from California the sovereignty over these lands will in other similar suits, to be filed later, against other States, establish a principle which will rise up to plague the other States of the Union.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, that still leads me to the conclusion that we should allow the Supreme Court, the legally constituted body under our Republic, to determine the ownership or title to the land and also to the oil.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. Does not the inquiry of the able Senator from California contain peculiar significance? He says the decision of the Supreme Court on the California situation will rise up to plague other States. As I understand, the implication that it would plague them would indicate that the decision would be against the States. Does not the Senator concur in my interpretation?

Mr. FERGUSON. I do concur.

Mr. DONNELL. In the discussion last Saturday mention was made of the fact that the history of the litigation has shown that 9½ years would elapse between the time of the initiation of proceedings and their disposition. I ask the Senator, first, if it is not true that the figures upon that proposition are those which are set forth on page 72 of the hearings, which refer, at least in part, to the examples of a boundary case between New Mexico and Colorado; a water-diversion case between Wisconsin and Illinois; a water-diversion case between New Jersey and New York; a water-rights case between Nebraska and Wyoming; and a boundary case between Kansas and Missouri.

Mr. FERGUSON. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DONNELL. May I take this opportunity to——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Michigan has expired.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the majority leader assign 15 more minutes to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I should like to make this observation. A little while ago I read from the report of the committee in the section of mineral oil of the American Bar Association, in which reference was made to a suit filed in Los Angeles. I read two or three sentences more:

> Only recently (October 19) the Department of Justice announced the withdrawal of its suit in the district court at Los Angeles and the filing of a new suit for the same purpose in the United States Supreme Court. The Supreme Court's original jurisdiction was invoked—

Said this committee report—

> by naming the State of California as a party defendant. This change of procedure was adopted, according to Attorney General Clark, to secure for all interests concerned the advantage of a prompt decision on the question involved.

Does not that language have significance on the question as to the length of time that will be involved in the litigation?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I regret that other duties have kept me from following this very interesting and important debate. I am wondering if it is the distinguished Senator's position that the courts should decide questions affecting the property and territories of the United States.

Mr. FERGUSON. I would say that under these circumstances the court should determine the ownership. I imagine the Senator has in mind boundary line questions, questions of title to land taken in the course of war with another nation. Those are political questions. But the real question as to our ownership is finally settled by the Supreme Court.

Mr. MILLIKIN. What I have in mind is the express provision of article IV of the Constitution which puts the control and the power of disposition of public properties and territories in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, when I first started my discussion today I stated that the Congress has the absolute power to dispose of all the property belonging to the United States.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry at that point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield first to the Senator from Colorado, who has not quite completed his questioning.

Mr. MILLIKIN. As I came in I thought I heard the Senator say that in view of the circumstances the Supreme Court should be allowed to decide this question. It seemed to me, without having had the opportunity to go into it very deeply, that when the Constitution puts such a responsibility on us we should make the decision.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. FERGUSON. I will in a moment, but I want to answer the question asked by the Senator from Colorado by saying that I think so far as the question of the title is concerned, the Supreme Court should be given the opportunity to determine who is the owner; whether it is a State or whether it is the Federal Government or whether it is an individual. But as to the question of transfer, naturally, no one under the Constitution has the power except Congress, and therefore Congress alone has the power to transfer. But as to the right of ownership, the courts should determine that, because I believe they are in a much better position to determine the legal problems of ownership than is the Congress of the United States.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes, gladly.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I do not for a moment deny that the court has the power to litigate questions in the matter. I was directing my question to the primary responsibility—as to whether we should evade our primary responsibility and pass such questions to the courts, or whether we should act upon them ourselves, at least in the first instance.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I should first like to answer the question asked by the Senator from Colorado. I believe we should not shirk our responsibility. I believe we should be ready and willing at all times to assume the responsibility devolving upon us; but in this particular case, where there is doubt as to the ownership, we should reserve our action until we know definitely who is the owner. Then we can come into the Senate and vote definitely on the transfer. I am not now raising the question and have not raised the question of the wisdom of giving California this oil. First, I want to raise the question: Who owns it? And then if we find that the United States Government owns it, we should determine the question whether it is better that we give it to California or to reserve it to the United States Government.

I now yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, the question was asked of the Senator from Michigan as to whether we should evade our responsibility, and as I understood, section 3 of article IV of the Constitution, was cited by the distinguished Senator from Colorado. As I see it, Mr. President, that section not even remotely casts the responsibility upon Congress to determine questions of title. The language to which the Senator refers, I take it, is this:

> The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States, or of any particular State.

I call attention to two facts: First, that, as the Senator from Michigan has indicated, this constitutional provision is a power of disposition; and, in the second place, the very fact that the sentence itself says, that "nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of any particular State" indicates very clearly that Congress does not have the power, and certainly not the responsibility and duty, of reaching out and determining as against the State, whether the Congress or the State has ownership.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I am glad to yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Of course the power to dispose of property implies and carries with it the power to quitclaim or release a claim of ownership.

Mr. FERGUSON. That is true.

Mr. MILLIKIN. And so by the same token that we can dispose of the property, we also can exercise our right of quitclaim if we do not think we own the property.

Mr. FERGUSON. There is no doubt about the fact that that is the law.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. Is it not entirely different from the proposition, however, that there is a responsibility on Congress to determine who owns? It is true we have a right to quitclaim, but so far as I know, there is no responsibility in the Constitution or elsewhere devolved upon Congress to determine whether it owns or does not own a particular piece of property.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I suggest that that is precisely the issue now before the Senate, that before we authorize a quitclaim we will as a condition precedent to that determine by our action here that we do not own the property.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I think that would be true. I would say that the average Senator who would vote for this measure would do so because he had come to the conclusion that the United States Government did not own this property. I do not see how any Senator could vote for the measure if he believed that the Government of the United States was the sole owner of the soil in question. My humble judgment is that a Senator who believed that the United States was the sole owner would vote as I would vote, to retain it in the United States. But that is the question which is before us: Does the United States Government own the property?

Mr. President, I read from a volume entitled "Digest of International Law," by Green Haywood Hackworth. Mr. Hackworth is now a member of the World Court. I read the following on page 654:

> The preparatory committee for the Hague Conference for the Codification of International Law requested information from the respective governments with regard to the application of the rights of the coastal state to the air above and the sea bottom and subsoil covered by its territorial waters. On March 16, 1929, the United States replied:
> "By section 6 of the Air Commerce Act of March 20, 1926, Congress declared that the Government of the United States possessed to the exclusion of all other nations complete sovereignty of the air space over the lands and waters of the United States, including the Canal Zone (44 Stat., 568, 572).
> "The section of the act cited finds support in the convention relating to international air navigation signed by certain powers on October 13, 1919, in which it was recognized that every State has complete and exclusive sovereignty above its territory and territorial waters (II L. N. T. S., 173).
> "Court decisions.
> "The sea bottom and subsoil covered by the territorial waters, including fish and minerals, are the property of the United States or of the individual States where they border (Smith v. Maryland (18 How. 71, 74); McCready v. Virginia (94 U. S. 391); Manchester v. Massachusetts (139 U. S. 240, 259); Louisiana v. Mississippi (202 U. S. 1, 52); Messenger v. Kingsbury (158 Calif. 611, 112 Pac. 65, 66).)

That, Mr. President, would indicate that there is a conflict of ownership.

This is what the United States Attorney General said on his application to the Supreme Court to allow the United States to file an original proceeding against the State of California. I read from page 3:

> The rights of the United States in lands under the marginal sea are based on substantial grounds, and have never been adjudicated by this Court. The issue is entirely novel, for this case is sharply to be distinguished from those decisions which are thought to hold that the State has proprietary interests in bays, harbors, rivers, and other inland waters as well as the so-called tidelands (The Borax, Ltd. v. Los Angeles (296 U. S. 10, 15)). The crucial consideration underlying those decisions is significantly absent here.

It is upon that basis, Mr. President, that I believe, as a representative of the State of Michigan, that we in Congress should wait and not pass this legislation until the Supreme Court of the United States decides the specific instant case before it, which deals with the ownership of the 3-mile marginal sea off the coast of California. It has nothing to do with the Great Lakes. It has nothing to do with the navigable streams in Michigan. It has nothing to do with what the ownership of the Thirteen Original States might be, or what the ownership of Texas might be. It will solve one problem. It will solve the question of the ownership of the lands off the coast of California which were acquired by purchase from Mexico. The whole question involved—and I find no citation of law on it—is: What did we purchase from Mexico? I assume we purchased all the sea or all sovereignty over the sea. I want to know what rights we gave to California. In my judgment the only legally constituted body that can decide this question is not the Congress of the United States, but the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I am glad to yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I wonder if the Senator can inform me as to whether or not the State of Michigan claims jurisdiction, and claims that the lakes which border on Michigan, out to the international boundary, are a part of the State of Michigan.

Mr. FERGUSON. We claim certain rights. Under the criminal law we claim concurrent jurisdiction with the United States. We claim certain rights for fishing. At present the State of Michigan does not require a local license to fish in the Great Lakes. That right is enjoyed by the public generally, without the necessity for obtaining a license. As to the boundary line between Canada and Michigan, while it varies at certain places, ordinarily it is the center of the lake or the river, as the case may be. We have claimed all rights to that land and everything under it. The United States Government has never made any claim to that land; nor does it do so in the original suit before the Supreme Court.

Mr. KNOWLAND. That is just the point. During the entire period of Michigan's statehood the Federal Government has never claimed the land which the Senator rightfully states is considered a part of the State of Michigan; and until a few years ago the Federal Government had never claimed the land which the State of California believes—just as sincerely, and I believe on just as sound legal ground—is a part of the State of California. But I say to my distinguished colleague from Michigan that should there be an adverse decision in this regard it would open up a precedent whereby the jurisdiction of the State of Michigan over the Great Lakes area would be in jeopardy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Michigan has expired.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon desire to speak in favor of the joint resolution or against it?

Mr. CORDON. The Senator from Oregon will use time allotted by the distinguished Senator from Nevada, in favor of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon is recognized.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, it is to be regretted that this question should be before Congress in connection with the oil under land off the coast of California. That represents the occasion for the litigation which is now pending. However, that situation does not exist, so far as is known, in the remaining coastal area of the United States. We cannot say as an affirmative proposition that there is no oil there. However, we can say that no oil is known to exist there.

In connection with what I take to be the zeal of officials of the United States in protecting whatever interest they feel might possibly be in the United States in the oil underlying the coastal waters of the State of California, they initiated the present proceeding, which is an original proceeding, in the United States Supreme Court.

I shall discuss only slightly the legal aspects of this matter. They have been gone into most exhaustively. Voluminous extracts have been read to the Senate from the several opinions, and I feel that no good purpose would be served by a further discussion of the technical legal aspects of the case.

Of all the States in the United States, I believe that my own State of Oregon is as little interested in this litigation as any. Many years ago the Supreme Court of the United States had occasion to pass upon the question of where the title lay to the lands under the navigable waters within the legally established boundaries of the State of Oregon. That decision has been exhaustively quoted here during this debate. The decision was rendered in the case of Shively against Bowlby. After a most exhaustive study of this whole problem I cannot but believe that that case is determinative of the title of the State of Oregon to all lands beneath navigable waters within the boundaries of the State as the Congress of the United States fixed those boundaries when the State was admitted into the Union. The courts have not distinguished between navigable waters within an indentation of the coast and navigable waters which happen to lap an area of the coast which does not have an indentation. I am unable to furnish the distinction, and I am satisfied that none exists.

I wish to discuss the legal aspects of the case on just two points. Some discussion has been had here with reference to the provision which appears in several acts admitting the so-called land States into the Union, the irrevocable covenants which accompanied or preceded those acts of admission, and so forth, wherein there is a covenant on the part of the State not to interfere with the primary disposition of the lands of the United States within the borders of such State, and reserving such lands and title thereto to the United States.

Those provisions occur in all the covenants, all the acts of admission of all the States which came into the United States after the Nation was established, beginning, I believe, with the State of Michigan, although I am not certain as to that.

Mr. President, it is so generally known, and it has been established so many times by the courts that it would seem to be unduly trespassing on the time of the Senate to call attention to the fact that the lands so referred to are lands above high-water mark in navigable waters within the States. The cases which refer to that question are legion. There are many which specifically so hold. The title to land under navigable waters is something altogether different. As the distinguished Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] has pointed out, there are more than 50 decisions in point on the proposition that title to the land under navigable waters, fresh and salt, navigable waters where there is a tide, and where there is not, resides in the State after its admission to the Union.

That, Mr. President, is in my opinion somewhat beside the point, except only to this extent: Over the years that has been the law of this land, the so-called court-made law. That doctrine has been adopted and followed by the United States Government, by the States which face upon the seas, and by those containing navigable waters other than the two oceans and the Gulf of Mexico, and by court authorities and other subdivisions of Government dealing with shipping or the use of waters in various ways. Over a long period of time a custom has grown up in this country. I can see no reason which can be advanced why the Congress should not approach this question as the Congress and the legislatures of the States have approached like questions throughout our history.

It has long been deemed to the best interests of all the people to confirm titles which have been held, whether legally or by actual occupancy of the property for many years. As a result, we have the doctrine of prescription or adverse possession. We have statutes of limitation, statutes which may be justified only on the ground that the peace and quiet and best interests of the people are served if we do not create dissension, even though we would do it by a prescribed form of litigation. There are statutes of limitation in every State. There are some statutes of limitation by which the United States has limited itself. Generally speaking, of course, statutes of limitation do not operate against the sovereign. But time after time the sovereign has voluntarily either subjected itself to specific limitations or has done the same thing indirectly by a proceeding such as the one in which we are now engaged—by releasing any claim it has or by foregoing any immunity it might have. Mr. President, that is what is being done in the instant matter.

Question has been raised and the assertion has been made here a number of times that there is and must be some very real doubt in the minds of those who favor the joint resolution, or else they would not be supporting it. The thought is advanced that there must be some grave doubt as to whether the ownership in the land under the water off the shore of California extends out to the 3-mile limit. That assertion has been made many times. Mr. President, let us be wholly frank about the matter—although I do not mean to intimate that anyone here has been less than frank. As long as there is a case in a court, with issues presented, there can be some question as to what decision will be rendered. I do not go quite to the extent of those who say that every lawsuit is a horse race, although sometimes I am inclined to that belief. But I realize, as must everyone who has had experience in the law, that some chance is always involved in any case presented. Even though the possibility be most remote, most ephemeral, even though it be nebulous in the extreme, it still is existent. It is existent in the present case. We must not forget that under our system of government the judicial department of Government is not bound by any law passed by any Congress, insofar as its own actions within its constitutional field are concerned. The judicial branch is bound by no restraint except that which is self-imposed. It may make a decision today and it may reverse that decision tomorrow, without let or hindrance insofar as the law is concerned or insofar as any law which the legislature passes is concerned. That power is inherent in the court, because the court is set up as one of the three equal departments of our Government, in respect to the division of powers.

Mr. President, let me say that it is to the everlasting glory of the Bench of the United States that it has adopted its own restraints and has been bound by those restraints, with the result that in this country we have developed a body of court-made law which has been a tower of strength to the American people and their Government. I do not for a moment suggest that the Supreme Court of the United States is going to divest itself of those restraints. I simply say it can be done.

But, Mr. President, in this case, or in any case, the Court must of necessity give full consideration to the issues which are presented. Judges on the bench are, nevertheless, men. They bring to the Bench their political philosophy and their judicial philosophy. As a result, we have seen the philosophy of the law, as it has been enunciated, changed from time to time during the history of our country. I am not critical of that. The elasticity that is so permitted is, I believe, to the ultimate good of the Nation.

I advert to these things, Mr. President, only because they all go to the proposition that today no one can say that there is no possibility that an adverse decision may be rendered in the pending case. I cannot help but believe that the rules of stare decisis or res judicata are going to be applied by the Court. I have no doubt as to what the decision will be. But, Mr. President, the decision must be made by the Court, not by me.

So long as there is any possibility of any change in the established order of things with reference to the land under the navigable waters of the United States, there is a basis and there is a justification and there is a reason for the taking of action by the legislative branch of the Government to determine the matter legislatively, if the legislative branch feels that the matter involved is of sufficient consequence or if it feels that there are compelling reasons why it should intervene legislatively. In my opinion, Mr. President, such reasons exist in the instant matter.

The case in California has to do with certain lands below the low-water mark in the Pacific Ocean. It has been said by the Attorney General that there is no thought, in connection with this problem, of going into bays or into any other navigable waters. However, Mr. President, I am reliably informed that in 1940 the United States Government commenced a suit to determine title to Treasure Island, a man-made island well inside San Francisco Bay, and that it commenced a suit to determine the title to Terminal Island, another man-made island, made out of reclaimed tidelands in the port waters of Los Angeles. Neither of those tracts represents land off the coast, in the main ocean water. In the nature of things, if the officers of the United States Government who are charged with that duty have any doubt in their minds with reference to that title, they should try to determine it. I am not critical of their doing so. I merely wish to call attention to the fact that the suits have been filed and that the problem is not limited to the main ocean below the low-water mark along the coast of California. I point out these things because when principles are established with reference to a given set or state of facts they are applied to all those coming within that category, and we who practice the law know that to be so.

If there were to be established in this matter principles of law which directly affected or which, incidentally, left unsettled the title to any of the lands in any of the bays or in any of the navigable rivers, then chaos indeed would be upon us.

Mr. President, I cannot but believe that the best interests of all the people of the United States will be served if this joint resolution is passed and if the old and established and settled order of things in our coastal States and in all States containing navigable waters remains in status quo.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART].

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, let me inquire how the time stands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky has 22 minutes remaining for a discussion of his side of the question.

Mr. BARKLEY. How much has the other side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Approximately 50 minutes remains in the control of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have an amendment to propose. I inquire whether it is in order to offer an amendment to lie on the table so that it may be voted on at 3 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair is of the opinion that, if an amendment were presented prior to 3 o'clock, it would be in the spirit of the unanimous consent agreement, to vote on it prior to the action of the Senate on the joint resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have an amendment which I wish to propose. I will read it and send it to the desk. On page 3, at the end of line 22, substitute a semicolon for the period, and insert:

but neither the phrase "lands beneath tidewaters" nor the phrase "lands beneath navigable waters" shall include any lands covered by coastal waters below the line of mean low tide in 1776 or when the State was admitted, as the case may be, and not within a bay or harbor, except to the extent that the United States Supreme Court shall decide that such lands are owned by the several States.

I may say, Mr. President, that I shall now consume a part of my time and perhaps all of it.

The proponents of the House Joint Resolution 225 are concerned mainly about a supposed cloud on the title of the several States to the lands beneath navigable waters, lakes, and harbors, and to the land on the coast between mean high and mean low tide.

The decisions of the courts abundantly establish the ownership of these lands by the several States. The Federal Government makes no claim to them and both the Department of Justice and the Department of the Interor have specifically so stated. If, despite these assurances, the States would like any conceivable cloud on their title to such lands removed by an act of Congress in the nature of a quitclaim deed, there is no objection to that. The proposed amendment would not affect these lands one way or the other. However, House Joint Resolution 225 also proposes to quitclam to the several States the submerged lands below low tide on the open coast, and those under the marginal sea, as to which the situation is entirely different. The question as to the title to such lands has never been decided. That very question is now before the Supreme Court of the United States in an original suit brought by the United States against the State of California. The Court has ordered the case set down for argument and it is expected to be argued and decided this coming fall.

On the eve of the argument and a decision, there is no justification, and it is hardly in the public interest, for Congress to resolve the issue of law adversely to the Federal Government, which this proposed joint resolution seeks to do. In considering that under our system of government we traditionally allow the courts to decide such issues, such action would, in my judgment, be of questionable propriety. The fact that these lands are extremely valuable and contain vast quantities of oil makes it all the more imperative that we act with more than ordinary prudence in determining this matter.

For these reasons, the proposed amendment which I have just sent to the desk would prevent the quitclaiming of the lands below low tide on the open coast, provided, however, that if and when the Supreme Court should decide that they are owned by the several States, the lands would be quitclaimed to the States. The latter provision would avoid any future uncertainty of title based on the possibility that the Supreme Court might at some later time overrule such a decision.

Mr. President, the other day I spoke briefly when the motion to consider the joint resolution was before the Senate. I do not care to reiterate the reasons which I then believed were sufficient to justify the Senate in rejecting the joint resolution, and certainly sufficient to impel me to vote against it.

I wish to discuss for only a moment the question of whether the States, as individuals, had any title to this 3-mile limit which has been discussed. As I have indicated, and I believe it is generally agreed, there are three types of land involved; not in this controversy, but there are three types of land involved along the coast. One type is what is called tidelands where the tide ebbs and flows. It comes up and goes back. That type of land along the coast, which is overrun by the tide, is not involved in any way. The Government of the United States has never laid claim to it, and does not lay claim to it in the suit which has been brought in the Supreme Court.

There is another strip of land beginning at the low tide and extending out into the ocean for three nautical miles, which is in dispute in the lawsuit now pending. It is that 3-mile strip which is involved in the controversy.

Furthermore, the Government of the United States lays no claim to the ownership of the bed of navigable streams within the borders of States, or forming borders between States.

Beyond the 3-mile limit is what is called the Continental Shelf, which is covered by an amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming a few days ago and adopted by the Senate.

It has been claimed by the proponents of the pending legislation that it would not apply specifically to California because California was not one of the Thirteen Original Colonies, and the theory on which the legislation is based is that there was a time in the history of the Colonies when the title to the 3-mile stretch of land was in the individaul Colony or State. That contention cannot be sustained. When the Colonies declared themselves to be independent, they did not do so as individual States. They declared their independence as the United Colonies of America. They acted in their united capacity. When the Declaration of Independence was adopted it was adopted in the name of the Colonies united. When the treaty with England was made in 1783 it was made between Great Britain and the United States of America acting as a whole and not acting as separate States. So, from the standpoint of sovereignty, which may have been transferred from the Crown as a result of the Revolutionary War, that sovereignty was never transferred from the Crown to any single individual State. It was transferred to the United States as a whole, and not to any individual State. Therefore title or sovereignty over this particular strip of water, or the lands under the water, was never in the States as individual States, but only in the Nation as a nation.

Mr. President, I wish to invite attention to a decision of the Supreme Court. There are many decisions. I do not have time to refer to all of them, but I wish especially to call attention to the case of U. S. v. Curtiss-Wright Corporation, reported in 299 United States Reports, at page 304. The opinion in that case points out that by "the Declaration of Independence the Representatives of the United States of America declared the United—not the several—Colonies to be free and independent States."

Quoting again:

The powers of external sovereignty passed from the Crown not to the Colonies severally, but to the Colonies in their collective and corporate capacity as the United States of America. Even before the Declaration, the Colonies were a unit in foreign affairs, acting through a common agency.

Quoting still further:

When, therefore, the external sovereignty of Great Britain in respe ' of the Colonies ceased, it immediately passed to the Union.

Then quoting again:

The Union * * * was the sole possessor of external sovereignty. * * * The States were not "sovereigns" in the sense contended for by some.

There is this final quotation, which refutes the contention of the States that the Federal Government did not acquire ownership of the marginal sea because the States did not expressly grant it by the Constitution. Quoting again from the decision—

It results that the investment of the Federal Government with the powers of external sovereignty did not depend upon the affirmative grants of the Constitution.

It was an inherent quality enjoyed by the Federal Government before the Constitution was adopted.

If anything, there, is beyond doubt in this controversy, it is that the princial basis for the creation and the continued recognition of the marginal sea belt theory is the security and defense of the national sovereignty. An examination of any work on international law, or of the writings of any publicist, will clearly demonstrate the correctness of this statement, and I shall not further develop the idea. I have not the time to do it, and I do not think it is necessary.

Since the development and acceptance of the concept of the marginal sea, meaning the 3-mile strip which is in controversy, it has been continuously identified with the external powers and national interests of the United States.

This is evidenced by the numerous instances in which the Executive branch of the Federal Government, in conducting our external affairs, has had occasion to reconsider the status of the marginal sea, particularly its extent, in relation to questions which have arisen between the United States and foreign nations. That such instances will continue to occur seems certain, especially since, notwithstanding the concern of the United States to maintain the principle of the freedom of the seas, there exist strong reasons for extending our territorial jurisdiction beyond the present 3-mile limit.

The marginal sea having been created, therefore, and continued in the field of international affairs for the reasons stated, it would seem only natural that title to the underlying lands should be in the Nation, recognized by other nations, rather than in the political units making up the sovereign States.

Not only are the powers of our Federal Government supreme in the field of international security and defense, but they are also supreme in the field of international relations, foreign commerce, immigration, and import duties and customs. The only powers which the individual States of our Union may exercise in the marginal sea area are those of a local or municipal character, as distinguished from powers in the field of international affairs. The right of a State to exercise police powers for local regulation over the waters of the three-mile strip does not convey to it any title to the lands beneath these waters. It would seem, therefore, that title to the marginal sea lands would more appropriately follow as an attribute of sovereignty of the Nation rather than as an attribute of sovereignty of the States for local police regulation.

It has been strenuously asserted and urged by the States that the issue of ownership has been determined by the Supreme Court of the United States a great many times. It is the position of the Government of the United States in the litigation now pending in the Supreme Court that the Supreme Court has never decided the question of title to the lands which lie beneath the waters in this three-mile strip.

Practically all the cases cited by the proponents of the joint resolution involve matters of regulation of inland waterways, harbors, bays, and rivers not involved in the three-mile strip of water which is the subject of the controversy now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States

Mr. President, I am firmly convinced, and the Government of the United States which instituted this lawsuit is firmly convinced, that the question of ownership of the lands under the marginal sea, which is only another name for the three-mile area, has never been determined by the Supreme Court of the United States. It was for the purpose of determining that legal question that this litigation was instituted by the Department of Justice. I recall again to the attention of the Senate the fact that in 1937 the Senate passed a joint resolution directing the Department of Justice to bring such a lawsuit, it went to the House of Representatives and was reported by a committee, but for reasons which it is not necessary to discuss, it failed in the House.

In 1939 the Senate again considered a similar joint resolution instructing the institution of litigation by the Department of Justice to settle the question of ownership of the lands, and of course what is under the lands. That joint resolution was not enacted.

I mention that to show, Mr. President, that the lawsuit brought by the Department of Justice by direction of the President was not a whimsical thing whipped up within the last few months. The Senate of the United States 9 years ago thought seriously enough of the matter to pass a joint resolution instructing that such a lawsuit be brought.

The war came on, and of course interfered with practically everything except the war itself, and the present litigation was not instituted until October 1945. Suit had been brought in the District Court of California in May 1945, but when the Attorney General instituted this litigation in the Supreme Court directly, which he had a right to do, the suit in the district court in California was dismissed.

Mr. President, here is a legal question, here is a question properly to be decided by the courts: Who owns this land? And here we are now asked to strip the Supreme Court of jurisdiction to pass on that question, by the passage of the pending joint resolution, giving a quitclaim title to this land and all that lies under it, I suppose in fear that the Supreme Court might decide that it belonged to the people of the United States.

I am unwilling, Mr. President, to do in this case what I was unwilling should be done in a matter of involving the question of insurance, namely, decide in Congress whether it was interstate commerce. I have always believed it was. When I first came to Congress, in 1913, I urged the Attorney General of the United States, then Mr. McReynolds, to take some steps to relieve the people of my own State of a combination which had grown up in the insurance field. He advised me that the Supreme Court had held that insurance was not interstate commerce. I did not believe that that decision was sound. Of course, I had no way of avoiding the decision, but I did not believe the Supreme Court had acted on a sound basis when it held that insurance was not interstate commerce.

A lawsuit was instituted a year or two ago in the Supreme Court to determine whether insurance was in interstate commerce, and a joint resolution was introduced in Congress which proposed to declare that insurance was not interstate commerce, for the purpose of robbing the Supreme Court of its jurisdiction to pass upon that question. I was against that joint resolution.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. AIKEN in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BARKLEY. I have but a few minutes.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I wish merely to ask a question.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Was that joint resolution to which the Senator has just referred introduced after the Supreme Court suit had been filed, or before?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not certain.

Mr. KNOWLAND. In the California case the joint resolutions were introduced prior to any suit being filed in the Supreme Court.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that; but the Senate undertook to have litigation instituted long before this joint resolution or any similar joint resolution was introduced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Nevada yields me 10 minutes more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada yields the Senator from Kentucky 10 minutes more.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not willing in this case, or in any similar case, where a legal question is involved, to take the right of determination of that legal question away from the courts, and make the Congress of the United States a court to pass upon problems of that sort which are strictly legal.

There is another reason, Mr. President, why I am against this joint resolution. Congress is given the authority not only to regulate commerce but to provide for the common defense. In modern warfare, oil, petroleum, is one of the essential and indispensable means of defense. I do not know whether there will be another war in which the United States may become involved. I hope there never will be one. I look forward with hope to the time when the world will so organize itself for peace and for the preservation of peace, that war may not again come to curse mankind. But we cannot be certain of that, and if we should ever again become involved in war, the supply of oil may determine the question of our victory or our defeat.

Even before the recent war ended, we were negotiating for and cruising around all over the world to get our share of oil reserves. We even authorized the construction of a $135,000,000 pipe line in Arabia in order to transport oil from Arabia and Saudi Arabia and neighboring regions to the Mediterranean Sea for the benefit of our Navy and Army and for all our arms. We are now engaging in international negotiations in order that we may have our share of that oil, not only in the Near East but in the Caribbean Sea also. Our Army and our Navy and our State Department, looking ahead for a quarter of a century, it may be for a half a century, or for any particular length of time, are undertaking to garner to ourselves enough oil wherever it may be found to guarantee our defense in any future war. Yet, in spite of that fact, we are asked in this joint resolution to give away hundreds of millions of barrels of oil lying just off the shores of the United States, in order that it may be obtained by private oil companies who are anxious to get control of that oil in order that it may be exploited and its supplies diminished.

Mr. President, I have no enmity toward any oil company on earth. I tried unsuccessfully a few years ago to make a little money out of oil myself, but it was a total and dismal failure. It was a very modest little investment in some oil lands in Kentucky which did not turn out so well. I did not have the same luck in Kentucky that some of my friends here have had in other States. I have no prejudice against the oil industry nor against any oil company. But when I am compelled to decide between the conservation of oil that may belong to the United States Government on the one hand and its exploitation and its use by any private oil company or even by any State that may permit a corporation or an oil concern to exploit it, I am compelled to make my decision in behalf of the people of the United States as a whole.

For that reason, Mr. President, I cannot support the joint resolution. I hope it will not be passed by the Senate. I want to go further than that and express the hope that if it is adopted by the Senate and the House and sent to the President of the United States, it will be promptly vetoed by him in the interests of national defense, in the interests of our entire people, looking toward the coming of a day when we may be in desperate need of the very oil which is supposed to lie under the land involved in this 3-mile-limit controversy.

Mr. STANFILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. STANFILL. Referring to lines 6 and 7 on page 2 of the joint resolution, I ask my distinguished colleague to tell me what claim the Government of the United States has ever asserted to the lands beneath the navigable waters within the boundaries of the respective States, and why that language is included in the measure?

Mr. BARKLEY. I cannot say why it is included in the measure. The joint resolution was introduced in the House. Perhaps my colleague was not present when I spoke of it. I stated that the Government of the United States has never asserted any claim and does not now assert any claim to the lands beneath the navigable waters of the United States or the bays or harbors.

Mr. STANFILL. That was the question I wanted to clear up in my own mind. That question is not now in litigation, is it?

Mr. BARKLEY. That question is not in litigation at all.

Mr. STANFILL. The Government has never claimed those lands, has it?

Mr. BARKLEY. The Government has never claimed those lands. All the Government of the United States now claims in the litigation which is now pending in the Supreme Court is the title to the land beneath the 3-mile limit at low tide in the ocean bounding the coastal States of the United States.

Mr. STANFILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. STANFILL. My colleague will appreciate this question. The northern boundary of the State of Kentucky, the State which he and I represent in the Senate, is the low-water mark, as I understand it, on the north bank of the Ohio River.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true.

Mr. STANFILL. Has the Government of the United States ever claimed or does it now claim or will it ever claim, so far as the Senator knows, any title to the lands beneath those waters?

Mr. BARKLEY. Absolutely not. The reason for that is that Kentucky was the first State carved out of the vast territory west of the Allegheny Mountains, and when the boundaries of Kentucky were fixed they were fixed on the north at low-water mark on the north side of the Ohio River, so that Kentucky has, for police purposes, jurisdiction of the entire Ohio River from low-water mark on the other side. The Government of the United States has jurisdiction over the regulation of that river for commercial purposes. The same is true of the Mississippi River on the west. The Kentucky boundary goes across the Mississippi River to low-water mark on the Missouri side, because Missouri had not been created as a State at that time, neither had Ohio or Indiana or Illinois, and Kentucky simply took jurisdiction of both those rivers to low-water mark on the other side. There has never been any question about it, and the Federal Government has never asserted any title to the land lying beneath the waters of those rivers. I might say that the Department of Justice and the Department of the Interior have both made it clear in all the statements they have made, that the Government has never claimed any title to those lands and does not now claim it, and so far as anyone can foresee will not in the future assert any claim to the land beneath such waters.

Mr. STANFILL. And if oil should be found beneath the waters of the Ohio River or the Mississippi River where they border on the State of Kentucky, that land is within the jurisdiction of the State of Kentucky, is it not?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true.

Mr. STANFILL. And not within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government, although the Federal Government does have the right of control of the traffic on the rivers?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct.

Mr. STANFILL. That is the point I wanted to have cleared up.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is absolutely correct about that. There is no disagreement anywhere on that subject.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The additional time of the Senator from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I will yield time to the Senator from Kentucky to answer the question which I presume the Senator from California is about to ask him.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Nevada yields to me to try to answer.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Kentucky on that point, and answering his distinguished colleague from the same State, it was not until the suits were filed in the Supreme Court and in the district court of California that any claim had ever been made of the lands lying off the coasts of the coastal States. Therefore the fact that up to this date no Secretary of the Interior has claimed jurisdiction over the navigable waters is no more guaranty to the State of Kentucky that some future Secretary of the Interior will not attempt to seize those lands than was our assurance that they would not be seized up to the time Secretary Ickes attempted to take jurisdiction.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in regard to that I will say that while the Federal Government in no lawsuit ever asserted claim to these marginal lands, they were discussed in numerous decisions, and if I had the time I should like to read from a decision of Justice Field of the Supreme Court, who was himself from California, in regard to the Federal jurisdiction over these marginal lands, although it was not an issue in the litigation that was being decided by the Supreme Court. So while heretofore there has been no claim by any litigation to the marginal lands, they have been discussed in numerous decisions, and in all cases I have been able to find the position of the court revolved around the title to lands under navigable rivers within States or even bays or harbors within States that were not a part of the 3-mile limit about which we are talking.

Mr. President, I hope the joint resolution will not be passed.

Mr. McCARRAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Gurney	Overton

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUFFMAN in the chair). Seventy-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I invite the attention of the Senate to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART]. I regret that he is not present. On page 3 of the joint resolution he proposes to strike out the words beginning in line 14, "such boundary line extends oceanward beyond three geographical miles" and insert "at the time of the admission of such State into the Union, such boundary line extended oceanward beyond three geographical miles, giving due recognition to any changes in such coast line since occasioned by reason of fill-in or natural accretion."

It seems to be the purpose of the amendment of the Senator from Indiana to limit the right of the State to the so-called boundary line at the time the State was admitted into the Union. I understand that it is directed particularly at the State of Texas. If that be its purpose, it is certainly very unfair, because Texas was an independent republic for 9 years. It was not dependent on the United States. It was not dependent on any foreign nation. It achieved its own independence through the blood of its own soldiers and through the sacrifices of its people. As a republic it was endowed with all the rights which either a state or a nation could possess in the shelf or the offshore tidewater lands, wherever such rights extended. If they extended to the middle of the Atlantic Ocean, the land belonged to the State of Texas.

When Texas was admitted to the Union in 1845 the joint resolution or enabling act, expressly recognized those rights, and Texas reserved unto itself all rights in all public lands, so that whatever right there is at the moment belongs to the State of Texas. So the Federal Government, according to my view, would have no legal power to legislate that title away from us. But we do not want it clouded. We do not want doubt cast upon it. We do not want an act of Congress which would seem to assert title to lands beyond the boundaries of the State of Texas or the Republic of Texas.

If Senators will consult the report in this case, and particularly the opinion by Dr. Edwin Borchard, Dean of the School of International Law at Yale University, beginning on page 10 of the committee report, it will there be shown that under international law the State owns the lands as far as it undertakes to appropriate them, and insofar as it can make use of them. Professor Borchard says:

> Assuming then that we have established that as a matter of international law, the littoral state may properly claim in ownership or jurisdiction the natural resources of the subsoil in the continental shelf beyond the marginal zone, whatever its width, and even assuming that the United States would not exercise its privilege of claiming more than 3 miles of marginal sea, the question still remains whether in American constitutional law the State or the Nation can legally make this assertion.
> Practice and practical consideration must be the determining guides. As Columbia Law Review states, it is now settled that the marginal sea is an integral part of the neighboring State and its counties like any other Territory, subject to the right of innocent passage and the rights over commerce and navigation exercised or reserved by the Federal Government. The Supreme Court has said that "within what are generally recognized as the Territorial limits of the State by the law of nations, a State may define its boundaries on the sea and the boundary of its counties."

Mr. President, I think it would be very unfair to single out the State of Texas and to seek to impair its title and its rights as would be done by the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana. I very much hope the Senate will reject the amendment. I was very hopeful that the Senator from Indiana, if present, could be prevailed upon to withdraw it.

Mr. President, I observe that the Senator from Indiana has just reentered the Chamber, and I should like to have his attention. Let me say to him that I have been addressing myself to the amendment he has offered. I had to do so in his absence because the time was allotted to me at this moment and I could not do otherwise. I was expressing the hope that the Senator from Indiana might not pursue his amendment, because it is palpably intended as a discrimination against my State, and I think it is a very unfair method of approach to pick out the State of Texas and aim one's sword at her very vitals. I do not mean that it is unfair on the part of the Senator from Indiana, of course.

Whatever Texas has, she earned back in 1836. When Texas came into the Union, and prior thereto, she was an independent republic. She owned her lands and territories, and she had her own army and her own navy, and she had her minister in Washington. So when Texas gave up her independence as a nation, she reserved all rights in her public lands, and that was recognized by the Federal Government in the joint resolution admitting Texas into the Union.

So how can there be any title in the United States, in respect to any of the lands contiguous to our State?

I also pointed out that under the committee report and under the opinion of Dr. Borchard, professor of international law at Yale University, it is clearly within the power of the State to extend its boundary out onto the continental shelf as far as it is able to do so, regardless of the 3-mile limit.

I hold in my hand the joint resolution by which Texas was admitted into the Union. It appears in United States Statutes at Large, vol. 5, page 798. In addition to other clauses of reservation, I find in it the following:

> And shall also retain all the vacant and unappropriated lands lying within its limits to be applied to the payment of the debts and liabilities of said republic of Texas, and the residue of said lands, after discharging said debts and liabilities, to be disposed of as said State may direct—

And so on. So, Mr. President, it is clear under that act of the Congress of the United States, the Congress recognized the right of Texas to retain all of its public and unappropriated lands, whatever and wherever they might be. So the Federal Government can have no title. It has foresworn title. Now, to have the United States, by act of Congress, assert title could only result in casting a cloud upon the existing title to our lands.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. CAPEHART. The amendment I offered in no way would take away any of the land or water or minerals which were within the boundaries of the State of Texas when it was admitted into the Union. The amendment recognies that the boundary affected extends 9 miles oceanward.

Mr. CONNALLY. Then what is the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. CAPEHART. The amendment prohibits the State of Texas from maintaining title to areas farther out than 9 miles.

Mr. CONNALLY. Under international law, Texas has a right to title to areas farther out than 9 miles.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, if the State of Texas has the right to title to areas beyond 9 miles out, then every other State does.

Mr. CONNALLY. The other States do.

Mr. CAPEHART. Every other State would then have a right to title to areas 100 miles or 200 miles out.

Mr. CONNALLY. All the States have a right to title to the land out on the continental shelf. They have no right to title to what lies beyond the continental shelf.

Mr. CAPEHART. Then Mr. President, the amendment the Senate agreed to the other day—I refer to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY]—is meaningless, because that amendment limits the distance to which any State can have its title go to 3 miles or to the distance which the State had title to when it was admitted to the Union. So we are running in circles.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the Senators are now speaking in the time which we had reserved to close the debate, and I regret that I must intervene.

Mr. CONNALLY. Very well. I thank the Senator very much, and I conclude my remarks at this point.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the argument has been made in support of Mr. Ickes' attempt to expropriate the tide and submerged lands from the States that there is no decision of the Supreme Court which deals specifically with lands along the open coast and below low-water mark. It is admitted that there are many cases upholding State ownership of tide and submerged lands, but it is claimed that all of these cases can be distinguished on the ground abovementioned.

There are at least three good answers to the above argument:

First. There are cases dealing with the open sea.

There are numerous cases in which the Supreme Court has held directly that all submerged lands within the States' boundaries belong to the States. A few of these are The Abby Dodge (223 U. S. 166). In this case the Court held that the State of Florida owned the beds of the marginal sea along the open coast out to the limit of the State's territorial jurisdiction. On this point the court said:

> The principle has long been settled in this court, that each State owns the beds of all tidewaters within its jurisdiction, unless they have been granted away. (Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan (3 How. 212); Smith v. Maryland, (18 How. 74); Munford v. Wardwell (6 Wall. 486); Weber v. Harbor Commissioners (18 id. 66).) In like manner the States own the tidewaters themselves, and the fish in them, so far as they are capable of ownership while running. For this purpose the State represents its people, and the ownership is that of the people in their united sovereignty (Martin v. Waddell (16 Pet. 410; p. 174)).

The term "tidewaters" in the above quotation is not restricted to the narrow strip between high and low tide, but is used to describe all the lands under the ocean out to the limit of the State's jurisdiction. Tidewaters, as used here, means any water affected by the tide. The court does not define what the territorial limit of the State of Florida is, but the facts in the case show that it was at least 3 miles off the coast in the open sea.

The case of Manchester v. Massachusetts (139 U. S. 240), also directly holds that the States have full jurisdiction and ownership of the lands along their seacoast at least to the extent of "a marine league from the coast on the open sea"—page 257.

The cases dealing with the Great Lakes are also direct authority for this proposition. That is because the Great Lakes have been specifically held to be, in contemplation of law, open seas. In many cases the Court has held that the Great Lakes have "all the characteristics of the open sea." The decisions as to the ownership of the beds of the Great Lakes along their open coasts is square authority on the question of the ownership of the Atlantic, the Pacific, and the Gulf of Mexico along the open coast. Indeed, in the Great Lakes cases the Court specifically holds that the same doctrine applies to all these waters, regardless of whether they are fresh or salt. The following quotation from the leading case of Illinois Central R. R. v. Illinois (146 U. S. 387), which deals with Lake Michigan, is conclusive on the point:

> It is the settled law of this country that the ownership of and dominion and sovereignty over lands covered by tidewaters, within the limits of the several States, belong to the respective States within which they are found, with the consequent right to use or dispose of any portion thereof, when that can be done without substantial impairment of the interest of the public in the waters, and subject always to the paramount right of Congress to control their navigation so far as may be necessary for the regulation of commerce with foreign nations and among the States. This doctrine has been often announced by this court (Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan (3 How. (44 U. S.) 212); Weber v. Harbor Commissioners (18 Wall. (85 U. S.) 57).)
> The same doctrine is in this country held to be applicable to lands covered by fresh water in the Great Lakes over which is conducted an extended commerce with different States and foreign nations. These lakes possess all the general characteristics of open seas, except in the freshness of their waters, and in the absence of the ebb and flow of the tide. In other respects they are inland seas, and there is no reason or principle for the assertion of dominion and sovereignty over and ownership by the State of lands covered by tidewaters that is not equally applicable to its ownership of and dominion and sovereignty over lands covered by the fresh waters of these lakes (p. 435).

The above decision was affirmed and followed by the Supreme Court in Massachusetts v. New York (271 U. S. 65), in a decision written by the late Chief Justice Stone.

Other cases in point as to the ownership along the open sea are: Port of Seattle v. Oregon R. R. Co. (255 U. S. 56), the decision written by Mr. Justice Brandeis; McCready v. Virginia (94 U. S. 391); Harden v. Jordan (140 U. S. 371); and many other cases.

Second. All departments of the United States have relied on the above decisions as establishing the rule of State ownership along the open coast.

As ably pointed out yesterday by the senior Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the best proof that there are Supreme Court decisions governing the ownership of the open sea within State boundaries is that the Government itself in all its departments for 100 years has construed the above cases as applying to the open sea. As the Senator from California pointed out, there are 27 decisions of the Department of the Interior between 1882 and 1938 which specifically hold that California is the owner of lands below low-water mark and out to the 3-mile limit. These decisions were based on the Supreme Court cases which the proponents of Government ownership now say are not in point.

The United States Congress, as well as all former Secretaries of the Interior and all former Attorneys General of the United States, has always held that these Supreme Court cases applied to the open coast below the low-water mark. The rule has become a rule of property upon which valuable titles are based and enormous investments made. A rule so long followed by so many departments and high officials of the Federal Government cannot now be lightly pushed aside on the flimsy ground that the cases are all distinguishable on some minute differences in the facts. The law of these cases has become a rule of property.

Third. All text writers and all authorities on international law are in agreement that the above-cited decisions establish the rule, not only as to inland waters and ports and harbors, but as to the open sea out to the State's legal boundary which, in practically all cases, is 3 miles.

The excerpt which the able Senator from Missouri read Saturday from Corpus Juris is but one of the many texts which could be cited in support of this rule. Two of the ablest authorities on international law in the world are on record before this very Congress in support of this proposition that these marginal sea lands belong to the States. These two authorities are Prof. Edwin Borchard, dean of the school of international law at Yale, and Manley O. Hudson, professor of international law at Harvard and also former judge of the Permanent Court of International Justice. Professor Borchard's opinion is attached as an exhibit to the Senate Judiciary Committee's report on this very bill. Judge Hudson's opinion is found in the report of the hearings of the Senate Judiciary Committee before which Judge Hudson testified. Both of these high authorities stated unequivocally that the rule of law was settled that lands along the open coast out to the 3-mile limit belonged absolutely to the States. There is absolutely no authority to the contrary.

We have this problem before us now, not because there is any real doubt as to what the Supreme Court has held, but because Mr. Ickes in his unprecedented attempt to centralize power and authority in his department has made claims which cloud titles of all submerged lands.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question.

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield for a question.

Mr. BARKLEY. I say there is no controversy so far as the tidelands are concerned—namely, the lands that are affected by the inflow and outflow of the tide.

Mr. McCARRAN. But the Senator places his own definition on that term, and it is not the definition which is understood by the courts in deciding the matter.

The fact is that the tidelands and the lands adjacent to them belonged, under the law, to the sovereign, before this country obtained its independence; and, belonging to the sovereign, the Colonies took, as Great Britain did, all the rights which the sovereign had; and when we became independent, the States took sovereignty to the lands surrounding them or abutting on them.

With regard to the argument made by the junior Senator from Nevada (Mr. CARVILLE)—a fallacy which has been repeated quite often in the Senate during the last few days, namely, that the decision of the Supreme Court will settle the question once and for all—let me say that that argument shows a complete lack of understanding of the problem. The truth is that there is only one way to settle the question permanently, and that is by act of Congress. The suit now pending in the Supreme Court will settle the issues raised on that suit, but it will not settle the problem before the Congress. If the decision should be favorable to California, nothing would stop future public officials who might have ambitions similar to those of Mr. Ickes, from continuing to agitate the same question. If the question could have been settled by the decision of the courts, it would have been settled long ago. Indeed, it would have been settled long before the present suit was instituted, for there are ample court decisions upholding State ownership. There is no reason to believe that public officials in the future will pay any more attention to another court decision than Mr. Ickes has paid to the previous court decisions. Smart bureaucratic lawyers will always find some way to distinguish previous court decisions, or, if not, they will boldly urge their reversal, regardless of the property interests at stake.

On the other hand, if the decision in the present case is favorable to the Government, the Government will be forced to proceed to attack the titles of all other coastal States, and probably of all inland States. It will have no other alternative. If the Court should, by any unexpected reversal of the basic principle, hold that the lands in issue in the California case belong to the Federal Government, the question will never be settled until there has been litigation which has determined the question in every State in the Union. Such litigation, so far as those of us now living are concerned, would be endless.

The idea that because the California case is set for argument some time next winter, there will be an early decision which will produce the final answers on this entire problem, is completely unrealistic. The argument in the California case, which is set for the next term of the Court, is not the end of the case, but is simply the beginning of the case. It is the first step in the procedure. In that argument, it will be determined whether, and to what extent, it will be necessary to take further evidence. How long it will take to complete even that one case no one can say; but it could easily take several years. Even then, as I have said, the titles of the lands covered by House Joint Resolution 225 will not be cleared, regardless of whichever way the decision should be. But Congress can clear these titles once and for all by passing this joint resolution, and that should be done at the earliest possible moment.

I believe that the junior Senator from Nevada also said that oil companies are interested in this matter. Apparently that is true, because Mr. Ickes never opened his mouth on the matter, never said a word on the subject, except to declare that these lands belonged to the respective States, until an oil company was formed to take over the oil in the lands abutting the State of California. That oil company has floated its stock all over the United States on bogus assets. Innocent men, women, and children purchased that stock on what, Mr. President? On a claim filed with Mr. Ickes which he, if he had done what he did in a former letter to another applicant for a right, would have said that those lands belonged to the State of California. But he did not do that. He allowed the stock to be peddled, as it has been peddled, all over the country, and to the detriment of those who spent their money in purchasing it, and to the disgrace, if you please, Mr. President, of those who sought to peddle it. Yes; there was an oil company involved.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I wish first to yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. TOBEY. In view of the fact that the Senator made the allegation that the oil companies are interested in this matter——

Mr. McCARRAN. I did not say so.

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator implied it. I wonder if he knows, or has any interest in the fact, that along the corridors and under the dome of this building came lobbyists, such as Kenney, March, and Pauley, seeking out and conferring with Members of Congress to get this legislation passed, and behind them were powerful oil interests in the West. It is a horrid picture.

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator has not propounded a question.

Mr. TOBEY. Did the Senator know of the fact which I have stated?

Mr. McCARRAN. I did not.

Mr. TOBEY. I am glad to give the Senator that information.

Mr. McCARRAN. I know a lobbyist when I see one, and I am sure that the Senator would know one also.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. Is it not a fact that prior to the formation of the oil company which the Senator has mentioned, other oil companies came to the Federal Government and to the Secretary of the Interior for the purpose of securing certain rights and privileges, and were told that the Federal Government had no right or power to grant them.

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not know about oil companies. I do know about individuals, because Mr. Ickes answered one of them by a letter in which he said—and it is in the RECORD—that he could not grant his request because the lands, by the settled law of the country, belonged to the States.

Mr. HAWKES. That is the point I wanted to make, and I should have used the word "individuals" instead of "oil companies." The fact remains that up until that time the department took the position that it could not grant those requests because the rights belonged to the States.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct. That was the position which Mr. Ickes took, and it was the position which every other Secretary of the Department of the Interior has taken from the time the Department was established until the present time.

Mr. President, I wish to speak briefly with regard to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART]. The amendment proposes to limit the quitclaim to State boundaries as they existed at the date of admission of each State to the Union and also to "give due consideration to changes in the coast line by reason of fill-ins or natural accretions."

The amendment is objectionable for the following reasons:

In the 170 years since the formation of the Union, the boundaries of some States may have been lawfully altered. It is not known whether this is so, and it would be unfair to prejudice that question in this resolution by confining the quitclaim to boundaries as they existed when the State was admitted to the Union. Both the States and the Federal Government are fully protected by the pending resolution as amended by the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], which limits the quitclaim to lawfully existing boundaries and preserves the rights of the United States beyond such boundaries. The resolution in this form would not recognize or confirm any unlawful claims which any State may make regarding the location of its boundary.

The Capehart amendment is also objectionable because of the reference to "fill-ins" or natural "accretions." One of the main objects of the resolution is to quiet title to filled tidelands. The Capehart proposal would raise serious doubt as to whether such lands were intended to be included in the quitclaim.

The Capehart amendment was offered to protect certain farmer cooperatives which have filed claims for Federal permits to prospect for oil in the continental shelf "lying beyond recognized State sovereignty." Those interests are fully protected by the O'Mahoney amendment.

A further objection to the Capehart amendment is that, in order to determine the area actually quitclaimed, it will be necessary to ascertain the location of the coast line at the date of the admission of the State to the Union, and then determine the extent of natural and artificial accretions which have occurred since that time. This would be an almost impossible task and would furnish ground for litigation for many years to come.

Mr. President, something was said by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] with reference to the language of Dean Borchard. Dean Borchard's statement is set forth in appendix B to the report of our committee. Dean Borchard said:

> My answer is that both for legal and practical reasons the riparian State should be deemed to have jurisdictional control of the resources in question. Especially does this include the right either of ownership or jurisdiction of subsoil petroleum under the continental shelf beyond the 3-mile limit. The grounds upon which the conclusion is reached will now be stated. * * *
> As Columbia Law Review states, it is now settled that the marginal sea is an integral part of the neighboring State and its counties like any other territory, subject to the right of innocent passage and the rights over commerce and navigation exercised or reserved by the Federal Government. The Supreme Court has said that "within what are generally recognized as territorial limits of the State by the law of nations, a State may define its boundaries on the sea and the boundary of its counties."

Mr. President, with reference to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], I wish to say that the amendment is substantially the same as the amendment suggested by Mr. Ickes in the Senate Judiciary Committee. The committee rejected it because it would constitute an unparalleled act of discrimination against the coastal States and in favor of the inland States. By this amendment the United States would, in effect, be saying, "We are going to waive any claim against the inland States, but we insist on prosecuting the claims against the coastal States, notwithstanding the fact that never before has any distinction been made either by the courts or by the many departments of the Federal Government as between inland and coastal waters."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The only possible discrimination would grow out of the fact that the inland States would have no marginal sea lands. The question there applied only to coastal States, and there could never be any decision with reference to the 3-mile limit having, by any stretch of the imagination, application to the inland States.

Mr. McCARRAN. The inland States have navigable rivers.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; and the coastal States also have harbors, bays, and beds.

Mr. McCARRAN. It applies to them alike, that is correct; but the discrimination would prevail just the same.

The fundamental principles upon which the courts have always held the State's title to be based was the principle of navigation. The courts have said that if the waters were navigable and were within the State boundaries, they belonged to the State, irrespective of whether they are along the coast or are within ports or harbors, or lakes and rivers. The case of Illinois Central Railway against Illinois is a specific ruling by the Supreme Court that—

> The same doctrine in this country is held to be applicable to waters along the open sea and the waters within the fresh-water lakes and that no legal principle exists for any distinction.

This amendment, in effect, would be an attempt by Congress to set up a new legal principle of separability which is contrary to all past precedent and to all previous decisions. Congress should treat all the States alike.

As a practical matter, the proposed amendment is absolutely unworkable, because it attempts to limit the operation of House Joint Resolution 225 to the line of mean low tide as it existed in each of the original States in 1776 and in each of the other States on the date when that State was admitted to the Union. It would be a practical impossibility to locate such a line. Take the case, for example, of the Original Thirteen States. Who knows where the line of mean low tide was located along the coast line of those States 170 years ago. No one knows where that original line existed, but we do know that there have been enormous accretions from natural causes and large areas of artificial filling along these coast lines. There are many ports and harbors which were created by the construction of breakwaters in the open sea. This amendment would amount to an assertion of title on behalf of the United States to all such ports and harbors and to all filled or made lands, and all the improvements thereon below the original low-tide line, which would create a far worse cloud upon the title than now exists. The proposed amendment would also amount to an assertion of title to such natural accretions as might have occurred on the Mississippi River Delta or the mouth of the Columbia River, for example.

Furthermore, the mere mechanical work of having to survey the exact line of mean low tide as it existed generations ago, even if the data existed upon which to predicate such a survey, would take generations to complete. During all that time, titles of immensely valuable property would remain under this cloud and improvements would be impeded and held in abeyance.

An example, with which Congress is familiar, of the difficulties in attempting to locate the line of mean low tide as it existed years ago, is the case of the boundary of the District of Columbia on the Virginia side. As Congress knows, this has been in dispute for over 50 years and the dispute has hinged on the location of this original water boundary. After more than 50 years of engineering effort to determine that boundary, Congress finally had to act and arbitrarily fix it in order to settle the controversy.

How much greater would be the difficulty of having to locate the line of mean low tide in Massachusetts Bay, or along the New York or New Jersey coast as those lines existed on July 4, 1776.

To take a more recent example—if you will drive, Mr. President, along the California Coast Highway you will see that in many places the road is built on filled land that has been built out into the open sea below low tide. You will find, too, that many cities have built parks and recreation beaches by filling out below low tide. These highways and recreation beaches have been created at enormous expense to the people of California Now the Barkley amendment does two things: First, it requires that the line of mean low tide as it existed on September 9, 1850, be located along the entire coast line of California. This, of course, could only be done by a court decision. Then, second, the amendment amounts to an assertion of title to all the land below that line regardless of how much money the State has expended on it and how long the State or its grantees has been in possession.

This same situation exists in every coastal State in the Union. If this amendment were adopted, there would be endless controversy and litigation as to the location of this old original line of mean low tide which Congress eventually would have to settle. It will be better to settle it now for all time.

Another source of future controversy and litigation which would be engendered by this proposed amendment arises from the use of the words "within a bay or harbor". There is no legal definition of those terms. There would be litigation on every large indentation along the coast line around the United States to determine whether it constituted a bay or harbor within the meaning of this resolution. Furthermore, as has been said, there are many harbors which are wholly or partly formed by the construction of artificial breakwaters built out into the open sea along the coast line. Will the claim be made that the construction of an artificial harbor causes a transfer of title from one sovereign to the other? That question is only an example of the many legal problems to which this proposed amendment would give rise.

Also, the amendment is objectionable in the reference to the "extent that the United States Supreme Court shall decide that such lands are owned by the several States". There is only one case pending and that is against the State of California. Presumably, this case will decide the question of title as to California, but to come within the terms of the proposed amendment there would have to be a decision as to the ownership of the lands below low-water mark and a description of the low-water mark in every coastal State in the Union. The result will be that this amendment would be the beginning of litigation between the States and the Federal Government which would last for generations to come, during all of which the title would remain under a cloud.

The amendment is objectionable in fundamental principle and is wholly unworkable in practice.

Mr. President, the time has now arrived for voting. I object to both the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] and the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, and hope that they will be voted down, and that the joint resolution will be passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 3 o'clock having arrived, further debate, under the unanimous-consent agreement, is not in order.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] which will be stated by the clerk.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, beginning with line 14, it is proposed to strike out the words "such boundary line extends oceanward beyond three geographical miles" and in lieu thereof to insert "at the time of the admission of such State into the Union, such boundary line extended oceanward beyond three geographical miles, giving due recognition to any changes in such coast line since occasioned by reason of fill-in or natural accretion."

Mr. McCARRAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. Not knowing how he would vote, I transfer that pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS]. I am not advised how the Senator from Missouri would vote on this question if present. Being at liberty to vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOSSETT] are absent because of illness.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND], and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART] are detained on public business.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are absent on official business, having been appointed to the commission on the part of the Senate to participate in the Philippine independence ceremonies.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business as a member of the Special Committee on Atomic Energy.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] is absent on official business, being a member of the commission appointed to attend the Philippine independence ceremonies.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] are necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 64, as follows:

So Mr. CAPEHART's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], which the clerk will read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to substitute a semicolon for the period at the end of the last paragraph, in line 21, page 3, and to add:

But neither the phrase "lands beneath tidewaters" nor the phrase "lands beneath navigable waters" shall include any lands covered by coastal waters below the line of mean low tide in 1776, or when the State was admitted, as the case may be, and not within a bay or harbor except to the extent that the United States Supreme Court shall decide that such lands are owned by the several States.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. Not knowing how he would vote, I transfer that pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS]. I am not advised how the Senator from Missouri would vote on this question if present. Being at liberty to vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOSSETT] are absent because because of illness.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND], and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART] are detained on public business.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

So Mr. BARKLEY's amendment was rejected.

Mr. BARKLEY. I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. MCCARRAN. A point of order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MCCARRAN. Under the unanimous-consent agreement all amendments and the joint resolution were to be voted on at 3 o'clock.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I make the point that while the debate closed at 3 o'clock, that did not preclude the offering of amendments.

Mr. MCCARRAN. We had a unanimous-consent agreement that all amendments and the joint resolution be voted on at 3 o'clock.

Mr. BARKLEY. It would be impossible strictly to vote on all the amendments and the joint resolution at 3 o'clock.

Mr. MCCARRAN. The question was not on the amendments; the question was only that we vote on the joint resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. It was impossible to vote on the joint resolution at 3 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the Chair state the unanimous-consent agreement:

Ordered, That on Monday, July 22, 1946, at not later than 3 o'clock p. m., the Senate proceed, without further debate, to vote upon any amendment that may be pending or that may be proposed, and upon the final passage of House joint resolution—

And so forth. The Chair need not read the remainder. The agreement provides that any amendment can be offered and voted upon, but none can be discussed.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. The Calendar of Business states the unanimous consent as follows:

Ordered, by unanimous consent, that the Senate on Monday, July 22, 1946, at not later than 3 p. m., proceed to vote upon House Joint Resolution 225 and all amendments thereto.

Mr. MCCARRAN. That was the agreement.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, from time immemorial in the Senate, when the hour fixed by unanimous consent or otherwise, to vote on a bill and amendments has been reached, it has not been held that amendments could not be offered after the hour of 3 o'clock had arrived or any other hour that was fixed might have arrived. Always it has been in order to offer amendments, though they cannot be debated. There is no unanimous consent of that kind that ever required that all amendments must be offered and pending before we begin to vote.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, repeatedly the able leader has laid down that very principle that all amendments and the bill be voted on at a given hour.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the Senate knows that is impossible to vote on more than one question at a time. Debate cannot proceed beyond the hour fixed, but amendments can be voted on. The agreement means that the Senate shall begin voting on the bill and amendments thereto at a given time.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, has not the Chair ruled on this question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is about to rule. Senators are discussing the point of order, and the Chair is ready to rule whenever the discussion is concluded.

Mr. McCARRAN. A point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McCARRAN. I draw the attention of the Senate to the language of the unanimous-consent agreement as ordered:

Ordered, by unanimous consent, that the Senate on Monday, July 22, 1946, at not later than 3 p. m., proceed to vote upon House Joint Resolution 225 and all amendments thereto.

There were only two amendments pending at 3 o'clock. Those are all the amendments that could possibly be offered to the joint resolution under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Nevada wants to be technical about that, the amendment that was voted on a moment ago had not been offered. It had been read for the information of the Senate. It was not pending and could not have been as long as the Capehart amendment was pending. But when the language of the unanimous-consent order provided that the Senate begin to vote at 3 o'clock on the joint resolution and all amendments or any amendments, that meant any amendment that had been offered, and only one amendment was pending at the time, and when 3 o'clock came only the amendment of the Senator from Indiana was pending.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, it occurs to me that unless the point of order made by the Senator from Nevada is sustained we will find ourselves in the position now and in the future of having arrived at a time for voting and then permitting amendments to be offered when we are barred from discussion of them. I call that to the attention of the Chair. That certainly would be a fault in any rule we might adopt, if we could not discuss thoroughly any amendment which might be offered. That would be the result unless the point of order should be upheld.

Mr. McCARRAN. A point of order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McCARRAN. If the rule sought to be invoked by the able majority leader is to be established as the rule of unanimous consent, then I can—and I use myself as illustration—prevent a vote on any measure, from now on, because I will stack up amendments here so fast and furiously that the Senate will never be able to reach a vote on the measure.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think the point of order depends upon any threat made by the Senator from Nevada to stack up amendments here.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am not making any threat, and the Senator knows it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, from time immemorial always—except under the rule of the Senate as in the case of cloture, when after a certain time there can be no amendments offered—with respect to every unanimous-consent agreement to begin voting at a certain time there has been no instance, that I can recall as having occurred, that amendments could not be offered, though they cannot be discussed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is ready to rule.

The order, on motion by Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent is:

Ordered, That when the Senate concludes its deliberations today it stands in recess until 11 o'clock a. m. on Monday next, and that at not later than 3 o'clock p. m. on that date, the Senate proceed to vote on the joint resolution and all amendments thereto.

The Chair is advised by the Parliamentarian that from time immemorial that means—and the Chair is of that opinion—that amendments pending, and amendments that may be offered can be voted on, but that there is to be no debate on any of the amendments after 3 o'clock. There can be no debate, but any amendments may be offered and may be voted on without debate.

The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the amendment has not been stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the period in line 21, on page 3, insert a colon, and add the following: "Provided, however, that this definition shall not include lands involved in the case of United States of America against State of California, now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States, and all other lands similarly situated along the coast of the United States of America."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. Not knowing how he would vote, I transfer that pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS]. I am not advised how the Senator from Missouri would vote on this question if present. Being at liberty to vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOSSETT] are absent because of illness.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND], and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART] are detained on public business.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are absent on official business, having been appointed to the commission on the part of the Senate to participate in the Philippine independence ceremonies.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] is absent on official business, being a member of the commission appointed to attend the Philippine independence ceremonies.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business as a member of the Special Committee on Atomic Energy.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] is necessarily absent. He has a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS].

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] is necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 48, as follows:

So Mr. BARKLEY's amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

That the requirement that a poll tax be paid as a prerequisite to voting or registering to vote at primaries or other elections for President, Vice President, electors for President or Vice President, or for Senator or Member of the House of Representatives, is not and shall not be deemed a qualification of voters or electors voting or registering to vote at primaries or other elections for said officers, within the meaning of the Constitution, but is and shall be deemed an interference with the manner of holding primaries and other elections for said national officers and a tax upon the right or privilege of voting for said national officers.

SEC. 2. It shall be unlawful for any State, municipality, or other government or governmental subdivision to prevent any person from voting or registering to vote in any primary or other election for President, Vice President, electors for President, or Vice President, or for Senator or Member of the House of Representatives, on the ground that such person has not paid a poll tax, and any such requirement shall be invalid and void insofar as it purports to disqualify any person otherwise qualified to vote in such primary or other election. No State, municipality, or other government or governmental subdivision shall levy a poll tax or any other tax on the right or privilege of voting in such primary or other election, and any such tax shall be invalid and void insofar as it purports to disqualify any person otherwise qualified from voting at such primary or other election.

SEC. 3. It shall be unlawful for any State, municipality, or other government or governmental subdivision to interfere with the manner of selecting persons for national office by requiring the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite for voting or registering to vote in any primary or other election for President, Vice President, electors for President or Vice President, or for Senator or Member of the House of Representatives, and any such requirement shall be invalid and void.

SEC. 4. It shall be unlawful for any person, whether or not acting under the cover of authority of the laws of any State or subdivision thereof, to require the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite for voting or registering to vote in any primary or other election for President, Vice President, electors for President, or Vice President, or for Senator or Member of the House of Representatives.

Mr. OVERTON, Mr. TOBEY, and Mr. RUSSELL addressed the Chair.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. OVERTON. I make the point of order that the unanimous-consent agreement contemplated amendments germane to the joint resolution. The present amendment is wholly foreign to the purpose of the joint resolution. That is a fair interpretation of the agreement. The unanimous-consent agreement entered into contemplated amendments which were applicable and germane to the joint resolution, and not amendments dealing with entirely different subjects. I believe that that is a fair construction of the unanimous-consent agreement entered into. A score of Senators would have objected to the unanimous-consent agreement had it been contemplated that it would have applied to amendments such as the poll-tax bill, which are entirely foreign to the joint resolution. They would not have agreed to it.

I am not relying on the rule of germaneness, which I feel has no application to Senate amendments, but I am appealing to the Chair for a fair interpretation of the intention of the Senate in entering into a unanimous-consent agreement.

If this amendment is held to be in order, I assert that there will not be another unanimous-consent agreement to vote on any other question during the present session of Congress, because amendments will be offered which will be extremely obnoxious to at least some Senators, and there will be no opportunity to debate them. An issue of this kind should be subject to debate. The Chair knows that it should be subject to debate.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TAFT. Is the Senator arguing the merits of the amendments?

Mr. OVERTON. I am arguing the point of order. I contend that a fair interpretation of the unanimous-consent agreement would be that it did not contemplate that an amendment of this character should be proposed and acted upon.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. RUSSELL. If the Chair should overrule the point of order made by the Senator from Louisiana, and an appeal should be taken from the ruling of the Chair, would the appeal be debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will read the order:

Ordered, That when the Senate conclude its deliberations today, it stand in recess until 11 o'clock a. m. on Monday next, and that at not later than 3 o'clock p. m. on that day the Senate proceed to vote on the joint resolution and all amendments thereto, that the time for debate on Monday next be equally divided and controlled, respectively, by Mr. MCCARRAN and Mr. BARKLEY, and that the requirement of the rule for a roll call upon a request for a final vote on the joint resolution be waived.

Nothing is said in the order about the germaneness of amendments, and the Chair is compelled to rule that the amendment is in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may make a statement not longer than 5 minutes with reference to this matter.

Mr. GEORGE. I object. If we are to indulge in this sort of practice, we might just as well suspend all rules.

Mr. BARKLEY. I desire to state——

Mr. GEORGE. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I desire a ruling on my parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I discuss the point of order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order has been overruled.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia has appealed from the decision of the Chair. The question now is, shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I wish to determine whether the appeal from the decision of the Chair is debatable.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I have the floor.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I understand that, and I wish to determine whether the appeal is debatable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the rules, an appeal from a decision of the Chair is always debatable.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I thank the Chair.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, along with all other Members of the Senate who are interested in regular procedure, I am somewhat surprised that this amendment has been offered in this fashion. However, I cannot say that I am very much surprised that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] has offered the amendment in this fashion to the pending measure, unexpected as it was by all Members of the Senate who are opposed to such legislation. The Senator from Oregon, being a great progressive and a great liberal, does not pay much attention to the practices which have obtained in the Senate for many years.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. I wish to ask whether it is the ruling of the Chair that under the unanimous-consent agreement and order, anything is privileged above the appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not understand the question.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to ask the distinguished occupant of the Chair whether there is any matter—a conference report or anything else—that is privileged and that will take priority over the appeal from the ruling of the Chair, in view of the unanimous-consent agreement which has been entered into in regard to the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the appeal is debatable; and until the appeal is disposed of no other business can be transacted.

Mr. WHERRY. Nothing else can be taken up until the appeal has been determined, as I understand.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska is correct. Nothing else can be taken up until the appeal is determined by the Senate.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TAFT. In view of the unanimous-consent agreement, I make the point of order that the appeal from the decision of the Chair is not debatable, on the ground that it would nullify the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I make the point of order that I made that point of order before, and the Chair has already ruled on it, and no appeal was taken in regard to that ruling.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I should like to have a ruling on my point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has already ruled on that point of order: namely, that the appeal from the ruling of the Chair is debatable.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, such appeals have always been debatable. Despite the desire of some Senators to indulge in a legislative lynching when legislation of this kind is brought forward, there are some rights which still adhere to Members of the Senate. I can assure the Senator from Ohio and other Senators who would like to have this matter brought to an immediate vote that those of us who believe in orderly procedure here will find means and methods of protecting our rights.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, may we have order? I wish to hear what the distinguished Senator from Georgia is saying, regardless of whether anyone else does or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order. Senators desiring to converse will retire to the cloakrooms. Senators who remain in the Chamber will take their seats. Let there be order.

The Senator from Georgia may now continue.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I have gathered from the reading of the amendment by the distinguished and able clerk of the Senate that the amendment relates to what has been known as the anti-poll tax bill. It brings into a legislative measure which has to do with quieting the titles to certain lands for the purpose of oils and minerals, the question of repealing the poll tax. The Senator who proposed the amendment was, of course, wholly within his legislative rights. It is not in keeping with the usual practice in the Senate to offer amendments of this nature which are not germane to the bill, but the Senator was within his legal rights.

On another occasion, as I have been advised through the columns of the press, when there were only two Senators upon the floor, one being the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] and the other being the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the Senator from Oregon rose from his seat and requested unanimous consent that the then pending business be laid aside—only those two Senators were then present, aside from the Senator who occupied the chair at that time—and that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of the bill to repeal the poll tax. The bill then would have been given consideration by the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from North Dakota—as the only two Senators on the floor. I must confess that while the Senator from Oregon was fully within his rights in making such a request in that fashion, I did not consider that such a proceeding was in keeping with the amenities which have controlled in the Senate of the United States and in the relations of Senators with each other ever since this body has been established. We managed to escape that ambuscade and that bushwhacking attack.

Now, instead of having that matter brought up as a separate proposition, as had been proposed by some of those who favor that measure, we find that the Senator from Oregon has proposed it in this fashion, as an amendment to the pending joint resolution.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield for a question.

Mr. LUCAS. In view of what has happened today, does not the Senator from Georgia feel that it is about time that the United States Senate considered the adoption of a rule of germaneness.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, that is a knife that cuts both ways. At this stage of the proceedings I am not prepared to discuss what should be done with respect to a rule of germaneness for the Senate. Before the debate on the appeal from the Chair shall have concluded, I shall endeavor to give some study and thoughtful consideration to that question, and I may possibly be prepared to go at some length into the subject of the adoption of a rule relating to germaneness.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield for a question.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish the Senator to yield to me so that I may make a brief statement.

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield for any purpose which does not affect my right to the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Georgia may yield to me without affecting his right to the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Kentucky may proceed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, when I made a unanimous consent request a moment ago, to which objection was made, I did so with the intention of making a brief statement. I wished to state to the Senate and to the author of this amendment that I have consulted the proponents and the opponents of the anti-poll-tax bill with reference to having it brought up at this session. I have consulted with them to see whether a vote could be obtained upon it on its merits, wholly disconnected from any other subject. It has been the general understanding, although not publicly announced, that an effort would be made to bring it up and to obtain a vote upon it, and that if a vote could not be obtained promptly, then an attempt would be made to apply the cloture rule on that measure, and on that measure alone, wholly disconnected from any other subject.

I am sorry the Senator from Oregon has felt it his duty to offer this amendment to the pending joint resolution. I do not believe it has any relationship to this subject. I do not believe that the joint resolution under consideration, upon which we are about to vote, should be complicated with any extraneous matter so as to prevent the Senate from passing on it on its merits.

I hope the Senator from Oregon, under the circumstances which I have explained, will be willing to withdraw his amendment so that when we do vote on the joint resolution we may do so on its merits wholly disconnected from any other subject. We all understand how controversial and how complicated is the subject. We all understand the emotions which it arouses every time it is brought up. Certainly, at this stage of the legislative program, we should not complicate or prolong the work of the Senate beyond a reasonable time by complicating the pending legislation with an amendment such as that which has been offered.

As I have said, I hope the Senator from Oregon will withdraw his amendment. I hope that he will take his chances on securing action on his proposal independently of the measure now pending. There has not been on my part at any time any disposition not to permit the Senate to pass upon the matter if it could do so before Congress adjourns. We all understand that when the bill has come before the Senate on prior occasions, or may come before the Senate at some time hereafter, opposition to it has arisen and will arise. Prolonged debate will ensue, and in order to obtain a vote on it, the Senate will be required to invoke the rule of cloture which, thus far, has never been successful. But I believe that the question should be determined on its merits. The subject is big enough to justify a disposal of it on its merits.

I had no warning or intimation—and I did not need to have any—that this amendment would be offered to the pending joint resolution. I am sorry that it has been offered, although, as the Senator from Oregon knows, I have always supported anti-poll-tax legislation. I have voted for such measures in the past, and have also voted for cloture whenever I could do so. However, that situation does not blind me to the fact that the Senate although it has no rule of germaneness, should consider to some extent the propriety of germaneness when acting on proposed legislation.

Mr. President, with that brief statement, I urge the Senator from Oregon to withdraw his amendment in order that we may proceed with other essential legislation, and that we take up his proposal at some other time on its merits and dispose of it then.

I thank the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] for yielding to me in order to make the statement which I have made.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I yield if by doing so it will not have any effect on my right to hold the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. RUSSELL. I ask unanimous consent that if I yield to the Senator from Florida I will not jeopardize my rights to hold the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I wish to subscribe to the sentiments expressed by our leader with regard to the subject of the FEPC. I believe that I, in the Senate, introduced the first bill on the subject. The House passed three times on the matter of abolishing the poll tax. I am opposed to the poll tax, and I believe that Congress has jurisdiction to legislate on the subject if the States have not legislated satisfactorily on it.

A group of Senators has acted as a sort of a small steering committee composed of Senators interested in legislation of this type, and has consulted with the able leader in an effort to fix the time before the adjournment of Congress when we could bring up, debate, and dispose of the question of the antipoll tax bill.

The bill has been reported favorably three times by the Senate Judiciary Committee, it has three times been passed by the House of Representatives, and it is now on the Senate Calendar with a favorable report of the Judiciary Committee. That being true, the public interest being involved, I feel that the matter is entitled to the consideration of the Senate.

As the able majority leader will confirm, we have been in consultation with him over the past several weeks, with notice to the opposition, concerning a time when we could take this matter up on a straight motion and debate it, have a fair and full discussion of it, and dispose of the subject in the Senate.

The Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], and I have served as members of a subcommittee which has been in contact with the Senator from Kentucky. In no sense of the word do we want the impression to be gained by the opposition or by other Senators that we do not expect to make an effort, together with the able leader of the majority, to bring up the bill, and we hope that we may obtain approval of the Senate to consider the bill, and at least have a vote on a cloture petition if we cannot reach a vote directly on the merits before the adjournment of the Congress.

Personally, I may say that if no other Senator does so, I shall move to bring up the bill for consideration before the Senate and the House of Representatives adjourn. Those of us who are in favor of considering the matter wish to give assurance, therefore, that if we suggest foregoing debate upon the matter at the present time it does not mean that we are abandoning our determination to see to it that consideration will be given to it before the adjournment of the Congress.

Mr. President, I feel that the matter would be more appropriately considered under a separate resolution and under a separate motion. I believe that the able Senator from Oregon, who I know is very sincere about his interests, will accept the invitation of the majority leader and withdraw his amendment at this time, thereby enabling us to bring up the matter at a later time. We assure him that we will cooperate with him to that end and will support a separate motion when it will not be a part of other legislation.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I yield with the understanding that I do not thereby lose the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, yesterday afternoon, when the question of the unanimous-consent agreement now in question was under discussion, we came very close to providing that there would be no business transacted, other than the business then before us, until voting time was reached at 3 o'clock today. I believe, however, that a study of the RECORD will disclose that we failed to carry out that intention in the terms of the agreement which was ultimately entered into. I believe that the point of order made by the Senator from Kentucky was justifiable and that the ruling of the Chair was a sound parliamentary ruling.

However, that fact does not change the basic situation. The truth of the matter is—I am joining at this time in the appeal made to the Senator from Oregon by the Senator from Kentucky—that the amendment which has been offered is as far from the subject matter of the legislation to which it has been proposed as the poles are apart. If ever an amendment offered in the Senate came within the category of a rider, the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon comes within that category. It is clearly a rider to the pending bill. I believe I know enough about the Senator from Oregon to feel sure that he does not approve in principle the attachment of riders to Senate bills. I hope that his zeal in behalf of the amendment will not lead him into the error of supporting an unquestioned rider to an entirely different subject matter.

I join in the hope expressed by the Senator from Kentucky that the Senator from Oregon will withdraw his amendment at this time.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Washington with the understanding that I do not thereby lose my right to hold the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I merely wish to corroborate what the Senator from Florida has said. Some of us have met many times in connection with the subject of poll-tax legislation. There are many of us who have a vital interest in the matter. A small subcommittee, consisting of the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD], and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], was informally appointed, with the hope that some action might be reached on the FEPC bill at this session of the Congress. Those Senators to whom I have referred have been conferring with the majority leader from time to time, and the results have been fairly satisfactory, at least, according to the reports which we have received.

There are many Members of the Senate who have a deep interest in this matter, and they have had such interest for many years. At one time I personally introduced an FEPC bill in the House and the bill was passed there, bearing my name. I think there is some propriety in the legislation, but I think that the matter should be handled correctly. I hope that it will not be attached to a bill which is not germane, and which would require a conference and other legislative procedures, resulting, perhaps, in a failure to enact it into law. However, if we are going to legislate in connection with this matter, Mr. President, I wish to serve notice at this time that the next amendment which I shall present will be one concerning the FEPC.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will my colleague from Georgia yield to me with the understanding that he does not lose the floor?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I yield to my able colleague with the understanding that by yielding I do not lose my right to the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words, but perhaps some Senators will listen to them who are interested in getting the OPA, the Railroad Retirement Act, and other pieces of legislation passed by this body.

If some Senators wish perniciously to intermeddle in the affairs of five or six of the Southern States, always to their detriment and of absolutely no service to the remaining States of the Union, they may persist in that course. It will not be one which will help the party, and I assume that the administration should at least be anxious to obtain some OPA legislation and other legislation before the Congress recesses.

Now, Mr. President, with those suggestions—which are no more than suggestions—I wish to conclude by saying that there are those of us who are prepared to stay here all the summer, if necessary, and if legislation wholly distasteful, designedly discriminatory, and offered for the purpose of either getting votes or embarrassing five or six States in the South, is to be pressed upon us, we might as well let the Senator from Oregon persist in his motion and let the matter proceed to some final conclusion.

Mr. MORSE and Mr. BARKLEY addressed the chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia has the floor. Does he yield; and, if so, to whom?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator from Oregon if I may do so without losing the floor. If the Senator wishes to address himself to his amendment, of course I think he should do that in his own time, but I shall be glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. MORSE. I simply wish to say, if the Senator obtains the unanimous consent for which he asks, that I desire to address myself to some remarks made on the floor of the Senate about the position I have taken on this amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield with the understanding that it will not affect my right to the floor. I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MORSE. I shall be very brief. I have listened with interest to the request of the majority leader and to the request of the Senator from Florida that I withdraw my amendment. I am very much surprised, to put it mildly, to hear the suggestion come from the lips of the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER].

If the Senator from Florida is really interested in getting the anti-poll-tax bill before the Senate of the United States, I should like to inform him that it is now before the Senate of the United States, and apparently adequate opportunity is going to be given, by way of appeal from the decision of the Chair with regard to a ruling on my amendment, to discuss the merits of the anti-poll-tax amendment. If the Senator from Florida is concerned with playing politics on this issue, then I can understand his suggestion that I withdraw the amendment.

I think it is very important that its merits be discussed here and now. I say it is a very simple matter. I think every Member of this body is pretty well informed as to the pros and cons of the anti-poll-tax bill. I think every Senator is so well informed that he could vote now, if he would, upon the merits of that bill, and under the ruling of the Chair, handed down a few minutes ago, we can have a yea-and-nay vote, and we can get this very troublesome issue settled once and for all. I think it is important before the Congress shall adjourn this summer, that the Members of the Senate by a roll-call vote make a record as to where they stand on this anti-poll-tax bill. I want to see Members of this body face the voters with a record vote behind them on the merits of this issue.

I wish to say that I think this matter presents very clearly to the Senate—and I think it will to a good many other people, too—the great desirability of complete reform of the rules of the Senate. I do not know of any piece of business we could transact that would be of greater importance to democratic government and to the perpetuation of representative government than revising the rules of the Senate so that we could correct, for example, the rule on which the Chair earlier cast his ruling, relating to the amendment which the Senator from Kentucky presented to the Senate this afternoon. If I understood the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] correctly, he apparently complains, or at least takes note of the fact, that he did not have any notice of the amendment I have offered to the joint resolution. I can assure him that I think that goes for almost every other Member of the Senate in regard to the amendment he offered to the joint resolution after 3 o'clock. We did not know the Senator from Kentucky was going to offer another amendment. Certainly when the Senator from Kentucky obtained the unanimous-consent agreement to vote at 3 o'clock, he did not tell us he intended to offer the amendment. I think it was very well pointed out by the Senator from West Virginia that if the rules of the Senate permit the offering of amendments after a unanimous-consent agreement has been entered into to vote as of a certain hour on a given piece of legislation, and amendments pending thereto, all one has to do, after that hour has been reached, is to offer new amendments, thus forcing a vote on them without debate. That is a very unsound rule and I propose to show it up by this amendment of mine. If that is the rule of the Senate, which I am sure came as a great surprise to many of us in this body this afternoon, we should change the rule.

If that is the rule, then I say that the junior Senator from Oregon has his rights under that rule, as does the majority leader, the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. All I have done has been to exercise my rights under that rule. I have exercised my rights under the rule in the interest of a great cause. I have exercised my rights under the rule in the interest of giving to all adult citizens in this country the right to vote without having imposed upon them any restriction on their right to vote such as the requirement that they pay a poll tax.

The amendment is one in the interest of the welfare of this country and the preservation of our democratic processes. I know of no amendment or proposal which can be made in the Senate of the United States more vitally concerned with the preservation of this thing we call the American system of representative government. It is basic to the liberties of freemen. Is it possible that some of our fellow citizens are to be allowed to enjoy freedom only in the abstract?

I must be frank about this, too, and we all must be realistic about it. We know that getting such legislation as this anti-poll-tax bill before the Senate in this session of Congress will require parliamentary strategy. Was the junior Senator from Oregon the first one in this session of Congress who used any parliamentary strategy to get legislation before the Senate? He is a babe in the woods compared with some of the strategists in the Senate during the last year and a half who have attached riders to bills, filibustered on the Journal, and demonstrated their mastery of strategy. If the junior Senator from Oregon is learning a little bit about Senate strategy, why criticize him for it? I am perfectly willing, however, to join with the strategists at any time and agree to adopt a set of rules which will completely reform the procedure of the Senate of the United States, so that we can drive from the floor of the Senate once and for all the practice of the filibuster which you and I know is going to be exercised now on this amendment, if necessary to defeat it, by way of an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

I think it is about time that 140,000,000 American people be given a lesson on the effects of the filibuster on legislation once it is introduced on the floor of the Senate. I think the American people need to be awakened as to the importance of reforming the rules of the Senate, and I believe this fight will help that very important cause.

My reply to the majority leader is, therefore, that I will not withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I should like to yield to the Senator, but I have been yielding, and I should like to address myself to the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The distinguished Senator from Oregon, whom I now salute as the chief strategist back of the poll-tax bill, referred to strategy. The Senator from Oregon needs no one to instruct him in strategy. I notice that he applies in this case the same strategy he has applied in other cases of legislation of this highly controversial nature. I recall well that when the so-called FEPC bill was brought on the floor of the Senate it was the Senator from Oregon who started talking about there being a filibuster against it, before any of the opponents of the bill had had an opportunity to speak. Now on this appeal, before I have had an opportunity to address myself to the appeal for more than 5 minutes, the Senator from Oregon again charges filibuster.

The Senator knows that a wonderful way to hit the headlines of the daily press in this country is to come in with charges of filibuster, and he knows that when he, with his great liberal reputation, charges a filibuster and makes the headlines he thereby obscures some of the merits of the issue which might be under consideration.

So the Senator is a master of strategy. As the self-chosen chief of staff in this fight he has taken away the lead from men who were fighting for legislation to repeal the poll tax long before the Senator from Oregon came to these halls. The Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] has consistently, in and out of season, brought legislation here seeking to repeal the poll tax. The distinguished majority leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], has fought since I have been a member of this body for legislation to repeal the poll tax. The Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] has been a consistent fighter for legislation to repeal the poll tax. All of them have now been supplanted by the great Senator from Oregon. Their strategy is at fault. They wish to approach this question and face this issue in a straightforward fashion. They wish to follow the practices of the Senate which have obtained for a hundred years when great issues have been involved. They wish to face the issue four-square and on its own merits, as the Senate has always done. The new general who has come in to take over the poll-tax fight, to take over the leadership from men who have been fighting for the legislation to repeal the poll tax for years, does not believe in the direct frontal attack. He is the proponent of the ambush. He seeks to destroy the poll tax by an ambuscade; by coming around surreptitiously and sliding around the corner by offering an amendment after debate is eliminated by unanimous consent to legislation that has nothing remotely to do with the poll tax. So the strategy of the direct approach that the Senate has always considered to be a proper relation between its Members is now being superseded by the strategy of the ambuscade under the generalship of the Senateor from Oregon.

I heard on the floor not long since a good deal about "ham acting," and when I see, Mr. President, some of the things that are going on here this afternoon I cannot but connect them with statements that have been made here in the past about ham acting. Here we have the Senate sitting in session, the Members' thoughts directed to legislation which has been a subject of contention, which has to do with tidelands and oil. All of a sudden out of a clear sky the leadership of the poll-tax fight is grasped by the Senator from Oregon from the hands of those who have been laying plans, who have been holding conferences, who have been discussing with the majority leader the old-fashioned manner of a direct or straightforward and a forthright approach in normal legislative practice.

I say, Mr. President, that this procedure may indeed endear the distinguished Senator from Oregon to certain groups in this country. It may cause him to have that satisfaction which we feel when we see our name emblazoned in the headlines of the daily press of the country. But I doubt very seriously if it is any substantial contribution to the repeal of the poll tax in the United States to force the issue in any such circuitous, unusual fashion as we see employed here this afternoon.

Of course, appeal was made from the decision of the Chair. The Senator from Oregon talks about necessity for changes in the rules of the Senate. Well there is a regular procedure for the change of rules. There is a method of doing it. But the rules cannot be changed this afternoon while the appeal is pending, and I doubt not that there will be some very illuminating discussion on the issue involved in the ruling of the Chair.

I wish to say, Mr. President, at this juncture that I regret very much that I felt constrained to appeal from the decision of the distinguished Presiding Officer. Since I have been a Member of this body for more than 13 years I have been privileged to serve with the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, on the Committee on Appropriations. I I have great respect for him as a man and as a Senator. He is probably the most effective legislator I have ever known. But feeling as I do that the Senator was in error in the ruling that he made, I felt it my duty to appeal from the decision of the Chair and submit the matter to the Senate.

Mr. President, I wish now to say that so far as I am concerned, this measure does not affect my State. The State of Georgia levied a poll tax from Colonial days down to about 2 years ago. On previous occasions in studying this subject I went back to the meetings of the Colonial Assembly in Georgia, which I believe were held in the year 1743. This is my recollection now. I am sure it was prior to 1750. The Colonial Assembly in Georgia in that year levied a poll tax of 3 shillings per head upon all male citizens of the colony who had passed the age of 21 years. From that day until 2 years ago there was a poll tax in the State of Georgia which it was required that the citizens pay as a prerequisite to voting in elections in the State.

We have heard a charge, Mr. President, that the poll tax was a device to disfranchise the Negro. Never has there been a more fallacious or untrue charge made by those who had any knowledge of the facts. In the tragic days of reconstruction, when most of the members of the Georgia Legislature were members of the colored race, the legislature met in session and wrote an entirely new constitution, the reconstruction constitution. That constitution made tremendous changes in the legal system and in the social order, yea, in the economic order in the State of Georgia. But that legislature, composed as it was of a majority of members of the colored race, wrote again in the constitution a poll-tax provision making it a prerequisite of voting in elections in my State.

Mr. President, that bit of history shows how unreasonable is this charge that the poll tax is a device to disfranchise the Negro. We have no poll tax today in my State, and I am glad that we do not have one. I think the poll tax is outmoded. I hope that our sister States will see fit to repeal the poll-tax provisions which are in existence today.

But, Mr. President, believing as I do that the question of franchise is one which is delegated by the Constitution of the United States to the several States, I shall oppose with all the power of my being, any effort, whether it be by direct, flank, frontal, rear, or ambush attack, to take over the affairs of the several States and tell them the system they shall employ.

Mr. President, if Senators would but take the Constitution of the United States once every 2 years and read it over, and then follow the dictates of untrammeled and fearless conscience, we would not have such legislation as this make its appearance in this Chamber.

It so happens, Mr. President, that the only provision in the Constitution of the United States which appears twice in the same language is the language which preserves to the several States the right to determine the qualifications of electors. If Senators would read the Constitution and then clearly follow the dictates of their own conscience, we might not be afraid to have this matter come to a vote, whether it comes by way of this amendment to the pending measure or in the usual parliamentary procedure which those who have the right to stand in the forefront of this fight have sought to follow in presenting the issue to the Senate.

I know, Mr. President, that in some quarters the Constitution of the United States is not a very popular document today. It has become the custom of some people to try to find ways and means to gloss over its clear terms or provisions, and I must say that that desire has not been confined to the laity, but we have members of our judiciary who seem to think that instead of it being their duty to follow the Constitution as it has been written, that they should use the test of expediency and seek to circumvent the clear provisions of the Constitution they are sworn to uphold.

Mr. President, this country is today facing a condition of uncertainty. We know there is a spirit of unrest abroad in the land. We know there is a spirit of restlessness such as always follows in the wake of every war. This war from which we have just emerged is the greatest in which our country has ever engaged. As the absolute corollary this spirit of restlessness is greater today than it has ever been before in our history. Certainly, Mr. President, at this time, when the tides of discontent are rumbling, when we can hear the beating of the waves against our institutions of Government, it behooves us to cling closer to the Constitution of the United States as the great charter of our individual rights than we have ever done before. Certainly we should do nothing that would encourage those who take the position that the Constitution should be abolished and stricken down, that we should depend for our right to a livelihood, for our right to enjoy the blessed liberties that are now vouchsafed to us, upon the whim of some dictator, rather than having the Constitution as the citadel of refuge to which all of our people may repair when their rights are threatened or in any manner jeopardized. If there has ever been a time in this Nation when we should respect and follow the letter, the spirit, and intent of the Federal Constitution, that time is today.

Mr. President, distasteful as it may be to Senators who do not place much credence in the Constitution of the United States, I feel it my duty to read those sections of the Constitution which relate to the qualifications of the electorate in this land.

Section 2 of article I of the Constitution reads as follows:

> The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

Mr. President, I submit that the English language could not be used by any master of any period to more clearly confine to the several States the power of prescribing the qualifications of electors than is done in the clear language of section 2 of article I. It does not say that if the States prescribe qualifications which do not appeal to the majority of the Members of the Senate, then the Congress can strike down the State law and write its own qualifications. It does not say that if, forsooth, the State of Arkansas has a requirement that the electors shall be able to read and write, the Senator from Oregon may introduce a bill which will tell the State of Arkansas, "You cannot apply a literacy test for voting." The clear letter of the Constitution says that the electors in the States shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

That provision clearly establishes that if the State of Illinois, for example, prescribes a qualification for electors in that State to vote for members of the lower house in the State legislature, the same provision shall apply to those who are permitted to vote for Members of the National House of Representatives. There is absolutely nothing in the constitutional provision which gives to the National Congress the right to prescribe the requirements for those who shall be permitted to vote for Members of the State legislature. Yet it is proposed here in all seriousness—I shall not say in all seriousness, but in all serious politics—that the Congress of the United States has the right to prescribe qualifications of the voters for the lower house of the legislature in each of the 48 States of the Union. If the Congress of the United States can wipe out this section by statute, we have the right to repeal the Constitution of the United States by a simple statute.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield for a question.

Mr. EASTLAND. One of the principal arguments of the proponents of the bill is that the payment of a tax is not a qualification for voting. Does not the Senator think the test would be what the qualifications for voting were at the time the Constitution was adopted? At that time practically all the States had the requirement of payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite for voting.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator is undoubtedly correct. That is one reason for this clear and direct reference in the Constitution to the qualifications for voters voting within the State. As a matter of fact, at the time of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States every one of the 13 States had either some form of poll tax, or some qualification that the elector hold title to property before he could vote. This clause of the Constitution was drawn with the background in every one of the 13 States of a poll tax or the requirement that the voter be a freeholder.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield for a further question.

Mr. EASTLAND. Does not the Senator think that if the Congress of the United States should attempt by legislation to say that the payment of a poll tax is not a qualification for voting, we should be performing a judicial act, and usurping the prerogatives of the judiciary, and that for that reason the bill is bound to be unconstitutional?

Mr. RUSSELL. The bill is clearly unconstitutional; but I do not think we would be usurping any function of the judiciary, because in my judgment the Federal judiciary has nothing whatever to do with any qualification which might be imposed by a State upon those who are to vote for members of the lower house of the State legislatures in the several States. The present Supreme Court thinks it is the greatest parliament that has ever assembled. It undertakes to write law on every subject that comes before it. If it encounters a void where the Congress has not legislated, the present Supreme Court undertakes to fill it by writing the law as it thinks the Congress should have done.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield for a question.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask the Senator from Georgia if section 2 of article I not only recognizes the power of the States to fix the qualifications for members of the legislature, but in effect makes the standard fixed by the States the Federal qualification.

Mr. RUSSELL. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CONNALLY. It makes it a part of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. RUSSELL. There is no question that this clause of the Constitution was written because of the fact that the members of the Constitutional Convention did not wish to undertake to write a uniform requirement for the qualifications of all the voters. They did not even undertake to write such a requirement.

Mr. President, I have already pointed out that the only provision of the Constitution which appears in identical language twice in that immortal document, which, despite its detractors and despite those who would strike it down, is still the greatest statement of a system of governmental principles that has ever been penned by the hand of man, is the provision which confers upon the States, and upon the States alone, the power to prescribe the qualifications of voters. I have read from article I, section 2, which appears at the very beginning of the Constitution, immediately following the magnificently worded preamble which, of course, reads as follows:

> We the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

Mr. President, I have often thought of the significance of the fact that the founding fathers, with their faith in representative government, immediately after the preamble in section 1 of article I, established the Congress of the United States. They conceived that the Congress was to be their bulwark in defending the specific provisions of the Constitution which were to "establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity," and to carry out the other objectives of the preamble. To establish the Congress of the United States, to be composed of the representatives of the people, was the first task to which the framers of the Constitution addressed themselves.

Mr. President, we see today an effort being made to pervert the functions of the Congress by using it for the repeal, by a simple statute, of a specific provision in the Constitution that, "electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature."

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield for a question.

Mr. OVERTON. While it has been frequently said, and correctly so, that the qualifications of the electors are fixed by the State, as described by the Constitution, yet, as a matter of fact, it is not true that the Constitution itself prescribes the qualifications of the electors by declaring that "the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature"? Is it not true that when the Constitution was written it prescribed the qualifications of the electors, and stated that those qualifications shall be qualifications for the most numerous branch of the State legislature?

Mr. RUSSELL. That was the specific description of the qualifications, but, of course, in the last analysis, it was left to the States specifically to determine the qualifications under the mandate written in section 2 of article I. There is no question that it was written in that form in order to prescribe the qualifications within the several States because of the differences in the laws within the several States at the time. I believe it was the State of New York which at that time had a requirement that the voter had to be a freeholder of lands or own 50 pounds in sterling, which was a tremendous sum at that time, before he would be eligible to vote for a member of the New York Assembly. When the Constitution of the State of New York was written it fixed that qualification. In my own State, where we once had a poll tax, it was much easier to vote. All that a voter was required to do was to pay 2 shillings, and after having done so, if literate, he thereby became qualified as an elector.

Mr. OVERTON. What the Senator has said is entirely true, and therefore the framers of the Constitution felt that they could not prescribe a rule for qualification, because there was no uniformity of requirement in the various States. But nevertheless, Mr. President, the framers of the Constitution did prescribe, and I think it is very important, the qualifications of the voters by declaring that the qualifications shall be the same as those prescribed for the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

Mr. RUSSELL. The qualifications were described as clearly as it was possible for the English language to describe them.

Mr. President, the time to which reference was made was when the Constitution was adopted and promulgated. It related to the qualifications of electors for the lower House of Congress.

When the seventeenth amendment, providing for the election of Senators by the people of the United States, was submitted to the States, in submitting that amendment the Congress recognized the qualifications of the electorate as set forth in section 2 of article I of the Constitution, and reiterated them in the second sentence of the seventeenth amendment providing for the popular election of Senators. I will read the language. Senators who have heard me read it in section 2 of article I of the Constitution will note that it is exactly the same language as that of the seventeenth amendment. After providing for the election of Senators by the people, the language continues:

> The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of State legislatures.

That language is identically the same as that contained in section 2 of article I which gives to the States the right to prescribe the qualifications of their electorate in voting for Members of the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, as I have already stated, my State has no poll tax. Within the past 10 days a primary election was held in the State of Georgia. For the first time in its history an election was held without disqualification being imposed. I am glad to know that the poll tax in my State has been removed. I hope that my sister States will soon remove theirs so that they may see 700,000 or 800,000 of their citizens move in a solid phalanx to the polls and cast their votes. But to me, Mr. President, the Constitution of the United States is something more sacred and more important than to be considered as merely a document which we may seek to circumvent and defeat, even though its language is as clear as is set forth in the constitutional provision for the qualifications of voters. I shall not sanction or lend my aid to any proposal which seeks to wipe out, by a simple statute, two clauses of the Constitution.

Mr. President, if the Congress of the United States has a right to repeal these two constitutional provisions relating to the poll tax or the qualifications of voters, and repeal them by a simple statute, as is here being proposed, then the Congress has a right to pass a law requiring that in the State of South Dakota only red-headed men with green eyes may have the right to vote.

Why was the matter left to the several States in such clear and specific language as I have read? It was to protect the rights of the States to control their own elections.

Mr. President, if we can strike down this provision of the Constitution by a simple statute, we can pass a law which will say that every election held in the several States shall be presided over by a Federal agent and thereby take away from the States every particle of control which it exercises at the present time over the elective processes within the State.

Mr. President, it has never been contended until later years that the Federal Government had any right to prescribe qualifications of the voters or to strike down any qualifications which had been prescribed by the several States.

I once had occasion to look into the history of this matter. I went back to some of the debates which were held in this body during the trying days of reconstruction when the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments were being proposed to the Constitution. I do not have the references before me at the present time, but I shall obtain them for use tomorrow. I did not expect this matter to come up today. Senators will be interested in reading the debates which took place in the Senate back in 1866, 1867, and 1868, and see how all Senators at that time agreed to the proposition that the fourteenth amendment and the fifteenth amendment did not in anywise interfere with the rights of the several States to prescribe the qualifications of the electors in those States so long as they were uniform. There was no dissent in this body to the theory that the States still had the right to prescribe the qualifications of its voters.

Mr. President, the first reference which I was able to find touching any proposal that the Congress could abolish——

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield for a question.

Mr. OVERTON. Was it not for that reason that the constitutional amendment was proposed and adopted at that time? Otherwise, Congress could have passed a simple statute providing that there should be no discrimination on account of race, creed, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes. I thank the distinguished Senator for making that point clear.

Mr. OVERTON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me without losing the floor?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; I shall be glad to yield if I do not lose the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Earlier in the afternoon I made the statement that it had been part of the program of the Senate to take up the poll-tax bill before we adjourned. I recall that a month or so ago the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] asked me on the floor when that bill might be taken up, and I stated that it could not be taken up until certain legislation with a time limit was disposed of, because of the probability of lengthy discussion of the bill.

I wish to state now that, so far as I am concerned, it is the purpose of the majority leader himself to move to consider the poll-tax bill before we adjourn, if no one else makes the motion.

Under those circumstances I feel that we should not delay the consideration of the pending joint resolution or any other proposed legislation which is essential, such as the conference report on the OPA, terminal pay for soldiers, and other legislation which might be taken up.

Therefore, Mr. President, with that understanding, I am assuming the responsibility, as I have to assume it now and then, of undertaking to guide the course of legislation, and believing that the particular amendment just presented should not have been offered as an amendment to the pending measure, that it is wholly extraneous to the subject, that it can and will be taken up and considered on its merits under the parliamentary rules of the Senate, I feel it my duty, if the Senator will yield to me for that purpose, to move to table the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], which I do.

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. McCLELLAN. A parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas will state his inquiry.

Mr. McCLELLAN. If the Senator from Georgia yields for that purpose and the motion to table is made, I understand that the motion will not be debatable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct; the motion is not debatable.

Mr. McCLELLAN. In the event the motion shall fail to carry, what then will be the pending question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will recur on the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Then the question on the appeal would be debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would still be debatable.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Very well.

Mr. MORSE. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MORSE. I wish to explain the point. We entered into an agreement to vote at 3 o'clock this afternoon on a pending joint resolution and all amendments thereto. That was a unanimous-consent agreement. The junior Senator from Oregon takes the position that that having been a unanimous-consent agreement, there was implied in it the understanding that we would vote on amendments and vote on the joint resolution, I suggest——

Mr. LUCAS. A point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. I make the point of order that the Senator is not stating a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is making an inquiry within his rights.

Mr. MORSE. I submit that a motion to lay on the table is not a vote on the amendment within the meaning and intention of the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. RUSSELL. A motion to table——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised by the Parliamentarian that under the precedents of the Senate the motion to lay the amendment on the table is in order.

Mr. TAFT. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TAFT. Has the appeal from the decision of the Chair been withdrawn?

Mr. RUSSELL. It has not.

Mr. BARKLEY. It has not been withdrawn, and under the rules and the precedents a motion to lay on the table is in order notwithstanding the pendency of a point of order. If the motion to lay on the table carries, it carries with it also points of order made on the amendment on which the vote is taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE].

Mr. TAFT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MORSE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hart	Overton
Andrews	Hawkes	Pepper
Ball	Hayden	Radcliffe
Barkley	Hill	Reed
Bilbo	Hoey	Revercomb
Brewster	Huffman	Robertson
Brooks	Johnson, Colo.	Russell
Buck	Knowland	Shipstead

Ferguson	Mitchell	Walsh
Fulbright	Moore	Wherry
George	Morse	White
Gerry	Murdock	Wiley
Green	Murray	Wilson
Guffey	Myers	Young
Gurney	O'Daniel

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. AIKEN. If the motion to lay the amendment on the table shall prevail, will another vote on the so-called anti-poll-tax bill be in order at this session?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would be, on the regular anti-poll-tax bill, yes.

Mr. TAFT. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to lay the amendment on the table.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. Not knowing how he would vote, I transfer that pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS]. I am not advised how the Senator from Missouri would vote on this question if present. Being at liberty to vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOSSETT] are absent because of illness.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND], and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART] are detained on public business.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are absent on official business, having been appointed to the commission on the part of the Senate to participate in the Philippine independence ceremonies.

If present and voting, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART] would vote "yea."

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] is absent on official business, being a member of the commission appointed to attend the Philippine independence ceremonies.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business as a member of the Special Committee on Atomic Energy.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] is necessarily absent. He has a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS].

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] is necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 54, nays 23, as follows:

So Mr. BARKLEY's motion to lay Mr. MORSE's amendment on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendment to be offered, the question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the joint resolution.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the joint resolution pass?

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. Not knowing how he would vote, I transfer that pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS]. I am not advised how the Senator from Missouri would vote if present. Being at liberty to vote, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOSSETT] are absent because of illness.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is absent by leave of the Senate.

So the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 225) was passed.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I am under a very deep conviction about the lack of wisdom in passing the legislation which has just passed the Senate. I wished to speak for about 10 minutes on it, but I was engaged in the OPA conference committee when the time was being allotted, and failed to receive time. In order that the RECORD may contain a statement of my convictions, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a statement bearing on House Joint Resolution 225.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR CHARLES W. TOBEY ON HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 225

This legislation is violative of the basic principles of good government, and sound national policy, in three fundamental respects.

First, this is a final act of prodigality in disposing of the public lands and interests in public lands which are vested in the people of the United States. This policy was long ago abandoned by Congress after deeding vast grants to the Union Pacific Railroad Co. in 1860, a veritable empire of 40,000,000 acres to the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. in 1864, still another to the Texas Pacific in 1877, and numerous other public grants historically justified for the purpose of extending transportation and settling up the country.

There is no longer a shadow of justification for such a policy. Furthermore, all of the States were fairly and equally treated in the granting of school lands from the public domain to aid in subsidizing education in each and every State, but the grant here contemplated is partial to the seaboard States only, in conveying to them whatever interest the United States Government has in the submerged oil lands which would properly belong to all of the people in all of the States. Great as the school land grants were, and however fabulous the wealth which they have produced and are producing for the States from oil, minerals, timber, and other resources, all of the States had a fair and equitable distribution of those public lands, but here fabulous fortunes in oil are being conveyed to a few States only, and largely because of pressure from vested interest groups which have to a large extent dominated the policies of those States in respect to the exploitation of natural resources. In many cases off the coast of California those oil companies have actually usurped rights in the tidelands before even the State adopted a tideland leasing act in the belated exercise of the ownership which it now claims over the tidelands.

Secondly, in vacating whatever right, title and interest the Federal Government has in the submerged oil lands, the Senate abandons on behalf of the people, ownership, and control of billions of barrels of oil just as vital to the defense of the Nation as munitions. Oil is the principal motivative power of modern warfare, as well as of industry. Hitler invaded Rumania—for oil. Japan invaded the Dutch East Indies—for oil. The Italian fleet and the French fleet were tied up at the docks—for lack of oil

Does this Senate know that our fleet may some day remain helplessly at anchor for lack of adequate oil? Does it know of the waning oil resources in the United States? Does it know that much of the world's diplomatic struggle now revolves around oil? If it knew these things, it could not fail to assert whatever title the Federal Government may have in these vast resources. It could not possibly give away these vast resources beyond the control of the Federal Government for national defense purposes, for haphazard exploitation, so that in time of need this oil will have to be bought back from private companies with the taxpayers' money.

Thirdly, there is very real disorder and impropriety in taking this action at a time when the legal title to these lands is about to be determined in the proper constitutional process by the Supreme Court of the United States where the case of United States v. State of California is at issue and ready to be argued.

Did no Senator here note the irony—even the comedy—of the scene presented when this legislative body sought to decide matters of legal principle and intricate questions of title dating back to treaties under which the lands of the United States were acquired when all of those questions are now pending before the Supreme Court of the United States, where they should properly be heard and determined?

Of course, it is within the power of Congress to pass this act, but wisdom in a legislative body consists as much in the restraint of power as it does in its exercise. There is no excuse in principle and there is no defense in history for the use of this power in order to deprive the Supreme Court of the United States from exercising its constitutional function on this issue which so vitally affects the welfare of the people of the United States.

I oppose the passage of this measure with all the earnestness at my disposal and urge conscientious colleagues to do likewise.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which House Joint Resolution 225 was just passed be reconsidered.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

TEMPORARY CONTINUATION OF PAY TO CLERICAL ASSISTANTS OF SENATOR AUSTIN

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolution 302, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 302) submitted by Mr. AUSTIN on July 11, 1946, was read as follows:

Resolved, That the clerical assistants in the office of Senator WARREN R. AUSTIN, appointed by him and carried on the pay roll of the Senate when his resignation from the Senate takes effect, shall be continued on such pay roll at their respective salaries for a period not to exceed 60 days, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

INVESTIGATION OF CENTRALIZATION OF HEAVY INDUSTRY

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolution 301, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 301), submitted by Mr. McCARRAN on July 9, 1946, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the limit of expenditures of the special committee appointed pursuant to Senate Resolution 190, Seventy-eighth Congress, agreed to December 21, 1943, to investigate the effect upon interstate commerce of the centralization of heavy industry in the United States, hereby is increased by $2,352.70 in addition to the amount of $5,000 originally authorized.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, the Committee on Interstate Commerce, which in investigating the question of the centralization of heavy industry, incurred obligations to the extent of $2,352.70 in excess of its fund, and the resolution is for the purpose of meeting those obligations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, as I understand, the resolution is to cover a deficit of $2,352.70.

Mr. LUCAS. The resolution provides for the approval of the obligations incurred by the Committee on Interstate Commerce when it had no money in its fund.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

LIVESTOCK PRICES IN THE PRINCIPAL MARKETS

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have tried all afternoon to place the livestock market report before the Senate. The report, which has come to me by telegraph, reads as follows:

The market supply of both cattle and hogs today was somewhat less than for the comparable day a week ago and prices were steady to moderately higher. However, marketings of cattle were still substantially larger than at this time a year ago and reports from large meat-consuming centers indicate that the meat-distribution pipe lines are being filled up and that there will be even more meat available for consumers this week than there has been in many, many weeks.

Cattle receipts at 12 midwestern markets today amounted to 92,300 head, which is about 8 percent less than the receipts at these markets on Monday a week ago, but 17 percent larger than the corresponding Monday a year ago.

The Chicago office of the United States Department of Agriculture comments on the sharp drop in cattle prices on Thursday and Friday of last week as follows: "Augmented by a liberal carry-over from Thursday, burdensome supplies of common, medium, and good grassy and shortfed steers and yearlings sold 50 cents to $1 lower than Thursday, when buyers could be found, but many loads and lots carried bids which suggested an even greater decline. The break, meanwhile, has operated to throw increased numbers of yearlings and typical 'two-way cattle'— with weight into feeder channels, but at prices $3 to $4 or more lower than packers were paying for the same kind of cattle early this week. Insofar as cows are concerned, a large part of the sharp advance scored over the last 2½ weeks has been all but wiped out in the last 2½ days. Many distress sales today were as much as $1 lower than Thursday, with the general market on all grades $1.50 to $3 under the recent high time. Canners and cutters bulked at $7.25 to $10 and most common to low-good beef cows went at $10.50 to $14.50."

They are cattle that can either be fed or slaughtered—

The cattle market opened at Chicago this morning at steady levels for steers and yearlings, with cows 25 cents to 50 cents lower than at the close of last week. The early top was reported to be $24.75 per hundredweight for a few loads of fancy steers, which compares with $24.50 last Friday and with the extreme top, reached early last week, of $26.35. Only a relatively small number of cattle sell for these so-called top prices; most cattle sell at much lower levels.

Receipts of calves at 12 markets this morning amounted to 18,000 head, up 4 percent from a week ago and up 59 percent from the same day a year ago.

Sheep and lamb receipts at 12 markets also were up today, amounting to 60,200 head, 8 percent larger than a week ago and up 59 percent from a year ago.

Receipts of hogs at 12 markets this morning amounted to 34,200, off 29 percent from the market supply of last Monday and 12 percent less than receipts for the comparable Monday a year ago.

The early top on the hog market at Chicago this morning was $20.50 about $1 per hundredweight higher than the practical top of $19.50 paid last Friday, but still $1.50 per hundredweight below the top of $22 reached the early part of last week.

In a review of the general market conditions for the week, the United States Department of Agriculture report for western dressed meats at New York indicated since July 1 outside prices (upper limit quotations) have dropped as follows: Beef $5 to $11 with good and choice grades off most; commercial to choice vealers $6 to $11 with good and choice off most; commercial to choice lamb $3 to $5 with good and choice off most; $5 to $7; Boston butts, $4." The Department of Agriculture concludes that "Since the bulk of dressed meats have been selling at near or outside price ranges for many months," average prices are considerably lower in spite of the price advances shown by the established meat prices. On Friday last week, the Department of Agriculture reported another drop in the upper limit quotations for beef carcasses at New York City so that choice beef by the end of last week had dropped $13 per hundredweight and good beef $15 per hundredweight from the peak reported on July 5 and representing the black-market price at which the Department of Agriculture states that the bulk of dressed meats has been selling for many months. This indicates that former black-market price levels are being effectively destroyed under free economy by increased volume and by resistance on the part of consumers.

The situation at the week end proves that without OPA controls beef cattle, on which prices had been run up well above ceilings by black-market operators, are seeking reasonable levels, both in price and supply. It also proves, as the meat industry has contended all along, that without the protection of artificial price barriers set up by OPA regulations, black-market operators cannot compete with the established meat industry and its know-how in economical and efficient operation.

AMERICAN MEAT INSTITUTE.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, in connection with the market report which has been read by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska, I desire to announce that I have had word from San Antonio, Tex., which is a great cattle market, that the market there last Saturday went below the maximum OPA prices, taking into consideration the subsidies. I also received word that the hog market did the same.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the distinguished Senator for that contribution.

Mr. President, I should also like to say that a moment ago I was called to the telephone, and informed that the Kansas City market had 15,000 head of cattle today; that among them were a lot of grass-fat cattle coming from the bluestem region of Kansas, and that the market there was considerably lower at its close today.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand an editorial which was published in the Washington News. It is one of the finest editorials I think I have written——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, did the Senator write it?

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator from Kentucky for giving me an opportunity to make a further comment, as well as a correction. Of course, I did not write the editorial; but if I had had the opportunity to write it, I would have done so, because it is one of the best editorials on the subject which I have read. If I inadvertently used the word "written," I meant to say that the editorial is one of the best of its kind I have read. It is a most excellent one, and I recommend it to all Senators, especially to the Senator from Kentucky, because it is very enlightening about the black market for meat.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that I read that newspaper at breakfast every morning.

Mr. WHERRY. Did the Senator from Kentucky read the editorial to which I am referring?

Mr. BARKLEY. I did.

Mr. WHERRY. It is a good one; is it not?

Mr. BARKLEY. I thought it was pretty good.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator. He is very amicable, especially today, and I appreciate his participation in connection with this matter.

Mr. President, I desire to read the editorial. It is as follows:

THE BLACK MARKET, HAIL AND FAREWELL

Unhappiest of all about what's happened since July 1 is the black-market operator, and who can blame him? The black market in meat alone was caught short for $10,000,000, according to one conservative estimate.

This loss occurred when the supply of suckers disappeared with the end of OPA. Hoarded stocks had to be disposed of. Once on a free market they couldn't stand competition with legitimate business for several reasons, mainly wasteful methods.

The great modern packing plant uses up everything but the squeal and is working on that. Hides go for shoes. Odd edible bits make puddings and sausages. Pharmaceutical houses get the glands. Even the last scraps are swept up and processed into animal foods.

That means tankage.

I continue to read:

The black-market slaughterhouse passed up a generation of meat-packing progress. It often consisted of a dirty knife and a tree from which to hang a carcass. It had no facilities for using up the whole steer or pig, and wouldn't have dared use them if it had.

Hides, for instance, can be traced, so most were burned. A leather shortage developed in consequence of large illicit slaughtering.

The black-market meat butcher just ripped out the steaks and roasts, destroying the rest. His customers had to pay him for the wasted parts. Sometimes they had to pay something extra for the fines he was risking if he got caught, but this was balanced, more or less, by the taxes he avoided.

The prohibition speak-easy lingered in form of many a fancy saloon. The black market can't be reconverted since it wasn't a room in a back alley but just an awkward and wasteful means of doing business.

You didn't get into a black market by knocking twice and asking for Charlie. You found it everywhere. Many of its promoters came from the class of shiny-pants chiselers who thrive in times of unaccustomed legal restraints and would rather make a shady dime than an honest dollar. But many others were normally respectable merchants, tempted by extra profits or driven by force of circumstance to this risky means of making a living.

And so, to paraphrase the news-reel announcer, we say goodby to the black market, a monument to waste and to the stubborn cussedness of the free American citizen who will eat a steak if it chokes him, as often as someone tries to tell him he can't.

Hail, black market, and farewell. And we can't say it was very nice knowing you.

We say goodby, and not just au revoir, because there is not, in our opinion, the remotest chance that any reborn OPA will be stout enough to fix prices in a way that will prevent legitimate processors and dealers from doing business competitively.

The new compromise OPA bill which Congress probably will send to the White House this week contains the threat to reimpose arbitrary ceilings at some future time, but the threat probably won't be taken seriously. The new bill, to state it mildly, is no better than the one the President vetoed, and has less chance of succeeding because it means trying to put Humpty Dumpty together again

As we see it, it won't make much difference whether the President signs or vetoes this bill—provided something is done to salvage rent controls. The only thing that can get us out of this mess is for us to go to work and produce enough goods to satisfy pent-up demand, and thereby keep prices within the limits the American consumer—Mama by name—will tolerate.

In any event, it's the best means open to us now.

TERMINAL LEAVE FOR ENLISTED PERSONNEL OF THE ARMED FORCES

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 4051, Calendar No. 1739.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 4051) to grant to enlisted personnel of the armed forces certain benefits in lieu of accumulated leave.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to offer a motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion will be stated.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Following the conclusion of the consideration of House bill 4051 the Senate will proceed to the consideration of House bill 2536, reported June 18, 1946, Order of Business No. 1539.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the only motion now in order is the motion I have made to proceed to the consideration of House bill 4051.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Kansas is not in order at this time. It can be made later.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have no objection at all to the Senate voting upon the motion of the Senator from Kentucky. Immediately that is done, I desire that this motion be in order, and I desire to have it available to be called up.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, is that the Bulwinkle "bull"?

Mr. REED. That is the Bulwinkle bill.

Mr. TOBEY. I said the Bulwinkle "bull." I object.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the ordinary procedure is to move to take up one bill at a time, and when that bill is disposed of, it is in order to take up other bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4051) to grant to enlisted personnel of the armed forces certain benefits in lieu of accumulated leave, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That this act may be cited as the "Armed Forces Leave Act of 1946."

SEC. 2. As used in this act—

(a) The term "member of the armed forces" means any member of the Army of the United States, United States Navy, United States Marine Corps, or the United States Coast Guard.

(b) The term "discharge" means (1) in the case of enlisted personnel, discharge or release from active duty, including expiration of an enlistment or reenlistment, under honorable conditions, retirement, or appointment as a commissioned officer or warrant officer; and (2) in the case of commissioned or warrant officers, release from active duty under honorable conditions, retirement, or resignation other than for the good of the service.

(c) The term "spouse" means a lawful wife or husband.

(d) The term "child" includes—

(1) a legitimate child;

(2) a child legally adopted;

(3) a stepchild, if, at the time of death of the member or former member of the armed forces, such stepchild is a member of the deceased's household;

(4) an illegitimate child, but in the case of a male member or former male member of the armed forces only if he has been judicially ordered or decreed to contribute to such child's support; has been judicially decreed to be the putative father of such child; or has acknowledged under oath in writing that he is the father of such child; and

(5) a person to whom the member or former member of the armed forces at the time of death stands in loco parentis and so stood for not less than 12 months prior to the date of death.

(e) The term "parent" includes father and mother, grandfather and grandmother, stepfather and stepmother, father and mother through adoption, and persons who, for a period of not less than 1 year prior to the death of the member or former member of the armed forces, stood in loco parentis to such member or former member: Provided, That not more than two parents may receive the benefits provided under this act and preference shall be given to the parent or parents, not exceeding two, who actually exercised parental relationship at the time of or most nearly prior to the date of the death of such member or former member of the armed forces.

(f) The term "Secretary" means in the case of personnel of the Army, the Secretary of War; in the case of personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps, the Secretary of the Navy; and in the case of personnel of the Coast Guard, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the designated representatives of each such Secretary.

(g) The term "cash" includes a check upon the Treasurer of the United States.

SEC. 3. (a) Each member of the armed forces shall be entitled to leave at the rate of two and one-half calendar days for each month of active service, excluding periods of (1) absence from duty without leave, (2) absence over leave, and (3) confinement as the result of a sentence of court martial. Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, such leave may be accumulated in an amount not to exceed one hundred and twenty calendar days. Any leave so accumulated shall not, however, survive death occurring during active military service. Enlisted members or former enlisted members of the armed forces shall be considered to be entitled to such leave from and after September 8, 1939. Except in the case of leave to be settled and compensated for under section 6 of this act, leave may be taken by a member on a calendar-day basis as vacation or absence from duty with pay, annually as accruing or otherwise, in accordance with regulations to be issued by the several Secretaries. Such regulations shall provide equal treatment for officers and enlisted men, shall establish to the fullest extent practicable uniform policies for the several branches of the armed forces, and shall provide that leave shall be taken annually as accruing to the extent consistent with military requirements and other exigencies. In the case of members who reenlist or who are appointed to warrant or commissioned grades after June 1, 1945, leave accrued during any prior continuous active service immediately preceding such reenlistment or appointment may be carried over to the subsequent period of service. Members who reenlist after the date of enactment of this act may be authorized reenlistment leave in the discretion of the Secretary, for a period not exceeding 90 days, and such leave shall be deducted from leave accrued during active service prior to reenlistment or charged against any leave which may accrue during future active service or both. In the case of members who are retired after the date of enactment of this act and after retirement are continued on or recalled to active duty, leave accrued during service prior to retirement may be carried over to the period of service after retirement. Leave taken prior to discharge before or after the enactment of this act shall be considered as active military service; but leave settled and compensated for under section 6 of this act shall not be considered as active military service.

(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of this act or of any other law or regulation, no member of the armed forces (other than a member on terminal leave on September 1, 1946) shall be permitted to accumulate or to have to his credit, at any time after August 31, 1946, accumulated or accrued leave aggregating in excess of 90 days.

SEC. 4. All leave to be settled and compensated for under section 6 of this act shall be compensable on the basis of the base and longevity pay and allowances applicable to a member of the armed forces on August 31, 1946, or to a former member at the time of discharge if prior to such date: Provided, That with respect to enlisted members or former enlisted members, such allowances shall be computed at the rate of 70 cents a day for subsistence, plus $1.25 a day for quarters in the case of enlisted members of the first three grades with dependents on August 31, 1946, or former enlisted members of the first three grades with dependents at the time of discharge if prior to such date. In the case of all other leave provided under this act, members shall be entitled during such leave to the same pay and allowances they would receive if not on leave and to any additional or other allowance or allowances otherwise authorized or provided by law for members while on leave. Determination of the number of calendar days of leave to which a member or former member is entitled, including the number of calendar days of absence from duty or vacation to be counted or charged against such leave, shall be made in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the respective Secretaries, which regulations shall provide equal treatment of officers and enlisted men and shall establish to the fullest extent practicable uniform policies for the several branches of the armed forces. In the case of the leave of enlisted members or former enlisted members attributable to the period prior to the date of enactment of this act, the Secretary may in the determination of the number of calendar days of absence from duty or vacation to be counted or charged against such leave rely on such records and evidence, including applicants' sworn statements as to the material facts, as he may determine proper. All decisions by the Secretary under this section shall be final and conclusive and shall not be subject to review by any court or by any officer of the United States.

SEC. 5. (a) Leave to which enlisted members of the armed forces discharged prior to September 1, 1946, and former enlisted members of the armed forces discharged prior to the date of enactment of this act, are entitled under the provisions of section 3 of this act shall, to the extent not taken, be settled and compensated for only in the manner provided in section 6 of this act and if application is made to the Secretary not later than September 1, 1947, or, in the case of any such member or former member whose record is corrected after the date of enactment of this act to show discharge under honorable conditions, not later than September 1, 1947, or within 1 year after the date on which such record is corrected, whichever is later.

(b) In any case in which a member of the armed forces on active duty on September 1, 1946 (other than a member on terminal leave on such date) has to his credit on August 31, 1946, accumulated or accrued leave aggregating in excess of 90 days, such leave in excess of 90 days shall be settled and compensated for only in the manner provided in section 6 of this act and if application is made to the Secretary not later than September 1, 1947.

SEC. 6. (a) Leave by this act provided to be settled and compensated for under this section shall be settled and compensated for as follows:

(1) Settlement and compensation shall be made entirely in cash—

(i) when the amount due is less than $50;

(ii) in the case of any enlisted member of the armed forces discharged prior to January 1, 1943; or

(iii) in any case covered by subsection (b) or (c) of this section.

(2) In all other cases settlement and compensation shall be made in bonds of the United States to the highest multiple of $25 and in cash to the extent of the full amount of any difference. Any such bond issued pursuant to an application made under subsection (a) of section 5 shall be dated as of the 1st day of January, the 1st day of April, the 1st day of July, or the 1st day of October, whichever next follows the date of discharge, and any such bond issued pursuant to an application made under subsection (b) of section 5 shall be dated as of October 1, 1946. Each such bond shall mature 5 years from the date thereof. The bonds issued under this act shall be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury under the authority and subject to the provisions of the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and through such agencies as he may designate. Such bonds shall be nonnegotiable and shall not be transferable by sale, exchange, assignment, pledge, hypothecation, or otherwise. Such bonds shall be issued only to and in the names of living members or living former members of the armed forces. In the event of the death of any holder of any such bond payment shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury prior to, upon, or after maturity upon application at the option of such holder's survivors, as follows: To such holder's surviving spouse and children, if any, in equal shares; and if such holder leaves no surviving spouse or child or children, then in equal shares to such holder's surviving parents, if any. If there is no such survivor, the bond shall be retired, and the amount thereof covered into the general fund of the Treasury. Payment of any such bond to any holder, or any survivor entitled thereto under the provisions of this subsection, between 17 and 21 years of age shall constitute a complete discharge of the obligations of the United States under this act. Where the Secretary of the Treasury is of the opinion that any holder of any such bond or any survivor entitled to payment under the provisions of this subsection is, by reason of being either under 17 years of age or under mental disability, incapable of satisfactorily looking after his own interests, payment of such bond may be made in the same manner, and with the same effect, as settlement and compensation made under the provisions of subsection (c). Interest on each bond issued under this act shall accrue at the rate of 2½ per cent per annum from the date of such bond to the date of maturity or payment of the principal of the bond, whichever is earlier, and shall be paid with such principal. All decisions by the Secretary of the Treasury under this section with respect to the issuance and payment of bonds shall be final and conclusive and shall not be subject to review by any court or by any officer of the United States. The provisions of this section with respect to the issuance and payment of bonds shall be carried out subject to regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury.

(b) Leave by this Act provided to be settled and compensated for under this section shall, in the case of any member or former member of the armed forces who dies after discharge, or on or after September 1, 1946, if not discharged prior to such date, and before settlement and compensation has been effected, be settled and compensated for, on application therefor, with such member's or former member's survivors, as follows: To such member's or former member's surviving spouse and children, if any, in equal shares; and if such member or former member leaves no surviving spouse or child or children, then in equal shares to his surviving parents, if any. If there is no such survivor, no settlement and compensation shall be made under this act. Settlement and compensation under this subsection with any such survivor between 17 and 21 years of age shall constitute a complete discharge of the obligations of the United States under this act.

(c) Where the Secretary is of the opinion that any member or former member of the armed forces or any survivor of any such member or former member is, by reason of being either under 17 years of age or under mental disability, incapable of satisfactorily looking after his own interests, such Secretary may settle and compensate under this section with a proper person selected by him for the use and benefit of such member, former member or survivor, without the necessity of resorting to judicial proceedings for the appointment of a legal representative. Settlement and compensation made under the provisions of this subsection shall constitute a complete discharge of the obligations of the United States under this act. The provisions of this subsection shall not apply when a legal guardian or committee has been judicially appointed for any such member, former member, or survivor, except as to any settlement and compensation made prior to the receipt of notice of appointment: Provided, That no fee, commission, or charge shall be demanded or accepted by any representative of any member, former member, or survivor appointed in accordance with the provisions of this subsection and the exaction or acceptance of any such fee, commission, or charge shall be deemed a misdemeanor punishable by a fine of not exceeding $500 or imprisonment for not exceeding 6 months, or both.

SEC. 7. All amounts paid or payable under section 6 of this act, in cash, bonds, or both, shall not be assignable, shall be exempt from claims of creditors, including any claim of the United States, and shall not be subject to attachment, levy, or seizure by or under any legal or equitable process whatever. All such amounts (except interest in the case of bonds) shall be exempt from taxation.

SEC. 8. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act. Amounts expended hereunder shall be included in the annual reports to the Congress by the departments concerned.

SEC. 9. The act approved May 8, 1874 (18 Stat. 43), as amended by the act approved July 29, 1876 (19 Stat. 102; 10 U. S. C. 842), is hereby repealed. Such repeal shall not affect any unused leave credited or accumulated prior to the date of enactment of this act.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is not desired that the Senate proceed to the consideration of this bill this evening. Therefore I move——

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I want the motion which I have offered submitted to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can file his motion at any time he desires.

Mr. REED. I am filing it now, Mr. President. I am trying to keep from being foreclosed by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think the Senator has the right, when a bill is taken up for consideration, to foreclose or to attempt to foreclose other Senators by moving to take up some other bill, or by moving now that when the pending bill is disposed of some other bill be taken up.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that the motion I have made is now in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. I make the point of order that it is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Kansas for that purpose?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not yield for that purpose. As I announced, it is not the intention to proceed until tomorrow with the consideration of the bill just made the unfinished business.

I now move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his motion for a moment?

Mr. BARKLEY. I withhold the motion, and yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Some of the officers of the Navy have just submitted to me three amendments to House bill 4051. They are clarifying amendments. I wish to submit them and have them lie on the table.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I submit the amendments and ask that they lie on the table and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to submit an amendment?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order. Senators will take their seats.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order. Business cannot be transacted in this way.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can state it in a moment, but not until the Senate is in order. Senators will take their seats.

The Senator from Nebraska will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to inquire of the President of the Senate what the ruling was as to whether or not the motion made by the distinguished Senator from Kansas was in order or not in order. As I understand, no ruling was made; at least I did not hear the Chair make a ruling.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] had the floor, and refused to yield for that purpose.

Mr. WHERRY. If the distinguished majority leader had yielded, would the motion have been in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Parliamentarian advises the Chair that it would not be in order at this time, but only when there is no other business pending. Moreover, the motion should be to make the bill a special order for a specific hour and day.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, surely the Parliamentarian could not give the Chair that line of advice, after what he told me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not know anything about private conversations; but the Parliamentarian is advising the Chair, and the Chair is taking the Parliamentarian's advice and giving it to the Senator.

Mr. REED. Let me read the rule——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I wish to make a point of order; and if necessary I shall take an appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have not yielded to the Senator from Kansas for the purpose of making a motion.

Mr. REED. The RECORD shows that the motion was made.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] asked a hypothetical question a while ago, which did not take me off the floor. He asked whether, if I had yielded to the Senator from Kansas for the purpose of making a motion, the motion would be in order. The Chair held that it would not be in order. But a point of order against a motion cannot be made until the motion itself is made; and that has not been done.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Kentucky may yield to me for the purpose of submitting an amendment to the pending bill, without losing the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I submit an amendment to the pending bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

May the Chair see the proposed motion of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I send to the desk two proposed amendments to the pending bill, and ask that they lie on the table and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments submitted by the Senator from Minnesota will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

INVESTIGATION OF ACTIVITIES OF COL. THEODORE WYMAN, JR.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me for about 2 minutes to make a statement?

Mr. BARKLEY. If I may do so without losing the floor.

Mr. MAGNUSON. With that understanding, Mr. President, I may say that I have just read a portion of the report of the Joint Committee on the Investigation of the Pearl Harbor attack. That report has been made public. One of the recommendations in that report, on page 253, reads as follows:

> That the activities of Col. Theodore Wyman, Jr., while district engineer in the Hawaiian Department, as developed by the Army Pearl Harbor Board, be investigated by an appropriate committee of the Senate or the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, I was somewhat familiar—not personally familiar with the facts, but with many of the goings-on of Colonel Wyman while he was district engineer in the Hawaiian Department, having been out there at that time. If the reports are correct, his activities were somewhat scandalous, and surely should be investigated by the present Mead committee, which is doing an able job investigating war contracts. His connections with aliens and alien German contractors, not only in Hawaii, but in the building of the Canol project in the Yukon, and portions of the contracts on the so-called Alaskan Military Highway, certainly should be looked into. At this time I hope that my suggestion that the Mead committee place on its agenda as soon as possible the activities of this man will be accepted not only by the Senate, but by the committee itself.

CONGRESSIONAL REORGANIZATION

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. For what purpose?

Mr. MORSE. For the purpose of placing certain material in the RECORD.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks an article entitled "Criticizing Congress," written by Thomas L. Stokes and published in the Washington Daily News of July 9, 1946. I wish to associate myself with his remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CRITICIZING CONGRESS

(By Thomas L. Stokes)

There has been some resentment in Congress lately over criticism of that body.

Criticism of Congress is not exactly new. It comes and goes periodically. It is likely to become louder and more insistent in times of stress and strain, such as during depressions, or after a war, when personal lives and the general economy are disturbed by readjustments. That is because government, in such times, affects the lives of people more closely.

So Congress naturally would come in for criticism now.

The usual frustrations of such a time, however, are intensified by the frustrations of the average citizen when he tries, as we say, to "dope out" Congress.

The involved processes of Congress make this difficult, and they are much more involved now than need be because of ancient customs and procedures that may be hallowed by tradition but certainly are not blessed by it. Congress needs an overhauling, not only so that it can cope more efficiently with the complicated problems of today, but so that it can be a more responsible body and more responsive to the public. The public is entitled to know why things happen in Congress.

Congress, itself, has recognized the need of an overhauling. The Senate already has done something about it, under the able leadership of Senator LA FOLLETTE (Progressive, Wisconsin), by passing the La Follette-Monroney bill to reorganize congressional procedures.

Congress can do much to restore public confidence and respect by doing this overhauling job on itself. The reorganization bill is awaiting action by the House.

Among many needed changes already widely publicized are a reduction in the number of committees to avoid duplication and wasted time and effort and additional expert assistance for committees and individual members. This will give members more time for major national problems and more information for important decisions. Long overdue, too, are the increase in salary and a retirement pension system to provide greater personal security in public service.

Equally important among other provisions, too, is the plan to get more party responsibility in Congress by the creation of policy committees in both parties in each branch. They would formulate a general party program at the beginning of Congress, the party in power in cooperation with the President. The public thus would know each party's proposed program of legislation, and thus could fix responsibility for deviations or omissions, both by the party and by the individual member.

Some of the confusions in the present Congress might have been avoided had such a system been in operation, and likewise some of the crossing of wires between White House and Congress and some of the conflicts within the Republican Party. Certainly it would have been easier for the voter, both in the primary elections now going on, and in the very important general election in November, in making his selections.

There is another important reason now, too, for more party responsibility. If the Republicans should capture the House in November, they would become the responsible party in the House. This would require wise and skillful handling, since there would be divided control, with a Democrat in the White House and Republican management of one branch of Congress. The public certainly would be entitled to a declaration of Republican policy in that eventuality.

It would help to have Congress formalize such a declaration of intentions.

Mr. MORSE. I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks an article entitled "Events Raise Cry for Congress Reform," written by Richard L. Strout and published in the Christian Science Monitor of July 9, 1946. I wish to associate myself with Mr. Strout's remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EVENTS RAISE CRY FOR CONGRESS REFORM

(By Richard L. Strout)

WASHINGTON.—Recent spectacular events in Washington raise the cry anew for congressional reorganization.

There is the President's veto of OPA: This resulted from a typical break-down of liaison between executive and legislative branches of the Government. Efforts should be made to bridge the chasm between these two departments.

Then the curious mix-up of Representative ANDREW J. MAY, Democrat, of Kentucky, with the unsavory Garsson munitions scandal. Mr. MAY is chairman of the powerful House Military Affairs Committee. The incident shows again the need of reform in the congressional committee structure: Mr. MAY got his power to harass the War Department through his chairmanship of a committee which virtually controls the Army's funds.

Why is he chairman of this committee? Simply because of legislative longevity; the vicious seniority system promoted Mr. MAY to the chairmanship on length of service, not necessarily ability.

Take another instance, one close to the hearts of Congressmen. They want to go home. Oh; how badly they want to go back to constituencies now, to prepare for election. They had planned to quit Washington July 20. With the OPA rumpus, and other sudden crises, they will be lucky to get out by mid-August.

And why? Largely because Congress as at present organized is terribly inefficient. It can't get through its modern load of work.

Often, furthermore, it has to do its work twice over. The present system doesn't allow adequate liaison with the White House. The President vetoes a half-disgusted bill like the OPA extension measure, or the debatable Case bill. Then Congress spends weeks of time doing the whole job a second time, resulting in a new price-control bill, and the Hobbs bill, salvaged from the Case omnibus. Obviously, something is wrong with this system somewhere.

Meanwhile, the La Follette-Monroney bill to streamline Congress and make at least a beginning in reform, reposes on the desk of Speaker RAYBURN of the House. It passed the Senate, quite unexpectedly. Will the House pass it? That is not really the issue; the question is, will the House ever have a chance to vote on it at all? The obstacles to getting such a piece of legislation before the House are among the very obstacles to which the bill addresses itself.

The odd thing about the present stalemate is that Congress is penalizing itself. With the La Follette-Monroney reforms in effect, there would be a lot bigger chance of Congress quitting Washington on subsequent July 20 and of having a happier, smoother, more productive time than there is under its present disorganized, wobbly, haphazard procedure.

Under the LaFollette bill, a joint committee would be set up in Congress to consult periodically with the President. It would, in effect, be a "legislative cabinet." Ultimately, the heads of joint committees, who are the opposite numbers of Cabinet heads, could meet with the regular Cabinet, with the President presiding. They could work out policies together. Then, when a big bill came to the White House, there would be no more chance that it would be signed. It would be the result of common administration policy.

The same bill would also attempt to cut through the thicket of overlapping and conflicting congressional committees, although it does not strike directly at the vicious method of picking chairmen by "seniority." The May case illustrates the power which this preposterous system confers. How did JACK MAY have "pull" to enforce his will in Washington in behalf of the Garssons on the dour Army generals—who are not usually timid men? Because he stood at the cross roads of power as chairman of his little satrapy, the Military Affairs Committee.

He has recently shown his force. Almost alone he succeeded in blocking Mr. Truman's desire to draft 18-year-old boys, under the Universal Service Extension Act. He can influence the proposed merger of the Army and Navy services. He has vast power to secure military rather than civilian control of atomic energy, as against the Senate McMahon bill.

Whence does a man like this get his power—which in its lesser manifestations enables him to grant the coveted Army E (for excellence) to a questionable munitions outfit like the Garssons, over the protests of Army officers at the scene? It comes from the fact, not that he is necessarily abler, but that he has been in Congress longer than his colleagues. The fantastic Garsson empire is very largely the story of congressional seniority.

PROCEDURE IN RELATION TO HANDLING ANTI-POLL-TAX LEGISLATION

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield to me for not more than 2 minutes to make a comment on procedure?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yielded to the Senator in order to place something in the RECORD.

Mr. MORSE. I am now asking if the majority leader will yield to me for not more than 2 minutes to comment upon his proposed procedure in the handling of legislation before the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, in view of the statements made by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] this afternoon, and also by the majority leader, in regard to plans on the other side of the aisle for handling the anti-poll-tax bill before Congress adjourns, I wish to say that unless the motion to take up House bill 7 is made before there is final disposition of some of the important legislation which the majority leader intends to bring up before this session adjourns, any agreement to consider the anti-poll-tax bill at the end of the session will be worthless. I say that because it is perfectly clear that if the poll-tax legislation is to be the last item reached on the calendar there will be difficulty in keeping a quorum here. I think it is clear that the proposal announced by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] is empty strategy. It may help the other side of the aisle make a political record on this issue but it will never result in a vote on the issue and I think the gentlemen know it. I gave the Democrats and the Republicans their chance to vote on it this afternoon and I am willing to let the RECORD speak for itself.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

As in executive session,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting the nomination of James Clement Dunn, of New York, now an Assistant Secretary of State, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Italy, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in executive session,

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

George Thomas Washington, of the District of Columbia, to be Assistant Solicitor General of the United States, vice Harold William Judson, resigned;

Fay L. Bentley, of the District of Columbia, to be judge of the juvenile court for the District of Columbia;

James M. Carter, of California, to be United States attorney for the southern district of California, vice Charles H. Carr, resigned;

Gilbert Mecham, of Utah, to be United States marshal for the district of Utah;

Ford S. Worthy, of North Carolina, to be United States marshal for the eastern district of North Carolina; and Albert A. Sanders, of Wyoming, to be United States marshal for the district of Wyoming.

By Mr. FERGUSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

Raymond W. Starr, of Michigan ,to be United States district judge for the western district of Michigan, vice Fred M. Raymond, deceased.

By Mr. CHAVEZ, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

Sundry postmasters.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, July 23, 1946, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATION

Executive nomination received by the Senate July 22 (legislative day of July 5), 1946:

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

James Clement Dunn, of New York, now an Assistant Secretary of State, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plentipotentiary of the United States of America to Italy.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JULY 22, 1946

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., pastor of the Gunton-Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, whose love never fails, never forgets, and never forsakes, we are again seeking to draw near unto the throne room of the Most High and to enter the holy of holies, whence cometh our help and our strength.

Grant that we may be receptive and responsive to some new revelation of Thyself that will lift our minds to a larger outlook and a clearer vision as we face the duties of another day.

Deepen within us the confidence that Thou art our companion and counselor in every experience, and that in Thee we may find the meaning of life and the majesty of living nobly and victoriously.

We pray that Thy servants, who have been given a commission of high and heroic service, may be courageous and God-fearing men and women, inspired and equipped with abilities and capacities to match the challenge of overwhelming obligations and glorious opportunities.

In the name of Christ we bring our petitions. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, July 20, 1946, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 346. An act to amend section 21 of the act of May 28, 1896 (29 Stat. 184; U. S. C., sec. 597), prescribing fees of United States commissioners; and

S. 1801. An act authorizing the appointment of an additional judge for the district of Delaware.

COMMITTEE ON WORLD WAR VETERANS' LEGISLATION

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation may sit during the sessions of the House for the balance of this week during general debate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is that agreeable to the minority members of the committee?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; it is.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if that committee should not consider some of the mistakes that have been made in legislation which was passed for the good of ex-servicemen, particularly in the payment of $20 a week. That is doing more injury to a great many ex-servicemen than it is doing good. I hope that committee will give some consideration to that and require that if an ex-serviceman can get a job he should accept that job, rather than loaf around and do nothing, and thus injure himself and take money out of the Treasury that should be left in the Treasury. Men should take jobs when they are offered to them.

Mr. RANKIN. I will say to the gentleman that it is in the law now.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

ANDRE DACHARRY

Mr. JENNINGS submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 2192) for the relief of Andre Dacharry:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2192) for the relief of Andre Dacharry, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by the Senate, to-wit: "$7,923.44", insert "$9,923.44"; and the Senate agree to the same.

J. M. COMBS,
JOHN JENNINGS, Jr.,
Managers on the Part of the House.

ALLEN J. ELLENDER,
KENNETH S. WHERRY,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2192) for the relief of Andre Dacharry, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The bill as passed the House appropriated the sum of $14,923.44 to Andre Dacharry, of Los Angeles, Calif., in full settlement of all claims against the United States for personal injuries, medical and hospital expenses, and property damage sustained on January 19, 1944, when he was struck by a United States Coast Guard truck, on the Coast Highway near Malibu Beach, Calif.

The Senate reduced the sum to $7,923.44, and at the conference the amount of $9,923.44 was agreed upon.

J. M. COMBS,
JOHN JENNINGS, Jr.,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 2192) for the relief of Andre Dacharry.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEGAL GUARDIAN OF JAMES THOMPSON, A MINOR

Mr. JENNINGS submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 3543) for the relief of the legal guardian of James Thompson, a minor:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3543) for the relief of the legal guardian of James Thompson, a minor, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the text of the bill, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On line 6, page 1, strike out the figures "$1.118.75" and in lieu thereof insert "$118.75"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill and agree to the same.

J. M. COMBS,
W. A. PITTENGER,
Managers on the Part of the House.

ALLEN J. ELLENDER,
KENNETH S. WHERRY,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3543) for the relief of Elmer D. Thompson and the legal guardian of James Thompson, of Gurley, Ala., in full settlement of all claims against the United States for personal injuries, medical and hospital expenses, sustained by the said James Thompson, as a result of being struck by a United States Army vehicle on February 2, 1944, on United States Highway No. 17, in front of Crofts Grocery Store, in Windermire, Charleston, S. C., submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

The bill as passed the House appropriated the sum of $1,118.75 to the legal guardian of James Thompson. The Senate amended the bill striking out certain sections and inadvertently left in the bill the sum of $118.75 which should have been deleted. At the conference the bill as passed the House as to the amount was agreed upon.

J. M. COMBS,
W. A. PITTENGER,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 3543) for the relief of the legal guardian of James Thompson, a minor.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EMERGENCY PRICE CONTROL ACT, 1942

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the managers on the part of the House may have until midnight tonight to file a conference report and statement on House Joint Resolution 371 extending the effective period of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

ATOMIC ENERGY LEGISLATION

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, July 20, I addressed the committee on S. 1717 on atomic energy. The reporter gave me my statement for correction and revision. I did not return it in time for insertion in the RECORD. I now ask unanimous consent that it be placed in the permanent RECORD at the point where I spoke, as well as in the Appendix of today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PRICE of Illinois asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on three subjects and in two instances to include newspaper articles.

GEN. R. M. LITTLEJOHN

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Speaker, this morning Gen. R. M. Littlejohn was sworn in as War Assets Administrator and the country is to be congratulated on the President's choice for this difficult position.

General Littlejohn, a South Carolinian, has had a distinguished military career and we are proud of him. His over-all service in Europe in the quartermaster and supply branch of General Eisenhower's army was a major factor in our overwhelming victory in that theater. While the nature of his work did not bring the public acclaim and recognition he deserved, General Eisenhower has been first to acknowledge and commend General Littlejohn's leadership and gigantic achievements.

The people of the United States, some of whom have been disturbed by some phases of the handling of our war assets, may be assured of an honest, fearless, and able policy under the new Administrator. General Littlejohn will do his duty as he sees it regardless of the devil, high water, and those who would profit at the expense of the taxpayers of the United States.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 10 o'clock tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

ADDITIONAL FUNDS FOR COMMITTEE INVESTIGATING DISPOSAL OF SURPLUS PROPERTY

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 719) from the Committee on Accounts and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the further expenses of conducting the study and investigation authorized by House Resolution 385 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, incurred by the select committee appointed to study and investigate the operation of the program for the disposition of surplus property, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $15,000 in addition to funds heretofore made available, including expenditures for the employment of experts, investigators, clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee or any subcommittee thereof conducting such investigation, signed by the chairman of the committee, and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

SEC. 2. The official committee reporters may be used at all hearings held in the District of Columbia unless otherwise officially engaged.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain how much money we gave them previously?

Mr. ELLIOTT. We previously gave them $45,000. Due to the fact that Congress will soon recess or adjourn it is necessary for them to have more money to carry on their work during the balance of the year. The committee in making this investigation will be here in Washington most of the time, as they are just getting under way now with the surplus property disposal investigation. I understand the entire committee, both Republicans and Democrats, have agreed on this additional increase.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. The gentleman says they are going to be here all summer. Are they also going to investigate as to property which has been disposed of? Are they going to endeavor to learn anything as to why certain classes or items of property should not be offered as surplus?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that I understand the committee is going to make a thorough investigation of all phases of surplus property, off sales as well as on sales, and urge immediate sales of property which is now available and badly needed but not being sold.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Will the gentleman tell me why the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments which wrote the law did not make any investigation about it?

Mr. ELLIOTT. The gentleman is a member of the committee. He can answer his own question.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. The trouble is the gentleman is on the majority side and I am on the minority. I cannot get any information out of you fellows.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I think the gentleman did pretty well; he was there doing most of the talking.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution. The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, during the month of May hearings were conducted by a subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives on the question of establishing a national science foundation. A bill, H. R. 6448, which I introduced on May 15, 1946, was used as the basis for the hearings. Following these hearings the subcommittee in executive session adopted several amendments to the bill and reported it, as amended, to the full committee.

On last Friday it was the concensus of opinion of the members of the committee, a quorum being present, that H. R. 6448 and the Senate bill, S. 1850, be not considered before the adjournment or recess of the Congress.

I desire to state that I am in accord with the decision of the full committee and to advise that I do not believe the committee could have taken any other action under the circumstances.

The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] who is coauthor of the House proposal and who has been interested in the subject for many years, advises me that he also is in accord with the thinking of the committee on the point involved.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

[Mr. VOORHIS of California addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in three instances and include certain newspaper excerpts.

Mr. KNUTSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include two letters.

Mr. MASON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a short editorial entitled "Whose Inflation Is It?"

Mr. ELLIS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. ROBERTSON of North Dakota asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement made before the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. GRANT of Indiana asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances, to include in one a newspaper article, and in the other a resolution.

Mr. McDONOUGH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement from the State Chamber of Commerce in California.

Mr. FARRINGTON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an essay on food.

Mr. PITTENGER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances, in one to include an editorial, and in the other two newspaper items.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

[Mr. HARNESS of Indiana addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

[Mr. McDONOUGH addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

AVIATION

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I was greatly interested in the remarks made by the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] dealing with the problem of the veterans in connection with the development of the business of aviation in this country. I think the Civil Aeronautics Board is now considering the adoption of policies that can either spell failure or progress for the future development of aviation. In my section of the country we have the same problem as has been described by the gentleman from California. We have the problem of the World War veterans who want to engage in the business of carrying passengers and freight, and they have got to have some new regulations or changes in the present regulations of the Civil Aeronautics Board if they are to succeed.

NORTHERN MINNESOTA INTERESTED

I have in my office files now, Mr. Speaker, correspondence from my section of Minnesota, which indicates that the people at Hibbing, Minn., Virginia, Minn., Eveleth, Minn., and other towns are very much concerned about air transportation service. They want scheduled trips possible and applications are on file with the Civil Aeronautics Board to accomplish those results. We know that we need a sound system of air transportation, but I have investigated conditions in the northern territory and I know that nonscheduled air carriers should be permitted to continue their operations. There should be no delay in acting on applications which will bring about these results.

If the Civil Aeronautics Board needs additional employees so that applications can be promptly investigated and acted on promptly, then Congress should appropriate the money for that purpose.

AVIATION IS IN ITS INFANCY

There can be no question about the need of making possible the development of airplane service both for the carrying of passengers and transportation of certain types of freight. I have a letter from a prominent resident of Hibbing in which he discusses the need for airplane service in his vicinity. He says in substance that a new air line, operated by ex-servicemen, has endeavored to supply Hibbing and the entire Iron Range territory with inexpensive and rapid service to Milwaukee and Chicago. He points out that other transportation types are wholly inadequate to give this service and that an air line from Hibbing to Milwaukee and Chicago is the solution of the problem.

This party also calls attention to the fact that the suspension of service heretofore rendered has caused great inconvenience to the traveling public and that there is much criticism. He says directly that the action of the Civil Aeronautics Board in a recent ruling limiting the existing air-line service to 10 round trips a month has resulted in much criticism. He further points out that the existing air-line company which has been rendering this service is composed of ex-servicemen. He asks me to do what I can to have this service restored.

WORLD WAR II VETERANS ARE INTERESTED

It should be noted, Mr. Speaker, that the veterans of World War II are directly interested in the regulations which are to be promulgated by the Civil Aeronautics Board in connection with this question. As I have indicated, protests are coming into the office right along against the proposal to restrict charter air lines to 10 trips a month between any two points. If we believe in the future of aviation and if we want to help the thousands of World War veterans who were connected with the Air Forces during World War II, then we will encourage rather than restrict the development of air transportation for passenger purposes. We should use these former military pilots, as well as other former veterans who were in our Army Air Forces and who are now available, to develop in the United States a great aviation program with unlimited possibilities.

Congress should examine immediately into the question of the formation of the right kind of policies and regulations so that no mistakes will be made. I realize that some of the established air carriers that have a monopoly on air transportation will not be in favor of this program which I am here advocating. They will undoubtedly feel that it will hurt their business. This is just the old story of selfish opposition putting itself in the way of progress. As matters stand at the present time, the existing aviation lines do not reach into northern Minnesota territory. They probably have all they can do to take care of their own existing systems. The establishment of proper regulations to permit charter air lines to open up this new territory will not only not hurt the existing major air carriers, but will, in the long run, furnish them with more passengers than they have at the present time.

Back in January I became interested in this question of having young men who were in the Army and Navy Air Forces in World War II engage in the development of civil aeronautics following their discharge from service. I expressed my views on that subject to the Civil Aeronautics Board and urged that an application for a certificate to operate a passenger air line between Chicago and Duluth should be granted. I pointed out that we had an opportunity regardless of the clear duty, to show some appreciation to returning World War II veterans by taking favorable action along these lines.

NORTHERN MINNESOTA AIRPORTS ALL WANT AVIATION EXPANDED

In this connection I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that through my efforts northern Minnesota has been helped by the Federal Government in the building of splendid airports at Duluth, Hibbing, International Falls and Eveleth. All of these airports started a number of years ago as WPA projects. When World War II came along they were abandoned for the time being. Following the close of World War II, I secured additional appropriations from the Federal Government and charter airline service is now demanded by these different villages and cities. Failure to encourage charter airline service will be a step backwards and we cannot permit it to take place.

CIVIL AERONAUTICS BOARD HAS BEEN RENDERING FINE SERVICE

In connection with the foregoing, I think I should say frankly that the Civil Aeronautics Board is confronted with many difficult problems. It has an industry that is almost entirely new and like all new lines of endeavor, unexpected conditions are developing which require study and considerable time in arriving at proper conclusions. The Civil Aeronautics Board is charged, so far as our Government is concerned, with the responsibility for looking after the safety of passengers on the airlines. It must establish regulations and set standards for the safety of the public. No one wants the Civil Aeronautics Board to do otherwise. We do, however, want them to realize that Members of Congress are intensely interested in aviation and that we want to be helpful in connection with the work of this valuable and important Government agency.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD relative to the present situation facing the Medical Division of the Army due to the delay of legislation covering permanent commissioned ranks for nurses.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana and Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN asked and were given permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

RANK FOR NURSES

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, in World War I nurses in the Army were given what was known as relative rank in order to assure them adequate authority on the wards. In this war, in order to attract the type of women that were necessary to care for our men, Army nurses were given commissioned rank "for the duration of the war and 6 months thereafter. Last November a bill expressing the unanimous opinion of the Medical Division of the Army was sent to G–1 for study and approval.

This bill should have reached us weeks and months ago. Its delay has created a most unfortunate situation. The nurses would be fully justified should they be unwilling to enlist and reenlist in a corps which has been an integral part of the Army for over 50 years but which has not been given the permanently dignified status that is its due. Because I believe the country has the right to know something of the thorny path which a bill has to go through when it comes from a department, is batted around and finally gets to the Budget, is lost there for some time and then comes back to the House as this bill does at a moment when the committee has announced it will hold no further hearings, I have secured unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD giving in some detail the history of the proposed Army Nurse Corps legislation.

THE MIDWEST PURGE

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a newspaper article carrying a release from London by the Associated Press saying that in Bulgaria and Yugoslavia the Communist leaders are carrying on a great purge. Here we cry out against that procedure, yet the same thing is going on out in the Middle West, and the President threatens to carry it on all through the country. While their actions here are similar to those in Bulgaria and Yugoslavia, I hope their objective is not the same.

CONDITION OF OUR TRUST FUND

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand the statement of the Treasury of July 15. I note that we have in the trust fund $7,640,427,571.95. If the bankers of this country would invest their trust funds the same as Congress invests its trust funds, they would all be behind the bars. The situation is this: We have a debt of $268,000,000,000. We went into the red $21,000,000,000 last year. You are going into the red at the rate of $1,000,000,000 a month now. What are you going to do at the end of the year to protect these trust funds if you are permitted to make investments such as you have at the present time? It is not right, it is not honorable, and it is not just. You cannot remedy this situation until you spend less than you take into the United States Treasury. If you do not do that you make our bonds worthless, you will wreck every bank and insurance company in our land. You are dissipating the funds in trust for all agencies of your Government. Balance the budget, stop squandering, or go broke.

AMENDMENT OF MINERAL LEASING ACT

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 1236) to amend the Mineral Leasing Act of February 25, 1920, as amended, in order to promote the development of oil and gas on the public domain, and for other purposes, with House amendments thereto, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. PETERSON of Florida, WHITE, FERNANDEZ, LECOMPTE, and BARRETT of Wyoming.

MINIMUM-WAGE BILL ACTION NEEDED

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, there are more than 4,000,000 individuals who are working in the United States in manufacturing industries who are receiving less than 60 cents an hour. It is believed about 330,000 receive less than 50 cents an hour; 1,560,000 receive less than 60 cents; and 2,380,000 make less than 65 cents an hour. The House Committee on Labor reported many weeks ago legislation to amend the Wages and Hours Act of 1938. The Senate had previously taken affirmative action by the passage of such a measure. We attempted to get a rule from the Committee on Rules to bring this legislation to the House floor but, to date, it has been denied. The petition on the Speaker's desk, to bring the proposal to the floor, contains approximately 130 names. I regret there has not been a debate in this body on the matter. I believe it is the duty of the House of Representatives to take appropriate action, voting this legislation either up or down before we recess. Personally, I am vigorously for it, and I believe the House should speak its will.

COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Education may meet this afternoon during general debate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, when the Atlantic Charter, written by Roosevelt and Churchill and heralded by their worshipers as a charter of world-wide freedom, was given out, many understood that it meant not only that the "four freedoms" were to be established throughout the world but thought that all people were to have the privilege of establishing their own form of government. Some of us even thought the administration did not intend to interfere in elections in this country.

If the press carries the correct information, the President is not disposed to permit the people of a congressional district to follow the constitutional method of selecting their Representative without interference from Federal officials now running for two offices. I see the majority leader here on the floor, and I should like to have him tell us how they get that way. The President is running for renomination as President, and he is also running, you might say, by proxy, for Congressman down in a Missouri district. That is to say, he wants a rubber stamp and a mouthpiece here in Congress in place of a man, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SLAUGHTER] who thinks and then acts on his own judgment instead of blindly following the party line of the New Deal.

ADDITIONAL EDUCATIONAL FACILITIES

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlemen from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of my colleagues to the need for early and favorable action on the bill (S. 2085) carrying out recommendations of President Truman for added educational classroom and other facilities at the universities and colleges now carrying out the educational program under the GI bill of rights. The other body has acted favorably on this legislation, and a companion bill is now pending in the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, where an effort will be made to report it out this week. I plead with my colleagues to take favorable action on this legislation.

GOVERNMENT FINANCES

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who is always worried about taxes, spoke about how banks would be criminally prosecuted if they did the same thing as the Government. What about the series of times up to 1928 when the banks and the business interest of this country owed not $270,000,000,000 but $300,000,000,000, and the banks and business went down. I would rather have us in our present financial condition where we owe this debt cooperatively.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DONDERO asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

Mr. JUDD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. LECOMPTE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial from the Oskaloosa (Iowa) Herald.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA LEGISLATION

The SPEAKER. This is District of Columbia day. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. HEALY].

REBUILDING SLUM AREAS

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 1426) to provide for the replanning and rebuilding of slum, blighted, and other areas of the District of Columbia and the assembly, by purchase or condemnation, of real property in such areas and the sale or lease thereof for the redevelopment of such area in accordance with said plans; and to provide for the organization of, procedure for, and the financing of such planning, acquisition, and sale or lease; and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this bill be limited to 1 hour, the time to be equally divided between myself and the ranking minority member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the bill S. 1426. It has been advertised as a private-industry measure. It is nothing of the sort. I want to go over a few of its important provisions. The bill defines a housing project to mean any low-rent housing as defined in the United States Housing Act of 1937. It is important to realize this because this measure ties in directly with the old USHA, all protests to the contrary notwithstanding. Low-rent housing is defined as housing that shall not be rented for more than $13 per month per room, excluding utilities. Public low-rent housing is defined as housing constructed for families of low income, at rentals which, including the value or cost to tenants of heat, light, water, cooking fuel, shall not exceed one-fifth of the highest net family income of families eligible for tenancy in such housing, as herein provided. Dwellings in public low-rent housing shall be available solely for such families of low income whose net family income does not exceed the maximum net family income falling within the lowest 20 percent by number of all family incomes in the District of Columbia.

It then provides that this definition shall be reexamined by the Commissioners for the District of Columbia and a public hearing shall be held thereon to determine whether administrative or interpretive difficulties or unsatisfactory progress in the provision of low-rent housing requires modification thereof. Upon the conclusion of such hearing the Commissioners shall forthwith make recommendations to Congress whether said definition should be modified and, if so, to what extent.

In other words, we place a definition in this measure, and then provide specifically that such definition may be altered at the end of 1 year. Specific direction is provided for making it possible to alter the definition. That is the substance of this provision.

Now, it is important, I think, that the Congress do everything within its power to prevent this continual expansion of bureaucracy and entrenchment of Government upon private enterprise. This opens a way to the violation of both of those things.

This sets up what is known as the District of Columbia Redevelopment Agency, and such agency shall have the power to acquire and assemble real property by purchase, exchange, gift, dedication, or eminent domain, and including the power to rent, maintain, manage, operate, repair, clear, transfer, lease, and sell such real property, but excluding the power to build new structures thereon, other than the improvements mentioned in 7 (i) or the power to enlarge, extend, or make major structural improvements of existing buildings.

It sets up a commission and appropriates funds for its administration—another Federal agency, another addition to our bureaucracy. When, I ask, in the name of heaven, are we going to stop this thing of adding to and enlarging bureaus, boards, and commissions, and enhancing their power?

It appropriates $20,000,000 for the project. The argument has been made that this is a private-enterprise venture, yet the Federal Government appropriates $20,000,000. It is said it is not for the purpose of building houses. What is the $20,000,000 for? What are you going to build on this land? Of course, it is a building project. It is for the purpose of constructing and repairing homes, and the Federal Government puts in $20,000,000.

This bill lays down a pattern for the whole country, just as was done with respect to the Alley Dwelling Authority. Here is one of the main objections to this measure, and, if for no other reason, it should be defeated.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Is it not a fact that if they have dwellings that are unsanitary and are not up to the proper standard, the people who own the real estate and own those properties can either be made to fix it up or have the property razed, so that if they are not fit to be used for dwellings, why should the Federal Government do everything for the people of the District or any other city?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. The gentleman, of course, is absolutely correct about that.

Now, this matter of fixing maximum rent that must be charged for these houses, gives the Federal Government complete jurisdiction and control over this whole matter. What is the difference between controlling and owning?

That is the way Hitler did it. I think it was Dorothy Thompson who said that in Russia they take your cow and milk, too; that in Germany they let you keep your cow, but take the milk. That is about what this proposition means. At any rate if the Federal Government can control the rents in these buildings it might just as well own them and I say that the objections to this measure are so great that it ought to be defeated.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Insofar as fixing rentals for the projects is concerned, does not the gentleman agree that a rental has to be fixed in order to liquidate the project if the Federal Government put any money into it? If there were no set rental there would be no assurance of returning the funds.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. The argument I make is that there should be no project at all, the Federal Government ought to stay out of this kind of business.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Will not the gentleman agree that for a period of years in this Nation, long before the war, private enterprise was given a full opportunity to correct some of the insanitary living conditions but did not do it?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I have more faith in private enterprise in America, and I feel if these things were left alone, if the Government did not interfere, that the conditions mentioned would be solved and solved right.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. McDONOUGH. I know the experience we ran into in the city of Los Angeles, where on a small lot hardly large enough for one family, four or five were permitted to live, for the man who owned the property wanted to get all he could out of it. When you consider the fact that these people could not have satisfactory living conditions it had to be corrected, something had to be done to overcome it.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. It may be true that something has to be done, but I doubt whether this is the way to do it.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Something has to be done.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I hope I can bring to the attention of the House the reason why we have an alley dwelling problem in Washington.

In the days of the Civil War we had fine large homes in the city and people moved in along with their servants, their slaves; they had quarters for them. They had fine stables, they had a place to quarter their horses, and so Washington flourished as a very fine southern town; but as the trend to modernism began to touch Washington these stables were vacated; sometimes they were converted into garages when an automobile was acquired. But the fact of the matter is that we had a lot of fine brick structures—at least they were fine at one time—along the alleys of Washington, and when they were no longer in use for the original purpose, itinerant families moved right in and continued to live there in squalor and in poverty and in filth. The result is that we have thousands of alley structures in Washington today. We realize, of course, that we have to have some correction, that some curative power had to be applied, and back in 1934 we set up the Alley Dwelling Authority. Because it had limited power it could deal only with limited parcels at a time, and the progress made in a period of 12 years has been rather disappointing to me; and yet I do not blame the Alley Dwelling Authority because they were operating under an act into which the Congress wrote restrictions and limitations to such extent that they could not get results.

The amazing thing is that in this year of our Lord and this year of grace 1946 that kind of situation should still prevail in what we are pleased to regard as the Nation's Capital, the finest city in the United States, and we hope, the finest city in the whole wide world; but anybody who goes to the trouble of cruising around Washington, examining the alleys and alley dwellings at times necessarily hangs his head in shame that so many thousands of families are occupying such squalid property.

As a member of the District Committee, and this is my fourteenth year on that committee, I made it my business on many occasions to start out and devote portions of afternoons and evenings to an investigation and an examination of a good many of these dwellings. It makes you really heartsick at times. But I go back to the fact that the Alley Dwelling Authority does not have authority enough to cope with this problem. This is going to be a continuing problem for 50 or 100 years to come unless we address ourselves to it with vigor and provide some kind of an agency that is to be empowered to deal with the problem.

The bill now before you seeks to create a redevelopment authority and the reason it does so is because you have to assemble areas of terrain, you have to move in and take over a generous portion, let us say, and redefine it, rezone it, replan it; then make it available, not to a governmental agency to build necessarily but to a private corporation that will agree by contract to carry out that plan. My good friend and brother the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH] said that we are creating a planning commission in this bill. We do nothing of the kind. The Capital Park and Planning Commission has existed ever since I can remember, was authored by a Republican Senator, Senator CAPPER, of Kansas, and it has been functioning for a long time to beautify the Nation's Capital in order to give us more spacious areas and parks and to make it a city that is truly befitting the prestige of a great city in the United States. So we do not create a planning commission. That Planning Commission has been authorized and has been receiving appropriations I expect for 20 or more years. It is doing a reasonably good job.

Mr. Speaker, a block of blighted property in an area is assembled so that it becomes a project area. It must first have the approval of the Park and Planning Commission; then this property may be sold to a private corporation for the building of homes if the corporation will agree to abide by the plan. That is a very sensible proposition, in my judgment.

My good friend and brother referred, of course, to the $20,000,000 involved here. To be sure there is authorized here an appropriation for $20,000,000, but before you comment on it too much you want to reexamine the language of the bill. I know that the Members as such serving on busy committees do not have time to always measure and explore this legislation, but you should not attack too lightly legislation that has received the sustained attention of the District Committee for more than 2 years. I am in Mr. SMITH's corner when it comes to private enterprise and I can say to you that this bill has the endorsement and support of the private-housing people in Washington.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I believe I am correct in making the statement that the people who are interested in private enterprise and private building in Washington offered this measure as a means of stopping the United States Housing Authority from further extension and has not offered the bill on its merits.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Does the gentleman say that with authority?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I believe I do.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Does the gentleman say he states that with authority?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I believe I do.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I beg to differ with the gentleman because I do not believe there is any authority for the statement. These people come to my office rather than to other offices and they come to the offices of members of the District Committee. They give you all the literature, they give you their own viewpoint. We have had the public housers, we have had the slum clearance group; we have had the private-enterprise group; and I can say on my own responsibility, as a Member of this House and as a member of the District Committee, that I know this bill begets the support of the private-enterprise group in Washington.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I believe I know something about the background for the development of this program, too. I want to say to the gentleman that I have been consulted about it, so that I am fully aware of the development of the program from its inception to its present state, and I reassert, what I said before, that the objective of this particular program is to defeat further extension of the United States Housing Authority Act in the District of Columbia.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Well, the gentleman is fully entitled to share that view and graciously do I accord him that privilege. But I say on my responsibility as a Member, with authority—and I can go to that room and call up and get that authority verified within the next 5 minutes—that this bill has the support and the endorsement of private-enterprise groups here in Washington.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. With what vigor should they prosecute the work under this bill? Are they supposed to go ahead and take the $20,000,000 and try to contract for as much property as they can and change it as fast as possible, or do they have years in which to complete it?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I hope they will prosecute this program with genuine vigor, because they have a job that must be done. We provide $20,000,000 out of the Federal Treasury, and that $20,000,000 becomes a trust fund, so you are expending out of the trust fund in proportion as slum property is assembled and then resold or leased to private parties, whether it be a development corporation or otherwise, and the proceeds then go into that trust fund. We operate for a period of 10 years, and after that time whatever the balance is in that fund is covered into the miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury of the United States. Consequently this is in the nature of an advance. We hope it will be self-liquidating. I am not prepared now to say whether it will be self-liquidating or not; it may be. But if we get back the principal without interest involved, I would be very happy about it.

But the point is that the accrual of income, in the form of rent and the increment from sales of property, is to be covered into this trust fund, and at the end of 10 years, whatever is the balance—if it is $20,000,000, all right; if it is $10,000,000, all right; if it is $15,000,000 or $25,000,000 all right—whatever it is, it goes into the miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury. In the event of a deficit, the District of Columbia and the United States would share the deficit.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself five additional minutes.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, my own belief would be this: Personally I am interested in getting rid of a lot of these properties that we have in the District. I think they are a disgrace. I would not have them in my town; I just would not be a party to a town that would have such a disgraceful place where people live. But if you are going to spend $20,000,000 and then purchase these properties and then sell them to real-estate agents, and they, in turn, build properties, you are not going to make anything out of it. You are going to lose. Well, that is all right, too; I am not interested in that. But I am interested in whether or not you are going to prosecute this job as fast as possible and if the bill aims to do that, for this reason: There are so many places in this country today where things have to be and ought to be done. This is one thing that could be delayed a little while, and only in case we have workers who need these jobs should this be prosecuted, in my judgment. I do not think we ought to try to start something here now when there are so many other things that are so important for this Nation to do, and this is not one that ought to be given the right-of-way above many others.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I submit to my friend, as a very successful businessman, and all the world knows that he is, that when you undertake to assemble——

Mr. RICH. I am one step ahead of the sheriff.

Mr. DIRKSEN. When you undertake to assemble blanket property and you work out a plan, you try to lay out the streets, whatever parking is necessary, whatever park areas are necessary, and children's playgrounds, if they are to be included. You know it takes a long time to do that. Some folks believe you can start out from scratch and show great results at the end of a year. If this program gets decently under way with most of its preliminary work inside of 1 year I should be very happy about it, and that is the reason it ought to be resolved on the basis of a 10-year program, because of the preliminary steps that have to be taken; the negotiation for and acquisition of property, examination of titles, clearances, and whatever else is involved.

Mr. RICH. I agree with the gentleman on that that it will take time to get the preliminary drawings and plans and specifications ready. But we are short of houses in this country, and we are constantly talking about veterans' houses. If you displace people and tear down these houses you will have to use a lot of material that should go into veterans' houses and help the country generally. This does not have to be prosecuted at the earliest possible moment, we might say, because we can delay it for a term of 2, 3, 4, 5, or 6 years, if necessary.

Mr. DIRKSEN. On the item of displacing people whose homes may be torn down, there is a provision in this bill on page 20 relating to housing of displaced people. The Commissioners must first be satisfied that decent standard dwellings are available before you shove somebody in the street. This bill represents the best efforts of every group that I know anything about in Washington that has an interest in this matter for a period of 2 years for the purpose of reconciling and harmonizing these difficulties. We finally got into that stage, and the last real difficulty was in connection with the definition of low-rent housing, to which my friend from Ohio alluded a moment ago. There are lots of people, even private-enterprise people, who would like to modify that definition to make it apply to the lower 40 percent of people. We tried to make it apply to the lower 20 percent of the people and then see what comes out of it. After a year the definition can be reexamined. The Commissioners will hold a public hearing. They will then recommend or suggest to the Congress any modifications that might be made. But the authority to translate the modification into law still reposes in the hands of the Congress, where it very properly belongs. So, when all is said and done, this is an excellent piece of work in bringing these divergent groups together. I sincerely hope this bill will pass without a dissenting vote.

Mr. RICH. We are going to tell the ones in authority that they are not to throw people out in order to get these properties, and that they must take their time because of the scarcity of materials, until the whole country gets the benefit? If they do that, then I would be in sympathy with this legislation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself two additional minutes.

There is a proviso here for an annual report. Do not forget that constantly these people are coming back before the House Committee on Appropriations, and there is always an opportunity to examine into their operations and to call them to account.

Mr. RICH. You are going to give them $20,000,000 now?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; but the District Commissioners, who have an integral part in this whole business, are coming up before Congress every year on their annual budget. Of course, while their budget may not be involved, the whole operation of the District of Columbia is involved when they justify their expenditures before our committee.

Mr. RICH. When the District budget comes before you, and they want to have these child day-care centers continued, I think that matter should be looked into carefully. In many cases in the District the father and the mother are both working, making $10,000 a year. They leave their children for some maid to take care of, and we appropriate money for that care. I do not want any more of that. I want you to keep those women at home. Let them take care of their children as ordinary mothers would do and as mothers should do. If you appropriate any money for that, then I would be against a lot of legislation the District wants and ought to have.

Mr. DIRKSEN. My friend has a great and swelling heart that beats in sympathy with the needy veterans. Suppose a soldier has been killed overseas and his widow lives here in Washington and has two children. She finds herself a $1,620 job in the Government. What happens to the children if she cannot farm them out to anybody? That is what we have done.

Mr. RICH. I think we ought to help that woman whose husband has been killed.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is what we have been doing.

Mr. RICH. However, I do not think we ought to do it that way. That mother has a greater desire to care for those children than anybody else. If the condition in which she finds herself is the fault of the Government, then we ought to take care of her and the children, and let that mother stay at home with her children.

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, this legislation is meritorious. A measure somewhat different, but in essence the same as the bill now presented for your consideration, passed the Senate of the United States on October 18, 1945. There was no disposition within the House District Committee to act hurriedly on an important problem of this type. A subcommittee therefore was appointed and the members of that group went thoroughly into the subject matter of the Senate bill and developed many ideas in the testimony which were helpful not alone to the subcommittee but to the full committee in considering the bill S. 1426, which has been reported from the House District Committee to the floor for your consideration and I trust favorable action this afternoon.

The gentleman from Illinois, Representative DIRKSEN, the ranking minority member of the House District Committee, has given a very concise and very fair statement of the purposes involved in the legislation and of the details of the administration and the agency, if it is created, which would be established through the passage of this measure. I desire once again to reiterate what the gentleman from Illinois, Representative DIRKSEN, said during his discussion—that it is not contemplated that this new land agency shall build or operate housing on the land that it acquires here or elsewhere. It is believed that private parties will be encouraged to undertake such building and that, therefore, the program will be one which in essence combines the best features of public and private housing.

If, however, private capital should fail to meet this opportunity then, and only then, would public redevelopment corporations be given an opportunity to build and operate projects.

This it is to be noted will be only after private enterprise as represented through a responsible private development company, individual, or partnership shall have been given a preference over any public redevelopment company. Certainly this proposed legislation seeks to provide private enterprise in the District of Columbia with an opportunity to meet the need here for low-rent housing.

I think it is important to say to my colleagues once again that we are not passing legislation for the city of Washington, D. C.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to my friend, the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I must take sharp exception to that because of your low real-estate tax rate in the District of Columbia. You have a rate of $1.75, which is way below the rate of other cities of the same size. I feel the District of Columbia is in a position to take care of this situation without calling upon the rest of the country to finance the program.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I realize the contention of the gentleman from Ohio. He is in sharp disagreement with me and I am in sharp disagreement with him. I repeat, we are not passing legislation today, if this bill receives your approval, for the city of Washington. We are acting in our capacities, individually and collectively, for the District of Columbia, which is the Capital—our Federal Government, our United States, as it were, from the standpoint of this tremendously important city. The questions raised today in the minds of several gentlemen, including the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], are questions which have a right to be discussed on this floor. I have felt on many occasions that not the criticisms but the constructive viewpoints expressed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania are helpful to the Committee on the District of Columbia and to others who attempt to legislate for this jurisdiction. He has pointed out many times the fears that he has and he has asked us, who have an interest with you, of course, in the passage of this type of legislation, to embrace logical thinking as we carry forward any such agency as would be created by this bill.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RICH. I am inclined to be very sympathetic about this because of the conditions in these alleys. They are not fit to live in. But I want it to be done at a rate that is not going to discommode the rest of the country. I want the ex-service men and women to have an opportunity first to get what they need and then to have this work done gradually, which will benefit both the District of Columbia and the country at large.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman is correct.

The displacement of the slum areas in the District of Columbia is a matter of prime importance and this Congress, acting not for the city of Washington but for the National Capital has a responsibility to eliminate insofar as possible the disgraceful living conditions which we all know exist at the present time.

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I would like to ask this question On page 30, line 9, does this not lay down a pattern for the country?

Mr. RANDOLPH. No; I do not believe there is any pattern laid down for the country by the passage of this legislation. It deals with the District of Columbia, with the elimination of slum areas within this jurisdiction. I cannot see why any plan or any set procedure, which later may or may not be followed by the Federal Government, would be involved.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. But it says, "legislation authorizing Federal assistance to localities for purposes of land assembly." What localities?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Well, here we are dealing with the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. But general legislation authorizing Federal assistance.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes; but we are not passing general legislation.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. But it speaks about passing general legislation later.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I believe the gentleman's fear is not well founded. Perhaps the gentleman desires to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has again expired.

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES].

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, with so much to do in the House this week, I know we should give consideration to matters of such importance as embraced in this bill. However, this bill is not being brought in during the closing hours under suspension of the rules or with any idea of rushing it through or in any way having it appear that haste has been entered into in the proper consideration of this bill.

This bill was filed in October 1945. It has been under consideration by the Senate and House Committees on the District of Columbia over that long period of time. I well recall in the early part of this year this bill came to the House Committee on the District of Columbia and we were not satisfied with the Senate bill. We wanted very definite changes made in the construction of the bill, in order that proper slum clearance could be carried out in the District of Columbia, as the House committee felt it should be.

It has been thoroughly considered, and it now comes here with the unanimous support of the membership of the House Committee on the District of Columbia, and we do hope that the House in the closing hours of this Congress will see fit to enact it into law.

This bill simply creates another agency for the purpose of clearing property within the District of Columbia, thereby hoping that private industry, through the procedure set up, will take hold of the local housing projects and develop it along private housing lines.

We have seen a lot of public housing and we have been very, very much disappointed with the way much of it has been carried on. The purpose of this bill is not to rush the program, but is for the purpose of setting up this agency so that they can make a thorough study, survey, and estimate of the costs, and then, in cooperation with the Planning Commission, have this community lay out a sensible, well-developed program of housing.

When I came to this Congress 10 years ago, it was uppermost in my mind, as it probably is uppermost in the mind of every Member who comes here for the first time, or many of the citizens who come here for the first time, how thoroughly disgusted we were with the housing and the character of dwellings in which the people of this community lived. Here we are in the Capital City of the Nation, in the greatest Nation of the world, with the most blighted areas that can be found anywhere from one end of this country to the other. It seems to me that we as Members of Congress have a great responsibility in this matter, where we control, by legislation at least, the municipal activities within the confines of this District.

I want to say just these words in support of this bill irrespective of what my friend from Pennsylvania may think of some other project which I agree with him on that recently passed, this is a bill that I can support with a great deal of pride and satisfaction; and I hope the members of the House will approve it.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. BUCK. I gather from page 29 that it is contemplated the Federal Government will stand 50 percent of the deficits. Is that correct?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. That is if there is any deficit existing at the end of the accounting period then the District must supply 50 percent of that and the Federal Government 50 percent.

Mr. BUCK. And a deficit is contemplated, is it not? Because on page 22 is mentioned a price of one-third of the resale value of the real estate acquired.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. It was brought about because of the impossibility of foretelling what the actual operating expenses or revenue might be. We are very hopeful that this will be a self-liquidating proposition. If it is not then the District will be compelled to pay 50 percent of the deficit and the Federal Government the other half.

Mr. BUCK. If it is contemplated to be self-liquidating why is that one-third provision on page 22?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. In order to take care of any deficiency that might develop. In a tremendous program of this sort it is impossible to know just what all the circumstances will be and we believe that the Congress of the United States has a very definite interest in the District of Columbia. With all the ramifications of governmental activities here it would take a good many hours to discuss. We think there is sufficient interest on the part of the Congress of the United States to cooperate with the District in this tremendous undertaking which will mean so much to the welfare of this great city of ours.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. McDONOUGH].

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the committee I am here to say that I favor the passage of this bill.

It is unfortunate that private enterprise has not done the job over the years with the opportunity they have had to do it. I am very much in favor of private enterprise doing the job. If they had done it this bill would not be necessary. I think for the benefit of those who have any doubts about it that the general purposes as a whole in the bill should be read, and I am going to proceed to read part of section 2:

SEC. 2. It is hereby declared to be a matter of legislative determination that owing to technological and sociological changes, obsolete lay-out, and other factors, conditions existing in the District of Columbia with respect to substandard housing and blighted areas, including the use of buildings in alleys as dwellings for human habitation, are injurious to the public health, safety, morals, and welfare; and it is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to protect and promote the welfare of the inhabitants of the seat of the Government by eliminating all such injurious conditions by—

By creating the development authority this bill sets up.

It certainly cannot be a matter of pride to any of the Members of the House or to the Congress or to the people of the Nation to realize that there exists in the capital of the United States places of improper habitation which affect the public health, safety, morals and welfare of the people here. I think the history which was reviewed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] a few minutes ago is a pretty good background of the reason for this bill. Places that were suitable for habitation 25, 30, or 50 years ago are still being used for human habitation. If private enterprise does not do something about it then it is up to the Congress or some authority to do something about it just the same as we found it necessary to build highways in order to prevent the necessity for the continuation of toll roads across the Nation which were controlled by private enterprise in those years.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDONOUGH. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Why cannot the District of Columbia raise its real estate tax rate and derive funds from that source to do this job?

Mr. McDONOUGH. That is a matter of consideration, possibly; but I do not know how much the rate would have to be raised in order to create sufficient funds.

I doubt whether a tax rate necessary to raise this amount of money would be a fair proposition to the people of the District of Columbia to relieve a situation of this kind.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. It is something that ought to be solved locally. If we are going into these matters all over the country, where will we be in the end?

Mr. McDONOUGH. The gentleman is a medical man. Does he have any answer to the question of public health, the morals, safety, and welfare of the people if private enterprise does not do something to provide suitable habitations in a congested city like Washington?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. There is nothing in the history books which indicates that private enterprise has failed. So far as the matter of health is concerned, there is nothing on record to indicate that governments have ever done anything in the long run to improve the health of the people by the building of houses.

Mr. McDONOUGH. I do not agree with the gentleman's statement. Insofar as private enterprise alone or public participation doing this job, as I said before, if they had done it this bill would not be necessary.

This bill gives private enterprise every opportunity. If we take these blighted areas by condemnation and allow proper value for the land and the buildings, setting up an area in which they will agree to build suitable habitations for the people who are now living in unsuitable habitations, what can be the objection to that if private enterprise does not do it?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, in reading the title of this act one would suppose that it is entirely for the District of Columbia. However, I would like to refer to page 30 of the bill. It seems to me that lines 9 to 18, inclusive, should be eliminated from the bill. This subsection reads as follows:

(d) In the event that, subsequent to the passage of this act, Congress enacts general legislation authorizing Federal assistance to localities for purposes of land assembly and preparation for redevelopment, any Federal agency allocating such assistance shall, in extending such assistance to the District of Columbia, take into consideration the assistance of similar nature authorized under this act, with a view to assuring that other localities may be equitably treated with respect to Federal aid for land assembly and preparation for redevelopment.

It seems to me that the House should strike that section from the bill. I can see no reason why it would injure the bill for the District of Columbia if that section is eliminated and I shall offer an amendment at the proper time to that effect. There is no reason why we should not eliminate that provision applying to other cities. They can come in and ask for an appropriation and have this committee go into it if they want to. They are all in better financial condition than the Federal Government, every one of them.

I want to do what I can for the District of Columbia because I have visited some of these streets and I have observed some of the residences in the District of Columbia. People live in some places here that people back in my community would not live in. They are in a badly dilapidated condition, unsightly, unsanitary, and in need of repair. I want to help the District of Columbia but I do not believe we should bite off more than we can chew and extend it to other cities of this great country of ours. It is not sound business for the Congress to do.

The fact of the matter is that the Federal Government is worse off financially today than any community in the United States or any State in the United States. Therefore you should not assume any more burdens if you are going to take care of this country and see that we remain solvent.

I hope that the membership will eliminate section (d) on page 30 of this bill.

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of the time.

Mr. Speaker, this bill, S. 1426, was passed by the Senate on October 18th of last year. Since that time the House Committee on the District of Columbia has given most careful consideration to the problem of the eradication of slum areas in the District of Columbia. Any of you who have taken the trouble to drive around this city must be convinced of the fact that some redevelopment program must be put into effect for this fine city of Washington. It seems to me that the city of Washington should be the show place of the entire United States. Unless action along the line proposed in this bill is taken by the Congress, we will continue to have such slum area as we find at the present time in the District of Columbia.

The bill does not completely meet the desires of those who believe in public housing, nor does it meet the desires of those who are strong advocates of exclusive private housing programs. However, in my opinion, it is a compromise bill which will do a great deal of good for the District of Columbia, one which was finally worked out in the House committee, and I wish to strongly urge the passage of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "District of Columbia Redevelopment Act of 1945."

GENERAL PURPOSES

SEC. 2. It is hereby declared to be a matter of legislative determination that owing to technological and sociological changes, obsolete lay-out, and other factors, conditions existing in the District of Columbia with respect to substandard housing and blighted areas, including the use of buildings in alleys as dwellings for human habitation, are injurious to the public health, safety, morals, and welfare; and it is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to protect and promote the welfare of the inhabitants of the seat of the Government by eliminating all such injurious conditions by employing all means necessary and appropriate for the purpose; and control by regulatory processes having proved inadequate and insufficient to remedy the evils, it is in the judgment of Congress necessary to acquire property in the District of Columbia by gift, purchase, or the use of eminent domain to effecuate the declared policy by the discontinuance of the use for human habitation in the District of Columbia of substandard dwellings and of buildings in alleys and blighted areas, and thereby to eliminate the substandard housing conditions and the communities in the inhabited alleys and blighted areas in such District; and it is necessary to modernize the planning and development of such portions of such District. The Congress finds that the foregoing cannot be accomplished by the ordinary operations of private enterprise alone without public participation in the planning and in the financing of land assembly for such developmet; and that for the economic soundness of this redevelopment and the accomplishment of the necessary social and economic benefits, and by reason of the close relationships between the development and uses of any part of an urban area with the development and uses of all other parts the sound replanning and redevelopment of an obsolescent or obsolescing portion of such District cannot be accomplished unless it be done in the light of comprehensive and coordinated planning of the whole of the territory of the District of Columbia and its environs; and that this comprehensive planning and replanning should proceed vigorously without delay; and to these ends it is necessary to enact the provisions hereinafter set forth; and that the acquisition and the assembly of real property and the leasing or sale thereof for redevelopment pursuant to a project area redevelopment plan, all as provided in this act, is hereby declared to be a public use.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. The following terms, whenever used or referred to in this act, shall, for the purposes of this act and unless a different intent clearly appears from the context, be construed as follows:

(a) The term "agency" means the District of Columbia Redevelopment Land Agency established by section 4 of this act.

(b) "District Commissioners" means the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

(c) "Housing" includes housing, dwelling, habitation, and residence.

(d) "Housing project" means any low-rent housing (as defined in the United States Housing Act of 1937, U. S. C., title 42, ch. 8), the development or administration of which is assisted by the United States Housing Authority.

(e) "Land" includes bare or vacant land, or the land under buildings, structures, or other improvements; also water and land under water. When employed in connection with "use," as for instance "use of land" or "land use," "land" also includes buildings, structures, and improvements existing or to be placed thereon.

(f) "Low-rent housing" means safe and sanitary housing within the financial reach of families of comparatively low income and, as a guide for the standard of rental to be used as a maximum at the time of the enactment of this law but not necessarily thereafter, it is specified that such housing shall be rented at not more than $13 per room per month, excluding utilities.

(g) "Lessee" includes the successors or assigns and successors in title of any lessee.

(h) "Planning Commission" means the National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

(i) "Proceeds" means the money proceeds of sales or transfers by the Agency; and "net proceeds" means the gross proceeds after deducting commissions or other expenses of the sales or transfers.

(j) "Project area" is an area of such extent and location as may be adopted by the Planning Commission and approved by the District Commissioners after public hearing as an appropriate unit of redevelopment planning for a redevelopment project separate from the redevelopment projects for other parts of the District of Columbia. In the provisions of this act relating to lease or sale by the Agency, for abbreviation "project area" is used for the remainder of the project area after taking out those pieces of property which in accordance with section 7 (a) of this act shall have been or are to be transferred for public uses.

(k) "Public low-rent housing" means low-rent housing constructed by a public agency for families whose net family income does not exceed the income level (as determined, or from time to time redetermined, after public hearing, by the District Commissioners) at which a family of comparable size may be reasonably able to afford to pay the lowest rental at which private enterprise is providing an adequate supply of decent, safe, and sanitary housing.

(l) "Purchaser" includes the successors or assigns and successors in title of any purchaser.

(m) "Real property" includes land; also includes land together with the buildings, structures, fixtures, and other improvements thereon; also includes liens, estates, easements, and other interests therein; and also includes restrictions or limitations upon the use of land, buildings, or structures other than those imposed by exercise of the police power.

(n) "Redevelopment" means replanning, clearance, redesign, and rebuilding of project areas, including open-space types of uses, such as streets, recreation and other public grounds, and spaces around buildings, as well as buildings, structures, and improvements, but not excluding the continuance of some of the existing buildings or uses in a project area. For the purposes of this act, "redevelopment" also includes the replanning, redesign, and original development of undeveloped areas which, by reason of street layout, lot lay-out, or other causes, are backward and stagnant and therefore blighted and for which replanning and land assembly are deemed necessary as a condition of sound development.

(o) "Redevelopment company" means a private or public corporation or body corporate, whether organized under the District of Columbia Code or the laws of the United States or any State, or an unincorporated association, trust, or other legal entity, which, by virtue of the statutes, charter, articles of incorporation, instruments of trust, or other instrument defining its powers, has the power to become a lessee or purchaser of a project area and to conform to the provisions of this act and to perform fully and comply with the terms of the lease or sale of such area or part thereof to it.

(p) "Rentals" means the rents specified in a lease to be paid by the lessee to the Agency; "net rentals" means gross rentals after deducting taxes payable by the Agency.

(q) "Revenues" means the revenues or income received by the Agency from real property while held by it and operated or temporarily let by it and not yet leased, transferred, or sold by it; and "net revenues" means the gross revenues after deducting repair, management, maintenance, insurance, and other operating expenses and taxes paid or payable by the Agency.

(r) "Substandard housing conditions" means the conditions obtaining in connection with the existence of any dwelling, or dwellings, or housing accommodations for human beings, which because of lack of sanitary facilities, ventilation, or light, or because of dilapidation, overcrowding, faulty interior arrangement, or any combination of these factors, is in the opinion of the Commissioners detrimental to the safety, health, morals, or welfare of the inhabitants of the District of Columbia.

ESTABLISHMENT AND POWERS OF THE AGENCY

SEC. 4. (a) The District of Columbia Redevelopment Land Agency is hereby established and shall be composed of five members. Two members shall be appointed by the President and three members shall be appointed by the District Commissioners, subject to confirmation by the Senate. One of the Presidential appointees may be an official of the United States Government; one appointee of the District Commissioners may be an official of the District of Columbia Government. Each nonofficial appointee shall have been a resident of the District of Columbia for at least the five next preceding years, and shall have been engaged or employed during such time in private business or industry, or the private practice of a profession, in the District of Columbia. The terms of members shall be for 5 years, except that the first appointment of one of the Presidential appointees shall be for 3 years and the other for 5 years; one of the first appointments of the District Commissioners shall be for 4 years, one for 2 years, and one for 1 year: Provided, That in the event any member shall cease to hold the official position held by him at the time of his designation or appointment, such cessation shall be deemed to create a vacancy in his membership on the Agency, such vacancy, as well as all vacancies from other causes, to be filled by designation or appointment by the President or District Commissioners for the unexpired term. The members shall receive no salary as such, but those members who hold no other salaried public position shall be paid a per diem of $20 for each day of service at meetings or on the work of the Agency.

(b) The said District of Columbia Redevelopment Agency is hereby made a body corporate of perpetual duration, the powers of which shall be vested in and exercised by the board of directors thereof, consisting of the five members thereof appointed as above set forth. It shall have the power to adopt, alter, and use a corporate seal which shall be judicially noticed; to make contracts; to sue and be sued, to complain and defend in its own name in any court of competent jurisdiction, State, Federal, or municipal; to make, deliver, and receive deeds, leases, and other instruments, and to take title to real and other property in its own name; to adopt, prescribe, amend, repeal, and enforce bylaws, rules, and regulations for the exercise of its powers under this act or governing the manner in which its business may be conducted and the powers granted to it by this act may be exercised and enjoyed, including the selection of its chairman and other officers, together with provisions for such committees and the functions thereof as it may deem necessary for facilitation of its work; to protect and enforce any right conferred upon it by this act, or otherwise acquired including any lease, sale, or other agreement made by or with it; and in general to exercise all the powers necessary or proper to the performance of its duties and functions under this act.

POWER TO ACQUIRE AND ASSEMBLE REAL PROPERTY

SEC. 5. (a) Subject to and in accordance with the procedures, conditions, and other provisions of this act, the Agency is hereby granted the power to further the redevelopment of blighted territory in the District of Columbia, and the prevention, reduction, or elimination of blighting factors or causes of blight, and for that purpose to acquire and assemble real property by purchase, exchange, gift, dedication, or eminent domain, and including the power to rent, maintain, manage, operate, repair, clear, transfer, lease, and sell such real property, but excluding the power to build new structures thereon (other than the improvements mentioned in section 7 (i) or the power to enlarge, extend, or make major structural improvements of existing buildings).

(b) Condemnation proceedings for the acquisition of real property for said purposes shall be conducted in accordance with the procedural provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the acquisition of land in the District of Columbia for the use of the United States," approved March 1, 1929 (45 Stat. 1415), or acts which may amend or supplement said act. The title to properties acquired under this present act shall be taken by and in the name of the Agency and proceedings for condemnation or other acquisition of property shall be bought by and in the name of the Agency.

GENERAL AND PROJECT AREA REDEVELOPMENT PLAN

SEC. 6. (a) The Planning Commission is hereby directed to make and, from time to time, develop a comprehensive or general plan of the District of Columbia, including the appropriate maps, charts, tables, and descriptive, interpretative, and analytical matter, which plan is intended to serve as a general framework or guide of development within which the various project areas may be more precisely planned and calculated, and which comprehensive or general plan shall include at least a land-use plan which designates the proposed general distribution and general locations and extents of the uses of the land for housing, business, industry, recreation, education, public buildings, public reservations, and other general categories of public and private uses of the land.

(b) For the exercise of the powers granted to the Agency by this act for the acquisition and disposition of real property for the redevelopment of a project area, the following steps and plans shall be requisite, namely:

(1) Adoption by the Planning Commission of the boundaries of the project area proposed by it, submission of such boundaries to the District Commissioners, and approval thereof by said Commissioners.

(2) Adoption by the Planning Commission and submission to, and, after a public hearing thereon, approval by the District Commissioners, of the redevelopment plan of the project area which shall contain a site and use plan for the redevelopment of the area, including the approximate locations and extents of the land uses proposed for and within the area, such as public buildings, streets, and other public works and utilities, housing, recreation, business, industry, schools, public and private open spaces, and other categories of public and private uses. Such plan shall also contain specifications of standards of population density and building intensity. Any such plan may also specify, by means of specification of maximum rentals or other basis, the amount or character or class of any low-rent housing for which the area or part thereof is proposed to be redeveloped.

(c) In relation to the location and extent of public works and utilities, public buildings, and other public uses in the general plan or in a project area plan, the Planning Commission is directed to confer with the Federal and District public officials, boards, authorities, and agencies under whose administrative jurisdictions such uses respectively fall. In the project area planning, the Planning Commission is directed to consult from time to time with the Agency, and the Agency shall be free at all times to submit to the Planning Commission suggestions regarding both the location and extent of project areas and the use and site plans of project areas.

(d) After a project-area redevelopment plan shall have been adopted by the Planning Commission and approved by the District Commissioners, the Planning Commission shall forthwith certify said plan to the Agency, whereupon said Agency shall proceed to the exercise of the powers granted to it in this Act for the acquisition and assembly of the real property of the area. Following such certification, no new construction shall be authorized by the District Commissioners in such area, including substantial remodeling or conversion or rebuilding, enlargement or extension or major structural improvements on existing buildings, but not including ordinary maintenance or remodeling or changes necessary to continue the occupancy.

TRANSFER, LEASE, OR SALE OF REAL PROPERTY IN PROJECT AREA FOR PUBLIC AND PRIVATE USES

SEC. 7. (a) After the real property in the project area shall have been assembled by the Agency, the Agency shall have the power to transfer to and shall at a practicable time or times transfer by deeds to the United States or to the District of Columbia, or to the appropriate Federal or District public body, department, or agency, those pieces of real property which, in accordance with the approved project area redevelopment plan, are to be devoted to public uses (other than public housing) falling within the construction or administrative jurisdiction of Federal or District agencies, such as streets and other utilities and works, Federal and District public buildings, public recreational spaces, and schools. The Federal agencies and the public agencies of the District of Columbia are hereby empowered, respectively, to acquire real property from the Agency for the uses respectively specified in the project area plan and to pay for same out of their funds duly appropriated for such acquisition. Excepting for such property as may be transferred by dedication, gift, or exchange, the transferee agency shall pay to the Agency such sum as may be agreed upon or, in the absence of agreement, as may be fixed by the Attorney General.

(b) The Agency shall have the power to lease or sell the remainder of the project area as an entirety to a redevelopment company or to an individual or a partnership. Said remainder may include streets or parts thereof which in accordance with the plan are to be closed or vacated or other than publicly owned properties; and the Federal and District departments and agencies are empowered to transfer said spaces or properties to the Agency for such sums or other consideration as may be agreed upon.

(c) Any such lease or sale may be made without public bidding but only after a public hearing, after 10 days' public notice, by the agency upon the proposed lease or sale and the provisions thereof.

(d) The term of any such lease shall be fixed by the Agency and the instrument of lease may provide for renewals upon reappraisals and with rentals and other provisions adjusted to such reappraisals. Every such lease or sale shall provide that the lessee or purchaser shall carry out or cause to be carried out the approved project area redevelopment plan or approved modifications thereof and that no use shall be made of any land or real property included in the lease or sale nor any bidding or structure erected thereon which does not conform to such approved plan or approved modifications thereof. In the instrument, or instruments, of lease or sale, the Agency may include such other terms, conditions, and provisions as in its judgment will provide reasonable assurance of the priority of the obligations of the lease or sale and of conformance to the plan over any other obligations of the lessee or purchaser and also assurance of the financial and legal ability of the lessee or purchaser to carry out and conform to the plan and the terms and conditions of the lease or sale; also, such terms, conditions, and specifications concerning buildings, improvements, subleases, or tenancies, maintenance and management, and any other related matters as the Agency may reasonably impose or approve, including provisions whereby the obligations to carry out and conform to the project area plan shall run with the land. In the event that maximum rentals to be charged to tenants of housing be specified, provision may be made for periodic reconsideration of such rental bases, with a view to proposing modification of the project area plan with respect to such rentals.

(e) Until the Agency certifies that all building constructions and other physical improvements specified to be done and made by the purchaser of the area have been completed, the purchaser shall have no power to convey the area, or any part thereof, without the consent of the Agency; and no such consent shall be given unless the grantee or mortgagee of the purchaser obligates itself or himself by written instrument to the Agency to carry out that portion of the redevelopment plan which falls within the boundaries of the conveyed property, and also that the grantee, his or its heirs, representatives, successors, and assigns, shall have no right or power to convey, lease, or let the conveyed property or any part thereof or erect or use any building or structure erected thereon free from the obligation and requirement to conform to the approved project area redevelopment plan or approved modifications thereof.

(f) In lieu of the lease or sale of a project area as an entirety, the Agency shall have the power to lease or sell parts of such area separately to individuals, partnerships, or redevelopment companies. Any such sale or lease of a part or parts of a project area shall be fully subject to the provisions of subsections (c), (d), and (e) of this section.

(g) No lease or sale of any project area or portion thereof shall be made by the Agency to any public redevelopment company unless the terms of such lease or sale shall provide greater compensation to the Agency than any offer or combination of offers based on substantially the same area and substantially the same redevelopment plan which shall be received from any responsible private sources (eligible as purchasers or lessees under this act) within a reasonable announced period of time (not less than 30 days) after the public hearing on such proposed lease or sale. It is the intent of this provision that private enterprise as represented through a responsible private redevelopment company, individual, or partnership shall be given a preference over any public redevelopment company in such lease or sale provided such preference can be given, in the judgment of the Agency, consistently with the protection of the public interest and consistently with a purpose to resort to a public redevelopment company only in the event that private enterprise shall not reasonably be available for the development of the project area or the part thereof under consideration.

(h) The Agency may itself demolish any existing structure or clear the area or any part thereof, or may specify the demolition and clearance to be performed by a lessee or purchaser within a reasonable time after such lease or purchase. The Agency may specify a reasonable time schedule and reasonable conditions for the construction of buildings and other improvements by a lessee or purchaser: Provided, That any such time schedule or condition shall be specified prior to the offering of the area or part thereof for lease or sale, and shall be equally binding upon any purchaser or lessee, public or private. The cost of demolition or clearance made by the Agency pursuant to this subsection shall be treated as an item of cost of the acquisition of the area.

(i) In order to facilitate the lease or sale of a project area or, in the event that the lease or sale is of parts of an area, then to facilitate the leases or sales of such parts, the Agency shall have the power to include in the cost payable by it the cost of the construction of local streets and sidewalks within the area or of grading and other local public surface or subsurface facilities necessary for shaping the area as the site of the redevelopment of the area. The Agency may arrange with the appropriate Federal or District agencies for the reimbursement of such outlays from funds or assessments raised or levied for such purposes.

HOUSING FOR DISPLACED FAMILIES

SEC. 8. (a) Prior to approval by the District Commissioners, pursuant to subparagraph (2) of subsection 6 (b), of any redevelopment plan, the District Commissioners shall satisfy themselves (and shall so state at the public hearing required by such subparagraph) that decent, safe, and sanitary housing, substantially equal in quantity to the number of substandard dwelling units to be removed or demolished within the project area, under the proposed redevelopment plan, are available or will be provided (by construction pursuant to the redevelopment plan, or otherwise) in localities, and at rents or prices, within the reach of the low-income families displaced or to be displaced (temporarily or permanently), pursuant to the redevelopment plan, from the project area.

(b) Families displaced by slum clearance or redevelopment under this act shall be given preference as tenants to fill vacancies occurring in housing owned or operated within the District of Columbia by Federal or District of Columbia governmental agencies until appropriate housing is available to such families.

ACQUISITION OF PROPERTY FROM PROSPECTIVE LESSEE OR PURCHASER

SEC. 9. As an aid in the acquisition of the real property of a project area, the Agency may accept a fund or, at an agreed value, any parcel or parcels of property within such area, from any redevelopment company or partnership or individual, subject to a provision that in the event the supplier of any such fund or the conveyor of such property shall become the purchaser of the project area or any part or parts thereof such fund or the agreed value of such property shall be credited on the purchase price of such area or part thereof and if there be an excess above the cost of acquisition of the area such excess shall be returned, and that in the event that such supplier or conveyor does not become the purchaser of such area or any part thereof, the amount of the fund or the agreed value of such property (as the case may be) shall be paid to such supplier or conveyor.

USE-VALUE APPRAISALS

SEC. 10. After the Agency shall have assembled and acquired the real property of a project area, it shall, as an aid to it in determining the rentals and other terms upon which it will lease or the price at which it will sell the area or parts thereof, place a use-value upon each piece or tract of land within the area which, in accordance with the plan, is to be used for private uses or for low-rent housing, such use-value to be based on the planned use; and, for the purpose of this use valuation, it shall cause a use-value appraisal to be made by two or more land-value experts employed by it for the purpose; but nothing contained in this section shall be construed as requiring the Agency to base its rentals or selling prices upon such appraisal.

The aggregate use value placed, for purposes of lease or sale, upon all land, within a particular project area, leased or sold by the Agency pursuant to this act shall be not less than one-third of the aggregate cost to the Agency of acquiring all such land (excluding the cost of old buildings destroyed and the demolition and clearance thereof).

PROTECTION OF REDEVELOPMENT PLAN

SEC. 11. (a) Previous to the execution and delivery by the Agency of a lease or conveyance to a redevelopment company or previous to the consent by the Agency to an assignment or conveyance by a lessee or purchaser to a redevelopment company, the articles or certificate of incorporation or association or charter or other basic instrument of such company shall contain provisions so defining, limiting, and regulating the exercise of the powers of the company that neither the company nor its stockholders, its officers, its directors, its members, its beneficiaries, its bondholders, or other creditors or other persons shall have any power to amend or to effect the amendment of the terms and conditions of the lease or the terms and conditions of the sale without the consent of the Agency or, in relation to the project area redevelopment plan, without the approval of any proposed modification in accordance with the provisions of section 12 of this act; and no action of stockholders, officers, directors, bondholders, creditors, partners or other persons, nor any reorganization, dissolution, receivership, consolidation, foreclosure, or any other change in the status or obligation of any redevelopment company, partnership, or individual in any litigation or proceeding in any Federal or other court shall effect any release or any impairment or modification of the lease or terms of sale or of the project area redevelopment plan unless such consent or approval be obtained.

(b) Redevelopment corporations may be organized under the provisions of subchapter 4 of chapter XVIII of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia approved March 3, 1901, as amended (title 29, ch. 2 of the District of Columbia Code, 1940 edition); and said corporations shall have the power to be redevelopment companies under this act and to acquire and hold real property for the purposes set forth in this act and to exercise all other powers granted to redevelopment companies in this act subject to the provisions, limitations, and obligations set forth in this act.

(c) A redevelopment company, individual, or partnership to which any project area or part thereof is leased or sold under this act shall keep books of account of its operations of or transactions relating to such area or part thereof entirely separate and distinct from its or his accounts of and for any other project area or part thereof or any other real property or enterprise; and no lien or other interest shall be placed upon any real property in said area to secure any indebtedness or obligation of the redevelopment company, individual, or partnership incurred for or in relation to any property or enterprise outside of said area.

MODIFICATIONS OF REDEVELOPMENT PLANS

SEC. 12. An approved project area redevelopment plan may be modified at any time or times: Provided, That any such modification as it may affect an area or part thereof which has been sold or leased shall not become effective without the consent in writing of the purchaser or lessee thereof: Provided further, That such modification may be effected only through adoption by the Planning Commission and subsequent submission to and approved by the District Commissioners, as hereinafter provided. Before approval, the District Commissioners shall hold a public hearing on the proposed modification, notice of the time and place of which shall be given by mail sent at least 10 days prior to the hearing to the then owners of the real properties in the project area and of the real properties immediately adjoining or across the street from the project area. The District Commissioners may refer back to the Planning Commission any project area redevelopment plan, project area boundaries, or modification submitted to it, together with their recommendation for changes in such plan, boundaries, or modification, and, if such recommended changes be adopted by the Planning Commission and be in turn approved by the District Commissioners, the plan, boundaries, or modification as thus changed shall be and become the approved plan, boundaries, or modification.

LIMITATION UPON TAX EXEMPTION

SEC. 13. Nothing contained in this act shall be construed to authorize or require the exemption of any real property from taxation. No real property acquired by the Agency under this act shall be exempt from taxation by reason of such acquisition or by reason of the holding thereof by the Agency; and, in the case of any piece of real property, which, under the project area redevelopment plan, is designated to be used for Federal or District or other tax-exempt uses, the exemption of such real property from taxation granted by or in the act entitled "An act to define the real property exempt from taxation in the District of Columbia (Public Law 846, 77th Cong.)," or other statute, shall not commence until title thereto shall have been transferred from the Agency to the United States or the District of Columbia or to a Federal or District public agency as provided in section 7 of this act or sold or leased to a public redevelopment company or other public corporation or tax-exempt agency and may thereby become exempt from taxation by reason of the provisions of statutes other than this present act; the intention being that ownership or operation by the Agency in the exercise of its power under this present act shall not, in and of itself, produce tax exemption.

ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENDITURE AND EMPLOYMENT

SEC. 14. The Agency is hereby authorized and empowered—

(a) to procure services or make any purchase without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, provided the aggregate amount involved is not more than $100;

(b) to secure planning, land economics and valuation services, and other expert services related to the acquisition and disposition of real property, by contract or otherwise, at rates of pay or fees not to exceed those usual for similar services elsewhere, and without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, and to section 3709 of Revised Statutes, as amended: Provided, That this exemption shall not apply to persons employed by the Agency on a permanent basis;

(c) to appoint and employ such officers and employees as it may find necessary for the proper performance of its duties under this act and to prescribe their authorities, duties, responsibilities, and tenures and fix their compensations; such appointments and employments to be made in conformance with the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; and

(d) to make such expenditures, subject to audit under the general law, for the acquisition and maintenance of adequate vehicles, furnishings, equipment, supplies, books of reference, directories, periodicals, newspapers, printing and binding, and for such other expenses as may from time to time be found necessary for the proper administration of this act.

ANNUAL REPORT

SEC. 15. On or before the last day of September of each year the Agency shall make an annual report to Congress of its operations and expenditures for the immediately preceding fiscal year, said report to include a financial balance sheet of its entire operations hereunder, and a recital in such particularity as is feasible of what the Agency proposes to do during the next succeeding fiscal year. The Agency shall make such other and further reports, in such form and at such times as the Congress by concurrent resolution shall require.

APPROPRIATIONS AUTHORIZED

SEC. 16. (a) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, whatever amounts are necessary to the Planning Commission, in addition to other funds which may be appropriated to it or private funds made available to it (the acceptance of which is hereby authorized), for the making or modification of a general or comprehensive plan and the making or modification of project area redevelopment plans and for surveys as authorized in this act, and other administrative expenses in connection therewith. The Commission is also authorized to receive any grants that the Congress may appropriate for said purposes to the various States and municipalities and the District of Columbia.

(b) There is further authorized to be appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,000,000, which sum shall be placed to the credit of a special trust fund to be established for the purposes hereinafter set out. There shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States and credited to said special trust fund all revenues, rentals, proceeds, and other funds received by the Agency. The said special trust fund is hereby made available to the Agency for the purpose of acquiring real property and performing any act required or authorized by this act. The Agency shall from time to time submit to the District Commissioners estimates of amounts for the reasonable and necessary expenses of the Agency, including personal services, and such amounts as may be approved by the District Commissioners shall be available from the said special trust fund for such expenses.

(c) As of the last day of the tenth fiscal year beginning after approval of this act, or as of such later date as may be fixed by the Congress, there shall be transferred and credited to miscellaneous receipts of the United States the balance in the said special trust fund after deducting (a) such amount as may be necessary for the completion of any approved project the acquisition of which has been begun and (b) such amount for operating expenses of the Agency for 1 year as may be approved by the District Commissioners. If the balance so transferred and credited be insufficient to reimburse the United States for appropriations made pursuant to paragraph (b) of this section, then an amount equal to 50 percent of the deficit shall be payable to the United States from revenues of the District of Columbia in installments of equal amounts for each of 10 years. The District Commissioners shall include in their annual estimates of appropriations items for the payment of such installments. The aforesaid deficit shall be determined by deducting from the total of said appropriations an amount equal to (a) the fund transferred and credited to miscellaneous receipts of the United States, (b) the cost to the Agency of the real property owned by it on said date, and (c) the reserve for completion of approved projects. All subsequent proceeds, revenues, and rentals from said real property shall be credited to the said special trust fund, to be disposed of as the Congress may direct.

(d) In the event that, subsequent to the passage of this act, Congress enacts general legislation authorizing Federal assistance to localities for purposes of land assembly and preparation for redevelopment, any Federal agency allocating such assistance shall, in extending such assistance to the District of Columbia, take into consideration the assistance of similar nature authorized under this act, with a view to assuring that other localities may be equitably treated with respect to Federal aid for land assembly and preparation for redevelopment.

ACQUISITION UNDER DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA ALLEY DWELLING ACT

SEC. 17. From and after the termination of the period of 3 years, beginning with the date of the approval of this act, all authority granted by the act known as the District of Columbia Alley Dwelling Act, approved June 12, 1934, as amended, to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or gift, lands, buildings, and structures, or any interest therein, is hereby transferred to and vested in the Agency created by this act. During said 3-year period said authority may be exercised by the National Capital Housing Authority only for projects that shall have been approved by the Planning Commission and the District Commissioners: Provided, however, That failure of the Planning Commission or the District Commissioners to approve or disapprove in writing within 60 days after the submission by the National Capital Housing Authority shall be equivalent to a formal approval. Nothing contained in said Alley Dwelling Act or in this act shall be interpreted as precluding the inclusion at any time of any alley or inhabited alley or alley dwelling or dwelling or square containing an inhabited alley in a project area to be planned, acquired, and disposed of under the provisions of this act. Any real property acquired by the Agency under the authority of the Alley Dwelling Act may be transferred or may be sold or leased by the Agency as provided in this act for real property acquired for a project area redevelopment. The National Capital Housing Authority is hereby declared to be a redevelopment company and is hereby granted the power to purchase or lease redevelopment areas or parts thereof from the Agency in accordance with the provisions of this act.

CRIMINAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 18. (a) On and after July 1, 1955, it shall be unlawful for any owner of such property to use or occupy, or to lease or rent, or permit occupancy of any alley building or alley structure as a dwelling in the District of Columbia.

(b) No alley dwelling shall be constructed in the District of Columbia, nor shall any building or structure be moved, altered, or converted for use as an alley dwelling.

(c) Any person violating any of the provisions of this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment for not more than 6 months or both. Each week of 7 days of the continuance of any such violation shall constitute a separate offense.

ENCOURAGEMENT AND AID TO PRIVATE LENDING INSTITUTIONS

SEC. 19. (a) To provide for and to facilitate the improvement of housing and other improved real estate in the District of Columbia, Federal savings and loan associations of the District of Columbia and building associations and building and loan associations operating under the laws of the District of Columbia are authorized, notwithstanding any other provision of law, to make loans for the improvement of homes or other improved real estate in the District of Columbia without security: Provided, That no such loan without security shall be made in a sum in excess of $2,000.

(b) Any financial institution or other lending organization operating under the laws of the United States or the District of Columbia is authorized, notwithstanding any other law or regulation, to make loans to redevelopment corporations to finance the improvement of any project area as provided in this act.

EFFECT UPON EXISTING STATUTES

SEC. 20. (a) In the making and approval of project area redevelopment plans, the Planning Commission and the District Commissioners shall not be limited or bound by the provisions of sections 7-108, 7-117, 7-122, and 7-301 of the District of Columbia Code (1940 edition) (act of March 2, 1893, 27 Stat. 532, ch. 197, sec. 1; act of May 31, 1900, 31 Stat. 248, ch. 599, sec. 2; act of March 4, 1913, 37 Stat. 949, ch. 150; act of March 3, 1901, 31 Stat. 1429, ch. 854, sec. 1608, as amended) relating to width, location, and length of streets and highways. No department, instrumentality, agency, or official of the Federal Government or of the District of Columbia shall have any power to release or modify or depart from any feature or detail of any approved redevelopment plan or part thereof unless such release, modification, or departure be adopted by the Planning Commission and approved by the District Commissioners in accordance with the provisions of section 12 of this act or unless the modification or departure be approved by act of Congress.

(b) Any power granted the District Commissioners or any District or Federal agency by the District of Columbia Code or by any statute may, in addition to the purposes now specified, be exercised in furtherance of the protection or carrying out of any redevelopment plan or modification made and approved under this act.

SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS

SEC. 21. If any provisions of this act or the application thereof to any body, agency, situation, or circumstances be held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to other bodies, agencies, situations, or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 22. This act shall take effect 90 days after the date of its approval.

With the following committee amendments:

Committee amendments: Page 5, beginning on line 14, strike out all of section (k) and insert:

"(k) 'Public low-rent housing' means low-rent housing constructed by a public agency for families of low income, at rentals which (including the value or cost to tenants of heat, light, water, and cooking fuel) shall not exceed one-fifth of the highest net family income of families eligible for tenancy in such housing, as herein provided. The dwellings in public low-rent housing shall be available solely for such families of low income whose net family income does not exceed the maximum net family income falling within the lowest 20 percent by number of all family incomes in the District of Columbia, as such maximum net family income shall have been determined, or from time to time redetermined after public hearing, by the District Commissioners. At the end of 1 year after the enactment of this act this definition shall be reexamined by the Commissioners for the District of Columbia and a public hearing shall be held thereon to determine whether administrative or interpretive difficulties or unsatisfactory progress in the provision of low-rent housing requires a modification thereof. Upon the conclusion of such hearing the Commissioners shall forthwith make recommendations to Congress whether said definition should be modified and, if so, to what extent."

Page 31, line 25, after the period insert the following: "The National Capital Housing Authority shall keep regular books of account in accordance with standard auditing practices, covering all properties operated by it, showing detailed construction costs, management costs, repairs, maintenance, other operating costs, rents, subsidies, grants, allowances, and exemptions; such books shall be subject to annual audit by the General Accounting Office, and the annual report of the National Capital Housing Authority shall include a summary of all transactions covered by such books and shall be made available to the public upon request."

Page 2, strike out all of lines 10 to 22, inclusive, and insert the following:

"AMENDMENT TO DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA ALLEY DWELLING ACT

"SEC. 18. (a) Section 4 (b) of the act known as the 'District of Columbia Alley Dwelling Act,' approved June 12, 1934, as amended, is further amended to read as follows:

"'(b) On and after July 1, 1955, it shall be unlawful to use or occupy any alley building or structure as a dwelling in the District of Columbia.'

"(b) Section 6 of such act, as amended, is further amended by striking out '1947' and inserting in lieu thereof '1955.'"

Page 34, line 1, after the period insert the following: "Any life-insurance company organized under the laws of the District or formed or organized under an act of Congress is authorized, notwithstanding any other provision of law, to make loans or advances for the purpose of making repairs, alterations, additions, or improvements to homes or other buildings on improved real estate upon which it then holds a first lien to secure a loan previously made, without additional security: Provided, That no such loan or advance shall be made in a sum in excess of $2,000: And provided further, That the amount of such loan or advance when added to the balance due on the original indebtedness shall not exceed the amount originally secured by the first lien."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RICH: On page 30, strike out lines 9 to 18, inclusive.

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, the committee has no objection to this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, I noted in the press recently that President Truman told the National Youth Conference at the White House yesterday that the United States had furnished to date 417,000,000 bushels of food grains to famine relief in foreign countries.

He said it would require much food supplies and aid for the next 2 or 3 years before the job was finished.

Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Republican Food Study Committee for the past 3 years, we have pointed out to the administration in power that more machinery should be turned over to the farmers so that the production of farm products could be increased to take care of the famine areas at the end of the war. We have insisted for 3 years that the War Production Board give priority for the manufacture of farm machinery. Not until July 1 of this year, after 4 years of our pleading, did they place farm machinery on the priority list.

Obviously, this will get very little machinery during the remainder of the year because it takes time to get the materials worked into the finished product.

Mr. Speaker, I want to point out, however, that while our farmers have the know-how to use farm machinery and the ability to get from it the greatest production of food of any people in the world, they have been handicapped by a lack of it. But the matter I want to point out is that during 1945, $163,569,902 worth of farm machinery was shipped abroad of which more than $132,000,000 was in tractors.

I understand that the Civilian Production Administration has ordered 7½ percent of all tractors made in America set aside for exportation to Russia and her satellite nations and that they have directed the exportation of 14,500 tractors to Europe within the next 6 months. Unfortunately, instead of these tractors being exported to wheat countries like Australia, Canada, Brazil, and others, where they can use them, they are going to the rocky and barren countries like Greece, Albania, Czechoslovakia, and Poland. They are going to countries where they cannot be used to any advantage because most of the farms in those countries consist of from 1 to 5 to 10 acres. What they need over there are Missouri mules and horses instead of these fine motor-driven tractors which really are a waste on the part of this country.

Mr. Speaker, the disturbing news comes also that about one-third of these tractors are to be delivered to countries that lie behind the iron curtain and which are controlled by Russia. On the other hand press reports indicate that Russia has made a deal to furnish tractors to Argentina in return for other products. Yet we ship and practically give tractors to these countries which cannot use them which are controlled by Russia. Of course, they are taken from these nations back into the breadbasket country of Russia for use.

To show you that Poland does not know how to use tractors and does not need them, may I point out that during the past 5 years Poland only bought 25 American tractors, Yugoslavia 7, and Albania 1. Yet, today, big-hearted Uncle Sam, or rather the administration representing Uncle Sam which has shipped millions of bushels of wheat to these countries overseas, gives our tractors away while our farmers here who know how to use tractors and need them cannot get them in sufficient quantities, or even enough repairs for such machinery as they may now have. Yet, we ship the tractors we need here by the thousands to those countries over there. Someone may say that they are not given, they are purchased by UNRRA. My answer to that is that of the nations which have put the money in the pool to buy everything that UNRRA buys, the United States has furnished 72 percent and is still giving under UNRRA 72 American dollars of every hundred that is used in purchasing any materials from the United States or any other country.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the administration, which controls the Civilian Production Board, will stop the waste of the people's money by giving these tractors to the countries that cannot use them. We have given them the wheat through UNRRA. In the name of common sense if we must give them the wheat and food stuffs, certainly we should not give away the tractors and farm machinery with which we must produce such grains and foods.

May I point out that weeks ago, before OPA restrictions were lifted and the people of this country could not get meat, that under the direction of the Administration 100,000,000 pounds of the choicest pork cuts were being canned in this country for shipment to Russia through UNRRA. Assuming these choicest cuts were worth 50 cents a pound there, you have $50,000,000 worth of pork being sent to Russia, a nation which has admittedly shown the most unfriendly spirit toward our country and which doubtless is using this food, in part, to extend its political control by subjugating and extending its control over smaller bordering nations.

I understand that meat is being canned according to a recipe provided by the Russian Government. In this connection, may I point out that I received a letter yesterday from an influential citizen of Clinton County, in my district in Illinois, who confirms this statement, and I quote from his letter, as follows:

> On Tuesday of this week I was in St. Louis and had an order from one of our local meat markets to pick up a ham from one of the St. Louis packing houses. I was told there is no ham available, and the party with whom I talked showed me several large portable vats containing choice cuts of pork which he said is being packed for Russia.

He said further:

> Of all the nations in the world, this country is packing choice pork for Russia in spite of the fact that the American people have been clamoring for meat.

Mr. Speaker, no doubt this meat and food is being used for the sole purpose of spreading communism over the nations of Europe which are in urgent need of food. I urge that a committee be empowered to investigate this matter and make a report to the Members of the House at the earliest possible date.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. BUCK: On page 29, line 20, after "to" strike out "50 percent of."

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, we are told that this is supposed to be a self-liquidating project. It is not genuinely intended to be self-liquidating when it contains provision that the real estate may be sold at a third of its value. It seems to me there is very little inducement here to the men administering the project to buy reasonably and to sell advantageously. On the other hand, if my amendment is adopted, what would otherwise be cost to the United States Government will be distributed over a period of 10 years to the District of Columbia instead, thereby relieving the Federal Government of this cost and not assessing the rest of the country for improvements to the District of Columbia. I hope my amendment will be approved.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I trust that the amendment just offered will not be adopted. We hope this will be self-liquidating. We hope that in the acquisition of land in the assembling of these blanket areas that finally can be sold to redevelopment corporations it can be developed to the point where the money will be finally returned to the trust fund and at the end of the 10-year period all of the $20,000,000 will be reimbursed into the miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury. But we do not know for sure whether that will be the case. If it is not the case, and there is some little deficit, the bill provides that the deficit shall be shared by the District of Columbia and the United States. I sincerely hope, in view of the fact this matter has been so carefully projected in the hope it will be self-liquidating but not being sure that it will be, that the original language in the bill will not be disturbed by the amendment. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BUCK].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BUCK) there were—ayes 8, noes 27.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 114, nays 153, not voting 163, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SMITH of Ohio) there were—ayes 115, noes 9.

So the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BILLIONS FOR BRITAIN—NONE FOR AMPUTEES

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, Tuesday there came to the Capitol a group of fine-looking, intelligent young Americans, every one mentally alert, in fine physical condition except that every one of them had in the service of his country lost a limb or a part of a limb. And what were they here for?

They were here asking that the Federal Government, which has spent hundreds of billions of dollars upon schemes conceived by the fuzzy-brained New Dealers, aid them in procuring especially equipped vehicles which would enable them to get to and from their homes and the jobs which they either had secured or had prospects of securing, thus rendering the task of supporting themselves and their dependents more certain.

It is strange indeed that it should be necessary for any group of young Americans who had sacrificed so much to come to Washington on a mission so meritorious. There has been no organized newspaper propaganda spent to further the legislation for which they were asking. The internationalists and one-worlders do not seem interested.

Britain, prior to and during the last war, spent some $12,000,000 convincing Americans they should fight that war and, after it was over, give her other billions in order to establish world trade from which she was the principal beneficiary.

No one knows how many millions or billions were spent prior to, during, and subsequent to this war to extract other billions of dollars from the American taxpayer and divert it into channels which we are told promote foreign trade.

"Foreign trade" are wonderful words and, so far as the average citizen can see, foreign trade means dollars and millions of dollars for a few engaged in commercial enterprise. It means more postwar millionaires.

There is naturally and rightly a great deal of sympathy for these young men who are suffering handicaps because of sacrifices made in the service of our country and it is more than passing strange that those who were so intent upon propagandizing us into the war failed prior to the war to count the cost, if the cost of such a war can be counted, and to make provision for the Americans who were certain to be ruined by it, or whose chances of success have been lessened by the sacrifices they made to win it.

Billions for Britain; billions for Russia; billions for France and China—for every nation and every cause that may be suggested by the internationalists—but a strange lassitude and inaction when it comes to taking care of Americans here at home who were so fortunate as to return; who were so unfortunate as to have left behind in foreign lands a limb or a part of a limb, the loss of which prevents them from competing with the rest of us upon an equal footing.

It is my hope that the internationalists and the "one world" advocates who always remind us we are dependent upon Britain; who are always telling us that England is our first line of defense; who always insist that without England we as a Nation would be wiped out, turn their attention, now that the real fighting is over, just for a moment from their international schemes and do justice to these young men whose representatives appeared here yesterday, and to the other young men and women who served us so faithfully, so courageously, and at such tremendous sacrifice in the war which saved the British Empire from destruction.

War was the goal of the internationalists. They have had it. Now let them come forth and assist in passing legislation which will, in part at least but in very small part, meet the needs of those who assisted in winning that war.

I was one of those who had faith in America and in her ability to defend herself and her institutions from any enemy, from any combination of enemies. I am one of those who today believe that the interests of America and her people should be given first consideration and, had I my way, I would have our country first take care of every unfortunate, needy American before alining ourselves with the group which in the Old World is playing power politics; establishing once more a balance-of-power alinement.

The gift of approximately $4,000,000,000 to Great Britain means either that we take our place by her side as her ally, join her in every quarrel and every war in which she may become involved or that, if we intend to hold ourselves out as fair and impartial, we give proportionate sums to Russia, France, China—to every other country which may be persuaded to ask us for aid. Either course means a surrender of a part of our sovereignty, a loss of our freedom; of national independence and action; a partnership and military alliance with the British Empire; committed to follow her in all her imperialistic policies or if she so decides, give support to her socialistic schemes.

Why not retain our own form of government; our own independence in international affairs; keep ourselves invincible; maintain ourselves in a position where as the most powerful Nation we can determine the course of world events by our ability to decide world issues which concern us by calling the attention of would-be aggressor nations to our power.

Here at home let us first take care of our own and, when caring for our own, let us first give consideration to those young men and young women who have returned either with mind affected or physically handicapped.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Koerber, its assistant enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 305) entitled "Joint resolution providing for membership and participation by the United States in the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization, and authorizing an appropriation therefor," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MURRAY, Mr. TUNNELL, and Mr. BRIDGES to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1717) entitled "An act for the development and control of atomic energy," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MCMAHON, Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. VANDENBERG, and Mr. AUSTIN to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ATOMIC ENERGY ACT OF 1946

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 1717) for the development and control of atomic energy, with House amendments thereto, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. MAY, THOMASON, BROOKS, CLASON, and THOMAS of New Jersey.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I call up the bill (S. 2142) to provide for two heads of departments of military science and tactics in the public schools of the District of Columbia, and ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Board of Education is hereby authorized to establish in the public schools of the District of Columbia two positions, each with a title "head of department of military science and tactics." Persons shall be appointed or promoted to such positions in accordance with the provisions of the District of Columbia Teachers' Salary Act of 1945, as amended, and shall be entitled to receive salaries at the same rate as heads of departments assigned to salary class 17 of the salary schedules set forth in title I of said act.

SEC. 2. That the act entitled "An act to provide for the payment of a military instructor for the high-school cadets of Washington, District of Columbia," approved June 4, 1935, is hereby repealed.

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, at the present time instruction in the high schools of the District of Columbia in military science is being given by teachers in the high-school system. In the colored schools as well as in the white schools one teacher is acting as head of the department of military science and receiving no additional pay therefor. This bill provides for the establishment of a department of military science and tactics in the high schools and creates two positions, each with the title of head of that department. This would mean that the teacher, who is given the responsibility for formulating and directing the program, would receive compensation comparable to that received by heads of other departments in the school system.

The bill meets with the approval of the local board of education as well as the District Commissioners. The Committee on the District of Columbia unanimously recommends its adoption.

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEALY. I yield.

Mr. O'HARA. Is there anything compulsory about the military training?

Mr. HEALY. This does not change the features of the military-training program in the high schools. It merely provides for the creation of a Department of Military Science and two department heads.

Mr. O'HARA. Is the military training optional with the students?

Mr. HEALY. That is left the way it is now. I am not acquainted with whether it is optional or compulsory.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INCREASING SALARIES OF EMPLOYEES OF BOARD OF EDUCATION

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 2352) to authorize increases in the salary rates of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia whose pay is fixed and regulated by the District of Columbia Teachers' Salary Act of 1945, as amended, and ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1946, all employees of the Board of Education whose salaries are fixed and regulated by the District of Columbia Teachers' Salary Act of 1945, as amended, except the Superintendent of Schools, shall receive, in addition to the compensation already provided for under such act, as amended, additional compensation at the rate of $450 per annum.

SEC. 2. There is authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District of Columbia not otherwise appropropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act, and any appropriations for the public schools of the District of Columbia for personal services are hereby made available for the payment of the increased salaries authorized by this act.

SEC. 3. The Board of Education is hereby directed to make a study of the pay scales and classifications of the employees of the said Board whose salaries are fixed and determined by this District of Columbia Teachers' Salary Act of 1945, as amended, for the purpose of determining what salary and classification adjustments, if any, may be necessary or desirable, and to make a report, including its findings and recommendations, to the respective chairmen of the Senate and House District Committees not later than February 1, 1947.

SEC. 4. This act shall take effect as of July 1, 1946.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from California briefly explain the bill?

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, Members of the House will recall that in recent months we have passed bills providing for increases in pay for the employees of the postal department of the United States as well as a 14-percent increase for all other Federal workers. This bill is to provide for a flat $450 annual increase for all employees of the Department of Education in the District of Columbia. The amount of the increase is in line with the increases granted to all other Federal employees.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RETIREMENT OF PUBLIC-SCHOOL TEACHERS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 5756) for the retirement of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia, and ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That beginning as of the 1st day of September following the effective day of this act, there shall be deducted and withheld from the annual salary of every teacher in the public schools of the District of Columbia an annual amount computed to the nearest tenth of a dollar equal to 5 percent of the teacher's annual salary. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall cause to be filed with the Board of Education on September 10 of each year a certificate showing the amount of deduction to be made from the salary of each teacher during the year, said deduction to be made in equal amounts, one to be deducted for each school month. A similar certificate shall be filed not later than the 15th day of each calendar month to cover cases of new entrants. No deduction shall be made from less than an entire month's salary. The amounts deducted and withheld from the annual salary of each teacher, including amounts so deducted and withheld prior to the effective date of this act under the act entitled "An act for the retirement of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia," approved January 15, 1920 (41 Stat. 387), as amended, shall be credited to an individual account of the teacher from whose salary the deduction is made, together with interest at 4 percent per annum, compounded annually up to the effective date of this act and thereafter at 3 percent per annum, compounded annually from June 30 of the year in which the deductions are made. These individual interest-bearing accounts shall be kept by the Auditor of the District of Columbia.

Any teacher may at his option and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia deposit with the Collector of Taxes, District of Columbia, additional sums in multiples of $25 but not to exceed 10 percent per annum of his annual salary, pay, or compensation, for services rendered since March 1, 1920, which amount together with interest thereon at 3 percent per annum compounded as of June 30 of each year, shall, at the date of his retirement, be available to purchase an annuity as he shall elect in accordance with such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, in addition to the annuity provided by this act; the purchase price of such annuity shall be based upon an interest rate of 3 percent per annum compounded annually and upon such table of mortality as shall from time to time be prescribed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. In the event of death or separation from the service of such teacher before becoming eligible for retirement on annuity, the amounts so deposited with interest at 3 percent compounded annually from June 30 of the year in which the deposits are made shall be refunded in accordance with the provisions of sections 9 and 10, respectively, of this act. A separate individual account shall be kept by the Auditor of the District of Columbia with respect to the voluntary deposits and interest of each teacher.

SEC. 2. The amounts so deducted and withheld from the annual salary of every teacher, and the amounts of additional voluntary deposits, shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the teachers' retirement and annuity fund. As of the effective date of this act, there shall be transferred and credited to such fund the balances of funds held for the retirement of teachers under the provisions of sections 2 and 7 of the act of January 15, 1920, as amended. The fund thus created shall be held and invested by the Secretary of the Treasury until paid out as hereinafter provided, and the income derived from such investments shall constitute a part of said fund for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act. Separate accounts shall be maintained by the Treasury with respect to (1) the regular operations of the retirement system, exclusive of those incident to the voluntary deposits; and (2) the voluntary deposits and the supplementary annuities and refunds resulting from such deposits.

SEC. 3. (a) Any teacher to whom this act applies who shall have attained or shall hereafter attain the age of 60 years and has rendered at least 30 years of service computed as prescribed in section 8 of this act, or shall hereafter attain the age of 62 years and has rendered at least 15 years of service computed as prescribed in section 8 of this act, may voluntarily retire and shall be eligible for retirement on an annuity computed as provided in section 5 of this act.

(b) Any teacher to whom this act applies who shall have attained or shall hereafter attain the age of 55 years and has rendered at least 30 years of service computed as prescribed in section 8 of this act, may voluntarily retire and shall be paid an immediate life annuity beginning on the first day of the month following the date of separation from the service having a value equal to the present worth of a deferred annuity at the age of 60 years computed as prescribed in section 5 of this act.

(c) Any teacher who shall have attained or shall hereafter attain the age of 62 years and is eligible for retirement under the provisions of this act, may be retired by the Board of Education upon written recommendation of the Superintendent of Schools. Any teacher who shall have attained, or shall hereafter attain the age of 70 years shall be retired unless upon written recommendation of the Superintendent of Schools two-thirds of the members of the Board of Education vote to retain such teacher in the public schools for the good of the service. No sum shall be paid to any teacher upon his retirement unless he shall have been employed as a teacher on active duty in the public schools of the District of Columbia for a total period of not less than 10 years.

SEC. 4. Any teacher to whom this act applies who shall have served on active duty in the public schools of the District of Columbia for a total period of not less than 10 years, and who, before becoming eligible for retirement under the conditions defined in the preceding sections hereof, becomes physically or mentally disabled and incapable of satisfactorily performing the duties of his position, by reason of disease or injury not due to vicious habits, intemperance, or willful misconduct on the part of the teacher, shall upon his own application or upon order of the Board of Education as provided later in this section be retired on an annuity computed in accordance with the provisions of sections 5 and 6 hereof: Provided, That proof of freedom from vicious habits, intemperance, or willful misconduct for a period of more than 5 years next prior to becoming so disabled for useful and efficient service shall not be required in any case. No claim shall be allowed under the provisions of this section unless the application for retirement shall have been executed prior to the applicant's separation from the service or within 6 months thereafter. No teacher shall be retired under the provisions of this section unless examined under the direction of the Health Officer of the District of Columbia, and as a result of said examination, in his judgment, or in the judgment of the Superintendent of Schools concurred in by two-thirds of the members of the Board of Education, shall have been found to be physically or mentally incapacitated for efficient service.

Every annuitant retired under the provisions of this section, unless the disability for which retired be permanent in character, shall at the expiration of 1 year from the date of such retirement and annually thereafter, until reaching retirement age as defined in section 3 hereof, be examined under the direction of the Health Officer of the District of Columbia in order to ascertain the nature and degree of the annuitant's disability, if any. If an annuitant shall recover before reaching retirement age and be restored to an earning capacity which would permit him in the discretion of the Superintendent of Schools and the Board of Education to be reappointed as a teacher in the public schools of the District of Columbia or permit him to secure some other appropriate position, payment of the annuity shall be continued temporarily to afford the annuitant opportunity to seek such available position, but not in any case exceeding 1 year from the date of the medical examination showing such recovery. Should the annuitant fail to appear for examination as required under this section payment of the annuity shall be suspended until continuance of the disability shall have been satisfactorily established. Upon written recommendation of the Superintendent of Schools the Board of Education may order or direct at any time such medical or other examination as it shall deem necessary to determine the facts relative to the nature and degree of disability of any teacher retired on an annuity under this section.

In all cases where the annuity is discontinued under the provisions of this section, the annuity payments made under (1) of section 5 hereof shall be charged against his individual account and, unless he shall become reemployed in a position under the purview of this act, he shall be considered as having been separated from the service for other than retirement purposes and entitled to the benefits of section 9 hereof: Provided, however, That if such teacher were also receiving an annuity because of voluntary deposits made under the provisions of section 1 hereof, such annuity may be continued or, at the option of the teacher, the actuarial reserve value of such annuity may be withdrawn in cash unless the teacher is reemployed in a position within the purview of this act, in which case the amount of such reserve value shall be treated as a voluntary deposit under the provisions of section 1 hereof.

SEC. 5. That following the effective date of this act every teacher who shall be retired under the provisions of section 3 or section 4 of this act shall receive an annuity composed of (1) a sum equal to 1 percent of his average annual salary received during any five consecutive years of allowable service in the public schools of the District of Columbia, at the option of the teacher, for each year of his whole term of service; and (2) an additional sum of $15 for each year of his whole term of service, not exceeding 40. The total annuity shall be fixed at the nearest multiple of 12 cents, and shall be payable monthly. Annuities payable to any retired teacher who has become eligible for retirement because of age as defined in section 3 of this act shall be payable during the lifetime of the annuitant. Annuities payable to any teacher retired on account of disability shall be subject to the conditions set forth under section 4 of this act.

Any teacher retiring under the provisions of this act may, at the time of his retirement, elect one of the following options: (1) He may elect to receive in lieu of the life annuity described herein a reduced annuity of equivalent value providing that, in the event the annuitant shall die without having received in annuities purchased by his contributions accumulated with interest to the date of his retirement an aggregate sum equal to the total amount to his credit at time of retirement, the difference shall be paid in accordance with the provisions of section 10 of this act; or (2) he may elect to receive in lieu of the life annuity as described herein a reduced annuity of equivalent value providing for a life-insurance benefit payable in a lump sum at the time of the annuitant's death. The face amount of such life insurance may be in any amount which the retiring teacher shall designate at the time of retirement but shall not exceed his contributions accumulated with interest to the date of retirement. Payment of such insurance shall be made in accordance with the provisions of section 10 of this act. Any annuitant who elects to receive the reduced annuity with fixed life-insurance benefits may reconvert the value of the life insurance to an additional annuity of equivalent value on any anniversary of the retirement date of said annuitant prior to reaching age 70.

SEC. 6. That in calculating, as provided in section 5, the second part of the annuity of a teacher retired under the provisions of section 4 of this act, a minimum credit of 20 years shall be used in determining the sum allowable to a teacher with less than 20 years of service: Provided, That such minimum credit shall not exceed the total number of years of service which the teacher might have served if continuously employed as a teacher in the public schools of the District of Columbia to age 60.

SEC. 7. The amount of each year's appropriation shall be calculated, on an actuarial basis, as a level percentage of the pay roll of all participants which shall be adequate to cover the liability normally accrued plus a further level amount computed to be sufficient to liquidate the unfunded accrued liability within a period of approximately 20 years after the effective date of this act.

SEC. 8. The whole term of service which forms the basis for determining the amount of the annuity provided in section 5 of this act shall be computed from the date of original employment as a teacher, other than temporary, in the public schools of the District of Columbia. In computing the length of service of retiring teachers credit may be given, year for year, for (a) public-school service or its equivalent outside of the District of Columbia but not to exceed 10 years; (b) continuous temporary service in the public schools of the District of Columbia immediately prior to probationary appointment; (c) service in the government of the District of Columbia or the Government of the United States allowable under the Civil Service Act of 1920, as amended; (d) periods of honorable service in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard of the United States in time of war; (e) all educational leaves of absence with part pay authorized by the Board of Education in accordance with the act of June 12, 1940 (54 Stat. 349); and (f) all other leaves of absence authorized by the Board of Education for purposes or services not heretofore enumerated in this section but not to exceed a total of 2 years within any 10-year period of active service as a teacher in the public schools of the District of Columbia, the first 10-year period to begin on the date of the first probationary appointment as a teacher in the public schools of the District of Columbia: Provided, however, That that portion of the annuity which results from credit for service allowable under (a) and (c) of this section shall be reduced by the amount of any annuity which the retired teacher is entitled to receive under any Federal, State, or municipal retirement or pension system in respect to such service, except that such portion of the annuity after reduction shall not be less than the annuity purchasable with the deposit which the teacher is required to make under the provisions of this section in order to obtain credit for such service: Provided further, That no credit for service prescribed in this section, with the exception of educational leave with part pay, shall be given to any teacher entering the said public schools after June 30, 1926 until he shall have deposited to the credit of the teachers' retirement and annuity fund of the District of Columbia a sum equal to the accumulated contributions and interest which he would have had credited to his individual account if such service had been rendered on active duty in the public schools of the District of Columbia, said contributions to be based on the average annual salary of the class to which the teacher is appointed: Provided further, That all contributions to the retirement fund made by any teacher on educational leave with part pay shall be determined in accordance with the provisions of section 1 of this act, but otherwise no provision of this act shall be interpreted to deprive any teacher employed by the Board of Education of any rights or benefits allowable under the act of June 12, 1940 (54 Stat. 349): Provided further, That if the teacher so elects, he may deposit the required sum in the fund in any number of monthly installments not exceeding 50 with interest at 3 percent per annum compounded annually, upon making claim with the Auditor, District of Columbia, within 1 year of the effective date of this act, or within 1 year after the original probational appointment or reinstatement in the school service, or within 2 years after the date of honorable discharge from the military service: And provided further, That nothing contained herein shall be construed to allow any teacher more than 1 year's credit for all services rendered in any 1 fiscal year.

SEC. 9. Should any teacher to whom this act applies, after having served in the public schools of the District of Columbia for a total period of not less than 10 years and before becoming eligible for retirement, became separated from the service, such teacher may elect to receive a deferred annuity beginning at the age of 62 years computed as provided in section 5 of this act: Provided, That any teacher who becomes separated from the public schools of the District of Columbia for other than retirement purposes and who does not elect to receive a deferred annuity as provided for in this section, shall receive as soon as practicable after separation the refund of deductions, deposits, or redeposits with interest thereon, or any voluntary contributions made under the provisions of section 1 of this act, with interest: Provided further, That no teacher who shall withdraw the amount of his deductions, deposits, or redeposits under this section shall, after reinstatement, be entitled to credit for previous service unless he shall deposit in the fund the amount so withdrawn by him: And provided further, That the amount required to be so deposited may be paid by the teacher, if he so elects, in any number of monthly installments, not exceeding 100, with interest at 3 percent compounded annually.

SEC. 10. Any teacher from whose salary retirement deductions are made in accordance with this act may designate in writing a beneficiary or beneficiaries to whom the amount of his deductions, together with interest then credited thereon, shall be payable, as hereinafter provided, in the event of the death of the teacher before or after retirement.

In the event any teacher shall die before retirement the total amount of his deductions with interest thereon shall be paid, upon the establishment of a valid claim therefor, provided the claim be filed with the Auditor of the District of Columbia within 3 years after the death of such teacher, to the beneficiary or beneficiaries, if a beneficiary or beneficiaries be designated in writing by the teacher and recorded on his individual account, or, if there be no such beneficiary or beneficiaries designated, then to the duly appointed executor or administrator of the estate of the teacher, or, if the amount payable be less than $1,000 and no executor or administrator is appointed, to such person or persons as the auditor, in his judgment, may determine is or are legally entitled thereto.

On the death of a retired teacher who elected to receive a reduced annuity with death benefits, the amount payable, if any, shall be determined according to the terms of the option so elected, and such amount shall be paid upon the establishment of a valid claim therefor, provided the claim be filed with the auditor of the District of Columbia within 3 years after the death of such teacher, to the beneficiary or beneficiaries, if a beneficiary or beneficiaries be designated in writing by the teacher and recorded on his individual account, or, if there be no such beneficiary or beneficiaries designated, then to the duly appointed executor or administrator of the estate of the teacher, or, if the amount payable be less than $1,000 and no executor or administrator is appointed, to such person or persons as the auditor, in his judgment, may determine is or are legally entitled thereto.

SEC. 11. That every teacher who shall continue in the service of the public schools of the District of Columbia after the passage of this act, as well as every person who hereafter may be appointed to a position as teacher in the public schools of the District of Columbia, shall be deemed to consent and agree to the deductions made and provided for herein; and the salary, pay, or compensation, which may be paid monthly or at any other time, shall be full and complete discharge and acquittance of all claims and demands whatsoever for all services rendered by such teacher during the period covered by such payment, except his claim for the benefits to which he may be entitled under the provisions of this act, notwithstanding the provisions of the act of June 20, 1906 (34 Stat. 316), and of any other law, rule, or regulation affecting the salary, pay, or compensation of the teachers employed in the service of the public schools of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 12. That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent the discharge of any teacher at any time in the discretion of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia under the provisions of law.

SEC. 13. That the term "teacher", under this act, shall include all teachers permanently employed by the Board of Education in the public day schools of the District of Columbia, including other educational employees whose salaries are established in the act of June 20, 1906, and acts amendatory thereof, except the employees of the Department of School Attendance and Work Permits; whenever the pronoun "his" occurs in this act it shall be construed to mean both male and female; and the term "annual salary" shall be construed to mean the total annual income received during the fiscal year for service rendered in the public day schools (not including summer schools) of the District of Columbia, including basic salary, automatic increases, and longevity allowances, provided for in the act of June 20, 1906, as amended, and this definition of "annual salary" shall not be construed to affect any deductions which have been made prior to the effective date of this act from any teacher's "annual salary" as defined in the act of January 15, 1920, as amended.

SEC. 14. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall prepare and keep all needful tables, records, and accounts required for carrying out the provisions of this act. The records to be kept shall include data showing the mortality experience of the teachers in the service of the public schools of the District of Columbia and the rate of withdrawal from such service, and any other information pertaining to such service that may be of value and may serve as a guide for future valuations and adjustments of the plan for the retirement of teachers. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall make a detailed comparative report annually to Congress showing all receipts and disbursements under the provisions of this act, together with the total number of persons receiving annuities and the amounts paid them. And the Treasury Department shall prepare the estimates of the annual appropriations required to be made to the teachers' retirement and annuity fund, and shall make actuarial valuations of such fund at intervals of 5 years, or oftener if deemed necessary by the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 15. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall include in their annual estimates of appropriations a sum sufficient to carry out the provisions of this act and acts amendatory thereof. Appropriations made for the purposes of this act shall be transferred to the credit of the teachers' retirement and annuity fund established under section 2 hereof.

SEC. 16. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to perform, or cause to be performed, any or all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into full force and effect.

SEC. 17. That none of the money mentioned in this act shall be assignable, either in law or equity, or be subject to execution or levy by attachment, garnishment, or other legal process.

SEC. 18. The provisions of this act shall apply to all teachers on the rolls of the public schools of the District of Columbia for the month of June 1945, or thereafter, if otherwise eligible: Provided, That nothing in this act shall require the reduction of any annuity any teacher on the rolls of the public schools of the District of Columbia for the month of June 1945, would be entitled to receive, under the provisions of the act of January 15, 1920, as amended, upon retirement. The said act of 1920, as amended, shall not otherwise apply to teachers on the rolls of the public schools of the District of Columbia for the month of June 1945, or thereafter, but such act shall remain in force and effect with respect to teachers retired prior to the effective date of this act, subject to the provisions of section 19.

SEC. 19. The annuities of all teachers retired prior to the effective date of this act shall be recomputed in accordance with the provisions of section 5 of this act: Provided, That the average annual salary during any five consecutive years, specified in section 5, upon which the annuity is based shall be within the last 10 years of allowable service in the public schools of the District of Columbia: Provided further, That the increased amount of the annuity resulting therefrom shall be a straight life annuity without any insurance or death benefits of any kind.

SEC. 20. The provisions of this act shall take effect July 1, 1946.

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, I offer a number of committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendments:

Page 5, line 5, after the word "act", strike out the period and insert the following: "or may elect to receive a deferred annuity beginning at the age of 60 years computed as prescribed in section 5 of this act."

Page 7, lines 4 to 14, strike out "if an annuitant shall recover before reaching retirement age and be restored to an earning capacity which would permit him in the discretion of the Superintendent of Schools and the Board of Education to be reappointed as a teacher in the public schools of the District of Columbia or permit him to secure some other appropriate position, payment of the annuity shall be continued temporarily to afford the annuitant opportunity to seek such available position, but not in any case exceeding 1 year from the date of the medical examination showing such recovery." and insert the following: "If an annuitant shall recover before reaching retirement age, he shall be reappointed by the Board of Education in accordance with such rules and regulations as the said Board may prescribe to the first position, equal or similar to any position in the public schools occupied by the annuitant before retirement, which becomes vacant after the date the Board of Education receives written notification from the health officer of the District of Columbia that the annuitant has recovered and is able to discharge his duties as a teacher in the public schools of the District of Columbia. Payment of the annuity shall be continued until the date of reappointment by the Board of Education. In the event that the annuitant refuses to accept the employment prescribed in this section, no annuity shall be paid after the date of such refusal."

Page 19, line 11, after the word "act" insert the following: "within 90 days after the approval of this act retroactive to the effective date of this act, and no recomputation shall be made which will reduce the annuity received by any retired teacher."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. GRIFFITHS. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GRIFFITHS: On page 11, line 14, after the word "and", strike out the remainder of the line, all of lines 15, 16, 17, and 18, and to and including the comma in line 19.

Mr. GRIFFITHS. Mr. Speaker, this bill as a whole, of course, follows the retirement for civil-service employees. However, the civil service does not have any leave for maternity care. If this section is left in the bill, you will allow a teacher to take 5 years out of a 10-year period, and then, of course, she is allowed to add that 5 on the length of teaching for retirement purposes. In other words, if she has had 25 years, then you add the 5 years' sick leave for maternity, that would make 30 years. It seems to me it is absolutely unfair. It does not follow the retirement in the civil service, because there they can take the regular sick leave and advance leave, but the advance leave is not considered in the retirement. I do not have so much objection to that but I do object to it when they add it on to the retirement.

I hope the amendment is agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HOSPITAL CENTER FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 223) providing for the establishment of a modern, adequate, and efficient hospital center in the District of Columbia.

Pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by myself and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 223, with Mr. TRIMBLE in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the gentleman from Illinois has been a member of the subcommittee which has given consideration to this bill over a long period of time, I believe that, for the benefit of the membership, we should have a full explanation of the bill as passed by the Senate, as well as the substitute bill reported out by the House District Committee by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the bill now before the House authorizes a project that might be known as a municipal hospital center for the District of Columbia.

If ever there was a scandal under the canopy of heaven it is the hospital situation here in Washington. When the authorities who administer some of the hospitals in the District of Columbia appear before the Committees of Congress and there file a statement of facts indicating rats scampering in the hallways of the hospitals; when they state that the facilities have deteriorated to the point where they are certainly far below the equivalent hospital facilities in other areas of comparable size, then certainly it is a situation of affairs that calls for attention.

Everybody has been on the alert about the hospital situation here in Washington for a long time.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. TABER. I understand this bill provides Federal contributions up to about 70 percent.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That would be not quite correct. If the gentleman will permit me to proceed further I will explain what the contribution is.

Mr. TABER. I do not know why the Federal Government should do that.

Mr. DIRKSEN. If the gentleman will permit, I will seek to make that clear to the Members of the House.

A great many organizations and associations of individuals in the Nation's capital have given this matter attention for a long time.

In addition thereto, there has been a hospital association that has been engaged for a number of years in a survey of the facilities and the adequacy of the facilities of hospital beds, hospital equipment, hospital structures and so forth. No one can examine that report without just sort of hanging his head in shame that such a condition is permitted to exist in the Nation's Capital. Out of this combined effort over a long period of time there eventuated a bill introduced in the United States Senate by Senator TYDINGS, of Maryland. When they came to see about getting action on the bill in the House, I asked for a little time to examine it, after which I protested that I could not go along with the bill in that form. The bill as it passed the Senate authorized money to a private agency, over which there was no Federal control. In addition thereto, there was no participation by the authorities of the District of Columbia. Well, obviously if they are going to use the benefits of any hospital center here there is no reason why the people in the District of Columbia should not participate in the expenditure to a reasonable extent.

I quite approve the idea of setting up a municipal hospital center, particularly when you have hospitals that are willing to become components of such center and dispose of their present facilities, throwing the proceeds from the sale of such facilities into a common fund for the purpose of developing that center, then leasing the facilities from such center. My contention was if you are going to do this job there must be a Federal agency that has authority over the fund, over the plans, over the leasing, and that will give the supervision that is so necessary where Federal funds are involved. The bill bounced around for a long time and no action was taken for two reasons. In the first place, no suggestion had been made as to what Federal agency might assume responsibility for such supervision and direction; secondly, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia came in all humility and said that the District is stone broke. At one time it had an unearmarked balance of $35,000 in the general fund. That is the low level to which the unobligated revenues and finances in the District of Columbia had been permitted to deteriorate, not because of any misfeasance or nonfeasance on the part of the Commissioners or the authorities here, but simply because in the last few years the District budget has jumped from $42,000,000 to approximately seventy-one million. I still insisted there ought to be a Federal agency in this picture if you are going to have a hospital center and, second, there should be District participation.

As a result the Federal Works Agency, at my invitation, came into the picture. There was meeting after meeting for a long period of time. We worked out what we thought was a reasonably acceptable formula. In the case of the private hospitals that want to join in the center there is a provision that their facilities will be evaluated, perhaps they will be sold, and that is their contribution to the over-all fund required to construct such a center; second, we had to derive some factor, some participating factor for the District of Columbia. My own notion was perhaps we ought to pay at least 30 percent of the over-all cost, estimated to be $35,000,000. This, then, is predicated upon a formula whereby 20 percent of the cost will be derived from the component hospitals that will join in the center, an additional 30 percent will be derived from the District of Columbia, and the remaining 50 percent will be taken out of the Federal Treasury.

You may wonder why $17,500,000 out of a total of $35,000,000 should be taxed against the people of the United States. There is one reason at least and I do not assign it as a reason for taxing that amount, but I do assign it as a reason for having the Federal Treasury participate in this kind of an enterprise.

There are probably 270,000 Federal workers in the District of Columbia at the present time. Most of them have come from other jurisdictions. There are people here from Missouri, from the district represented so ably by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON]; there are people from my district in Illinois who are working in the confines of Washington at the present time; people from every State of the Union, working here on a formula worked out by the Civil Service Commission many years ago, are on duty at the present time. Unless there are adequate hospital facilities in Washington, we are not only denying the people of Washington adequate facilities, we are denying the facilities to the people from your home district who come here to work as servants of the Federal Government who in moments of illness, in moments of accidents, have no adequate place to which they can repair for proper kind of hospitalization. So there is a very definite benefit that accrues to people from every State in the Union who are domiciled here in the employ of the Federal Government, and whether it should be $17,500,000 or a smaller amount or a larger amount is a matter that I shall not labor particularly, but the best formula we have been able to devise over a long period of time is 20 percent from those who lease these facilities and pool their own fiscal and balance-sheet resources, 30 percent from the District of Columbia, and 50 percent out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. It is not 30 percent out of the District of Columbia as long as it is a matter that they are not paying any interest.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The point is that we tried to meet a very difficult situation that obtains at the present time. I said a moment ago that the District of Columbia is broke. I say now on my own authority that the District of Columbia is stone broke, and it is not an easy matter for the District Commissioners to appear day after day before the Legislative Committee of the District of Columbia with their hats in their hands wondering what kind of relief the Congress is going to provide. It is up to us, after all, to provide a revenue system for the District of Columbia to make it possible for adequate revenues to drift into the District's coffers whereby these facilities can properly be acquired, can be constructed, and the District can assume its full share. So we have a revenue difficulty here, and the bill that is before you, first of all, recites the obligations and makes it a firm obligation which the District shall assume, and then leaves it for a future Congress to determine what kind of revenue system shall be provided here in the District of Columbia with which to finance their 30 percent participating interest.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. There is no question about the need for more hospital beds. What about Columbia Hospital that is presently in existence? Will they get some assistance from this?

Mr. DIRKSEN. It depends on what hospitals undertake to participate in this medical center.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Is it anticipated that the surrounding territory will have the advantage or use of the hospital, or just the District of Columbia citizens?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am quite sure that there will be no effort to restrict, because in the report that was filed in connection herewith it was pointed out that there were only meager facilities in some of the outlying areas, and it is anticipated that people living in the suburbs or over in Arlington, Alexandria, Falls Church, Lyons Park, Chevy Chase, will have some of the benefits.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. After the building of the hospital, will it be self-supporting or self-liquidating?

Mr. DIRKSEN. We only hope that it will be self-liquidating, but that is rather one of these fine and specific features on which you cannot provide a pontifical answer. I only hope that more and more hospitals will share in these facilities, that it will become a great medical center, and the fees will be reasonable and also commensurate with a program that will make itself self-liquidating.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I think it is important in the building of a hospital center that it be put on a sound financial basis so that they will not be coming back to Congress every year and saying "We need $1,000,000." It should show a balance in the treasury.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That matter will be administered by the Federal Works Agency, and I have enough confidence in that Agency, from past performances, to feel that it will do its utmost in the matter of establishing fees or rentals, lease costs and so forth on the basis of previous experience with these hospitals to establish a somewhat nearly self-liquidating basis.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I share with the gentleman his feeling of the need for better hospital facilities and a lot of other improvements in the city of Washington. However, I declare I have never seen a situation which so greatly invited the imposition of a sales tax and thereby a simple solution to a great city's revenue problem as in the case of the city of Washington.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Open confession is good for the soul. I publicly now confess my own sins and derelictions in that respect. When the District of Columbia Commissioners and the special taxing committee recommended a sales tax a number of years ago, it was the gentleman from Illinois who opposed it here and elsewhere and finally kept it from being included in a balanced revenue system. I have tried to make amends for my sins in that respect, however, and I said to them very recently that it ought to be included. I hope when next we tackle the question of adequate revenues for the District of Columbia a sales tax will be included. Insofar as my own feeble talent can be devoted to that matter, it will be included in such a tax structure.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I think that is a splendid statement. I believe that is the way out.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KUNKEL. How are you going to raise the 30 percent from the District, by taxation?

Mr. DIRKSEN. By taxation.

Mr. KUNKEL. Will not the outlying towns that will have the benefit of this service be expected to contribute in proportion?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Not in the construction, but that you can get on the basis of fees charged the people who use the hospital.

Mr. KUNKEL. It seems to me they should contribute to the construction also.

Mr. DIRKSEN. There is no way in which the Congress or the Committee on the District of Columbia can reach them, because they lie outside the constitutional jurisdiction of the District of Columbia.

Mr. KUNKEL. Is there going to be any kind of campaign in Washington for the people to try to help out on this themselves, the way they have been doing in so many cities throughout the country? I know in Harrisburg they raised $2,000,000, and a good portion of it in Carlisle and Lebanon, in collecting funds to build increased hospital facilities.

Mr. DIRKSEN. If the gentleman has observed around town these cards in store rooms "Make It a Million," that refers to the campaign now being conducted in behalf of the Children's Hospital, to raise $1,000,000. So far as I know, that fund is only 15 percent complete at the present moment, notwithstanding the zeal and crusading effort that has been put behind it.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Some years ago we were told that the real-estate tax rate in the District was practically the lowest in the Nation. Has that real-estate tax been boosted to any extent in the last few years?

Mr. DIRKSEN. If the gentleman will take a house of a certain kind, design, and size in the District of Columbia and measure all the charges against it, and then get a comparable estimate from any other jurisdiction in the country, he will find that for 30 cities of a size comparable to Washington, D. C., that house will be about fifteenth down in the list, which means that the taxes in 14 cities will be a little bit higher than Washington and in 15 cities will be just a little bit lower.

Mr. Chairman, this is the best we could do with this bill. I recommend it to the House for favorable action.

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ABERNETHY].

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I shall endeavor in my humble way to explain the various features of this bill section by section. It so happens that I was the only member of the committee who voted against reporting the bill, although several members were absent who would have voted likewise.

Speaking of subsidies, this is unquestionably the most liberal subsidy that has been proposed in this Chamber in the 3½ years I have been here.

I appreciate the fact that hospitals are needed in the District of Columbia. I agree with everything the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] had to say about the deplorable situation in the local hospitals. But as we review this bill I want you to bear in mind that you may have some hospitals in your own States and your own towns which also need improvement, but under this bill they do not get it.

The bill provides first that the program shall be put under way by the Federal Works Administrator. In subsection (a) of section 1 the Administrator is authorized to acquire land. In subsection (b) he is authorized to make plans and surveys looking to the construction of a medical center. In subsection (c) he is authorized to make grants—and they are 100-percent grants—to such private hospitals located in the District of Columbia as do not come into the medical center for the purpose of rebuilding, renovating, extending, equipping, and so forth, their present facilities.

I will pass over section 2.

Section 3 provides for the construction of the hospital center.

Section 4 provides that the Federal Works Administrator may utilize the services of the United States Public Health Service, the Federal Security Agency, and the Federal Works Agency in effectuating this program.

Section 5 provides as follows:

That 30 percent of the net amount expended by the Federal Works Administrator under this act shall be charged against the District of Columbia and shall be repaid to the Government by the District of Columbia—

When will they repay? Listen to this—

at such time—

Not now, not next week, not next month, and not next year, but—at such time and in such amounts without interest as the Congress of the United States shall hereafter—

At some time in the future—determine.

So the manner, means, and time of repayment is most indefinite.

This is a $35,000,000 program. Incidentally, $35,000,000 is not hay. It is proposed that $15,000,000 or more will be required in the construction of the Medical Center and that three hospitals in the District of Columbia—the Garfield Memorial, Emergency, and the Episcopal Eye, Ear, Nose, and Throat—will surrender their properties to the Government and come into and participate in the operation of the Medical Center. The properties of these three hospitals have been valued at $5,000,000, which will be credited against the cost of the Medical Center, leaving a net cost of $10,000,000. Then the District of Columbia will contribute 30 percent of the $10,000,000—not of the $15,000,000, not of the $35,000,000, but 30 percent of the $10,000,000, which means that the District of Columbia will expend only $3,000,000 on a $35,000,000 program. Can you conceive of a more liberal program? I am just as much interested in the improvement of hospitalization in the District of Columbia as any member of the District Committee or any Member of the House of Representatives or of the Congress. I realize and appreciate the fact that there are about 250,000 or 260,000 Federal workers in the District of Columbia. This alone does not justify such liberal Federal participation. The approach to this problem is not the making of a direct grant to the District of Columbia earmarked for the specific purpose of building a certain project. The District of Columbia needs school facilities. Would this not set a pattern for the Federal Government to build schools in the District of Columbia? The District of Columbia needs streets. It needs other facilities. Would this not set a pattern for the Federal Government to bear about 77.5 percent of the costs of other facilities and improvements? The only approach to this problem is through a direct Federal grant to the District of Columbia, justified after full and free hearings. Then when that grant is delivered over to the Commissioners the Commissioners will then determine for themselves how the money should be expended, whether for hospitals, schools, or something else. I do not think the Congress should come in piecemeal fashion and say that we are going to contribute about 77.5 percent of the cost of the District's hospital facilities unless similar contributions are made to all States. And even then I say that grants to that extent are unreasonable.

We have lost track of the remaining $20,000,000. We have only covered $15,000,000 of the $35,000,000 authorization. Follow me now as we discuss the remainder. The hospitals in the District of Columbia which do not come into Medical Center will receive the $20,000,000 absolutely scot free, without one single dime of it being returned to the Federal Government. Not a dime. I confess they may need it, but when you go back home to your constituents and they inquire of you as to why you have not secured a 100-percent grant for your own hospitals, what are you going to say? This bill provides that a District hospital whose facilities are valued at a million dollars may receive a Federal grant of a million dollars and make no return whatsoever to the Federal Government. I understand that the Rules Committee this morning reported out the Burton-Hill bill providing Federal aid for hospitals. I am not as familiar with the bill as I should be, but as I understand it every State in these United States will be treated alike, including the District of Columbia. It is fair to everyone.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ABERNETHY. I yield.

Mr. CHURCH. You spoke of people being here from the various States getting the use of these hospitals. Do they pay for those services, and on what basis?

Mr. ABERNETHY. They pay the usual rates in the hospital that other people pay.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ABERNETHY] has expired.

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. CHURCH. There is no subsidy there? Is there any subsidization that gives them the benefit of reduced rates?

Mr. ABERNETHY. There is no subsidy, to my knowledge. The Federal worker, entering a local hospital, does and should pay the same rate as any other resident of the District of Columbia.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ABERNETHY. I yield.

Mr. COLMER. My attention was diverted, but I believe the gentleman did call attention to the fact that Senate bill 191 will come up shortly, and under that bill the District of Columbia could come in just like your State or my State.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Absolutely.

Mr. COLMER. And pay on the same footing.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Absolutely.

Mr. COLMER. That is only fair; and I want to congratulate the gentleman from Mississippi on the splendid and meritorious fight he is making. I favor Federal aid for hospitalization; but I want to see the District of Columbia come in on the same footing as other communities in your State and mine.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES].

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I regret very deeply that I find myself in disagreement with the majority membership of the District Committee, of which I have been a member for the last 10 years. I am in accord, in general, with the statement made by the other member of the committee, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ABERNETHY] only a moment ago. I want it thoroughly understood at the outset, as I said during the discussion of the slum clearance bill, that I do sincerely believe that the Congress of the United States has a very definite responsibility in the affairs of the District of Columbia. After all, we are the legislative body of this District. It is through the legislative body, the Congress of the United States, that authorization is given to the District to carry on many of its administrative works. I have voted for some bills for the improvement of conditions in the District when they were good bills, but I am opposed to this bill. This bill originated in the Senate many months ago. It came out of the Senate with an authorization estimated to be about $20,000,000. We have had many, many meetings and hearings during the intervening period of time in order to see if we could not lay a sound foundation for the determination of a very critical problem which I agree does exist within the District of Columbia. I do not quite agree with my friend from Illinois, who recently said there was a condition of rats running around hospital corridors or any other such condition in these hospitals is any argument for this bill. That is complete dereliction of responsibility on the part of those who have charge of the hospitals to permit a condition of that kind to exist. Certainly if rats, mice, or vermin of any kind exist in the hospitals, proper steps should be taken to exterminate those conditions by those in charge of the administration of those hospital buildings. It is nothing but dereliction of duty and certainly those who are responsible for that kind of administration ought not to have anything to do with the administration of a fine medical center which I believe, under certain conditions, should be established within the District.

This bill is not for $20,000,000; it is now a $35,000,000 bill, and there is no telling what the ultimate cost will be.

It may interest the Members of the House to know that the Commissioner of Public Health in the District, the man who is responsible for the health conditions in the District of Columbia, is opposed to this bill. The District Commissioners themselves are not in favor of the bill as it now stands, but probably because the District will have to pay part of the cost. I also concur with the District Commissioners that if the District is to be compelled to pay part of the cost the District should be represented on the governing board.

What does this bill provide? This measure provides that the Public Works Administration shall construct these buildings, acquire all the land, even equip the hospitals, and then lease them out to other agencies which in this instance would probably be three hospitals in the District. Three of the hospitals would dispose of their property and turn over the assets to the Public Works Administration estimated to be about $5,000,000 as part of the total cost of $35,000,000 or $40,000,000. Those three hospitals would control the new hospital center.

There is no provision in this bill under which the District Commisisoners or the District itself would have representation on this Board of Governors of this new hospital center.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. On a matter of such magnitude as this it seems to me more study is needed. I have discussed the matter even with the medical experts inside the District and outside the District. It seems to me that while there is a crying need in the District for hospital facilities, there are so many intangibles associated with the greater problem of administration of this great hospital center that more time and study ought to be given by this committee and by the Congress to a study of the facts before we authorize the appropriation of thirty-five to forty million dollars. Another factor that disturbs me, as I say, is the fact that the District of Columbia or even the Federal Government itself, is not represented on the Board of Governors to maintain and carry out this project.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I wish also to point out that although it is anticipated that these three main hospitals will participate in this hospital center no mention is made specifically in this bill as to the names of those hospitals, and there is nothing in the bill that would bind them to go into the program.

Of course, they could come into the program by contract; but no mention is made in the bill of these three hospitals who are to participate in the program. So far as I know they may decide they are not interested.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Not only that, but section C on page 10 provides that the Public Works Administration could make grants to private agencies upon such terms and in such amounts as the Administrator may deem to be in the public interest to enable such private agencies to make surveys and investigations, to plan, design, construct, remodel, relocate, rebuild, renovate, extend, equip, furnish, or repair hospital facilities in the District of Columbia. This provision opens the door wide for every hospital, however large or small, to make application for Federal funds, and secure the same. That was not the original purpose of this bill.

Mr. Chairman, this bill ought to be deferred until the next session of Congress so that in the meantime we may give it further study.

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON].

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Chairman, may I thank the distinguished gentleman on the other side of the aisle [Mr. HEALY] for his courtesy in permitting me to have a few moments of the time of the committee to discuss this matter. I am not going to speak at all about the various sections of the bill or to go into it in any detail. However, I do wish to present to you for your consideration the deplorable conditions that exist in the District of Columbia so far as hospital facilities are concerned.

There are a great many people living in the District of Columbia who do not pay taxes but who expect to be taken care of in hospitals. Take our own secretarial staffs; none of our secretaries are permitted to go to Army or Navy hospitals. When they are ill they have to go to the hospitals of the District. If you know anything at all about the conditions that exist in these hospitals you would be reluctant to have any of your secretaries go to most of these hospitals.

The winter gave me one very heartening experience, however. I could have asked for no better care, no greater consideration than one of my staff received. It was very costly but it was excellent and both she and I are grateful. Unfortunately this is not the general experience.

I laid before the House not very long ago a picture of Gallinger Hospital. I sincerely hope I shall not feel called upon to give you a vivid picture of the other hospitals, the so-called private hospitals, of the District of Columbia that so many hundreds of thousands of people have to use today. I could make that just as dramatic and just as unpleasant.

Let me digress for a moment and tell you that since I brought the situation at Gallinger Hospital to the attention of this body, and the Commissioners found I was serious in my intent to force some improvement in that institution, they have begun to make changes in the department of psychiatry. Raising of civil-service ratings has been requested so that more adequate salaries can be offered not only to the physicians but to the attendants and others down the line. This, Mr. Chairman, is at least a beginning of what we shall hope will be better days for the unfortunates who have to be cared for at the great municipal hospital of the District of Columbia.

Whatever consideration this House today gives to the bill as presented, I think it is imperative for us to realize that the groups who are trying their best to provide adequate care in the hospitals of the District of Columbia for the many patients whose work makes them residents but not taxpayers, it seems to me reasonable that Federal money should play a certain specified part in the picture.

Mr. Chairman, the committee has done an immense amount of work on the bill, and I congratulate and thank them for their conscientiousness in the work that they have done. I sincerely hope that if the bill is at all reasonable it may be considered favorably.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. O'HARA].

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that none of the Members of Congress or their families will have to use some of the hospital facilities in the District of Columbia. If you do you will be impressed as you will never be impressed by anything that I can say of the need for improvement of the conditions existing in those facilities.

As I stand here, I know that some of you are going to vote against this bill with the idea that you are saving the taxpayers some money. But I cannot help but think that just the other day, in the passage of the British loan, I am sure that you provided something for the British to improve their hospital facilities over in England, and I hope that perhaps you might give a little thought and consideration to the city of Washington which needs improved facilities of hospitals so badly.

Mr. Chairman, I agree with some remarks made on both sides of this debate. I agree to this extent, that there must be an improved condition in hospitals here which cannot be given either by the private institutions who operate them or by the District of Columbia, without some means of getting some money. What are we going to do? Are we going on in the way that we have been with the inadequate facilities, with facilities which are a tragedy and a shame to a city of this size in the way of conditions that exist in our hospitals, or are we going to try to do something for the people of the city of Washington?

As the gentleman from Illinois has pointed out, every one of you have people from your district employed here who at some time will be in need of hospital care. The District cannot provide them. Some fifty-odd percent of the land area of the city of Washington is taken over by Government buildings which are off the tax roll. True, there should be some further means of taxation, a sales tax, or whatever it is, but let us not approach this subject with the idea that here is a bad bill because it gives some money and the District is only taxable with 30 percent of it.

The committee that had to deal with this bill worked for months and months upon it. We were subjected to criticism from some of the newspapers. We were subjected to some criticism from some of the protagonists of a hospital program without giving any consideration to the responsibilities that the committee had for providing means to pay for it, and this is the best bill that could be brought out of the Committee on the District of Columbia. I do not think there is anything to the question of putting it off, as the gentleman from Massachusetts said, and let it come back next year and look at it again. I say it is the best bill that the District of Columbia Committee can bring out, and a much better bill from a dollars-and-cents viewpoint for the taxpayers than the bill sent over to us from the Senate.

The simple question is this, as the gentlewoman from Ohio told you. She told us something of the conditions that existed here. We have to meet the situation. Are you going to go on and subject the people of the city of Washington, which includes the people from your district who are working for the Government, and your own families, to the conditions that exist, or are you going to try to do something to improve that situation? This is the best job that the Committee on the District of Columbia can do in bringing to you the kind of a bill that we have. I state that advisedly, and I think the gentleman from Illinois will agree with me that it is the best bill that we can bring out of our committee.

Mr. Chairman, the simple question is this: Are you going on the way you have been going? Do you want to kill this bill? If you do, all right; that is your responsibility. Personally I am going to support it and I am going to urge you to support it, because I think it is something that we need in the city of Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two additional minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. O'HARA. What kind of condition would exist in this city if we had one of these terrible epidemics which come along occasionally? Even without these epidemics our hospital facilities are overcrowded.

There may be criticism of the proportionate basis upon which we pay on this, of 30 percent for the District of Columbia, the balance to be contributed by the three private institutions which expect to go into the hospital center, but these other hospitals are not in position to contribute, and they have the right to get whatever the Federal Works Administrator allows.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HARA. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Is it not a fact that progress is being made on this program now, that George Washington University and Georgetown University and Doctors Hospital have either under way or have programed 700 additional beds for the District?

Mr. O'HARA. Yes; but that is just a drop in the bucket, as anyone who knows anything about this matter knows. Those two institutions got aid, they got grants under special bills passed by this Congress.

Mr. DIRKSEN. And they got 70 percent out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. O'HARA. They got 70 percent out of the Government. That was true of George Washington Hospital and that was true of Georgetown Hospital. Let us not discriminate against the other hospitals of the District who also serve those in need of hospital services.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GAVIN].

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] and the committee for giving me the opportunity to speak out of order at this time.

All the Members of the House recall a few short months ago on VE-day and VJ-day the thankfulness that was in our hearts when the war was brought to an end.

We can recall how a war-torn world turned back to peace with thanks to Almighty God for the great victory, and thanks to our boys who paid for this victory with their lives, and to the thousands of other veterans who returned to us with service-incurred disabilities. These veterans have gone through the horror and hardships of war, the cold and the heat, the filth and fatigue, the misery, mud, and torture of mechanized warfare. These battle-scarred veterans have earned through combat, and deserve every consideration that a grateful Nation can bestow upon them.

So, I am appealing to my colleagues to sign petition No. 32 to discharge the committee from further consideration of H. R. 6304, so that this legislation may be given immediate consideration and acted upon in the House during this session of the Congress.

To the gracious, kind, and thoughtful gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] we are greatly indebted for bringing this proposed legislation to our attention. I know the veterans are most grateful, and fully appreciate her interest and efforts in their behalf. I know that the Members of the House are not unmindful of the sincere and thoughtful interest she has taken in all veteran matters and the world would be a better place to live in if we had more EDITH ROGERS, so I urge my colleagues to sign this petition so that early action can be taken on this legislation.

There is little that we can do for these boys who have made so great a sacrifice, but let us indicate to them, by signing this petition, that we are interested in all of their problems and will leave nothing undone to be helpful to them in any way that we possibly can.

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM].

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I have been interested in this legislation for a long, long time. I have spoken about it privately before the committee and I have listened to the arguments. I do hope and make the plea not to allow our thoughts with reference to money, if any, enter into the consideration of this matter. This is a matter of life and death. I think if any of the Members had gone through this terrible trial that we have gone through in the hospitals in the District, they would come to the same conclusion that we have reached. This is a most necessary thing. There are no votes involved here. It is just a humanitarian thing. It would be terrible to put this over until the next session because during that time many, many lives would be lost. I do hope the membership will give proper consideration to this and look at it from a humanitarian point of view.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, it is my hope that the Members, as they listen this afternoon to the discussion, both pro and con on this proposal, will find it in the interest of proper voting to pass favorably upon this legislation which has been presented by your District of Columbia Committee. I remember well the arguments within the committee itself during the taking of testimony and the dissecting of the Senate bill, and as well as the executive sessions when we attempted to bring the viewpoints of the Senate and House into compromise so that this legislation might receive approval here and concurrence by the committee of conference and thus become law. I have a very genuine regard for the viewpoint of my colleague, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ABERNETHY], a member of the committee. I do, however, differ with him when he speaks this afternoon and says that the addition of 700 beds will go far toward alleviating the need for improvement and expanded hospital facilities in the District of Columbia. I differ with him for the reason that I believe the facts are otherwise. There are now in the District of Columbia hospital beds, possibly making a number of 3,850. We believe additional beds are needed to the extent of 1,150. That would make an over-all figure of 5,000 as a hospital-bed requirement But this is important—we also find upon examination that there are approximately 2,000 beds which are today in use but are obsolete, unsafe, and unsanitary. Then when we use that figure and add it to the figure of 1,150, we have a total necessary bed improvement program of 3,150 as against the 700 beds which the gentleman from Mississippi says will become available within the next few months. We have a deficit, and the facts prove it, of 2,750 beds within the hospitals of the District of Columbia. I am not saying this is good or bad. But I am saying to you that the population in the District of Columbia, and the metropolitan area that is included, has been growing steadily year by year.

We have reason to believe that this growth will continue and the Capital City will have a population of approximately 1,200,000 or 1,500,000 individuals. This does not mean that the population will come into being because there is a Democratic or a Republican Administration. It only means that increasingly Washington, as the National Capital and as a world metropolis, will retain this substantial number of citizens. I believe this House will act properly by approving the legislation requested.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. CHURCH. Will there be private hospitals that will not benefit by this arrangement?

Mr. RANDOLPH. It will be possible for any hospital, which comes into this program, to participate. We do not know just what hospitals will embrace the program, but they will have an opportunity to do so.

Mr. CHURCH. Is it a part of the commitment to say that Doctors' Hospital will be incorporated in this so-called hospital center?

Mr. RANDOLPH. There can be participation.

Mr. CHURCH. You say it is possible. Do they contemplate coming into it?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I am not sure. I do not believe they will at the present time. There has been some testimony that they might at a later date.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman four additional minutes.

Mr. CHURCH. Is it not a fact that this so-called arrangement will compete with the privately owned hospitals?

Mr. RANDOLPH. No; I do not believe so. I believe the testimony will show that none of the hospitals, including the one that the gentleman has mentioned, is in opposition to this legislation. I believe the officials of Doctors' Hospital are just as much in favor of this legislation as are the other hospitals.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlemen yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I know the great amount of time the gentleman from West Virginia has put in on this legislation. In fact, many of us on the committee have done the same. But in answer to the gentleman from Illinois about Doctors' Hospital, I do not think they will come in under the provisions of this bill for the reason that whatever hospital participates must dispose of whatever holdings they have and turn over the assets to the new Hospital Center. It is not very likely that the Doctors' Hospital, with the fine building they have and the one they are going to erect, has any idea of doing so.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. ABERNETHY. To elaborate a little on what the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES], has said about Doctor's Hospital, that they might not come in to the Hospital Center, it will participate in a grant to the extent of 50 percent of the value of its facilities after they are improved. So certainly every hospital in the city is favored.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Every hospital in the city. It is wide open.

Mr. CHURCH. Will it not have to come in in order to compete with the others?

Mr. RANDOLPH. No; I do not think so.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK. The gentleman from Massachusetts said a moment ago that the Health Commissioner of the District was opposed to this bill.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I do not think he was opposed to it so much as that he demurred from giving it his enthusiastic endorsement. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] say that was the viewpoint of the health official of the District of Columbia? Would you agree that it was a demurrer rather than active opposition on the part of the health official?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes. I was entirely on the theory that they were appointed officials and they did not want to go beyond the confines of their authority. The Commissioners of the District said, "We are broke. What shall we do? You want us to have hospitals. What will we use for money?" So we wrote a firm obligation into this bill, the details of which can be spelled out at a later time.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I have already said that there would be rules to adjust the hospital situation if this legislation became law.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. If the gentleman will yield; I asked that question many times, myself, of the Commissioner of Public Health of the District of Columbia, whether or not he was in favor of the Hospital Center, as set forth in this bill. He said he was not. He believed in decentralizing the hospital facilities and spreading them throughout the District. That was the real reason he was opposed to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has again expired.

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The Commissioner of Public Health of the District of Columbia did say to the committee that the conditions within our hospitals were deplorable.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. That is right.

Mr. RANDOLPH. That is the word he used in his statement, as I recall it.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. And I think I agree with that.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I am sure the gentleman from Massachusetts, an earnest member of the committee, agrees it is the problem here today that we must solve. As to the proper approach to this problem, there is a difference of interest, a difference of opinion. I feel that the legislative proposal is merited. There is a 55-percent deficiency today in proper hospitalization, from the standpoint of beds throughout the District of Columbia, and a large number of the other beds are, as I have said earlier, obsolete and insanitary and do not fit into a proper medical program.

I hope the House will approve the action of the District Committee in reporting favorably this legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has again expired.

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the question raised on the floor I wish to point out that the three local hospitals which are planning to come in to this medical center if this plan is approved, are Emergency, Garfield, and Episcopal. Another section of the bill provides that any other private hospital may make application for a grant from the Federal Government.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEALY. I yield.

Mr. CHURCH. Would it not be a fact that those private hospitals not coming under this plan would be competing against the hospitals that would come under the plan and therefore would it not discourage the activity and jeopardize the success of the other private hospitals?

Mr. HEALY. There is a possibility of competition arising. But in view of the fact that this legislation will authorize a total appropriation of $35,000,000 it would seem to me that this sum is adequate to cover all of the hospital needs of the District of Columbia.

I wish to speak briefly on one or two other points which were raised in opposition to the bill, particularly the point that the aid granted in this bill to the privately owned hospitals is quite generous. I concede that point, I admit that it is. The hospital situation in the District, however, is so serious that it must be remedied in one way or another. The situation has been deplorable for a great many years. Drives have been put on to raise funds by private subscription from the citizens of the District of Columbia but such drives have not, up to this time, resulted in securing sufficient funds for adequate, decent, modern hospitals in the District. When we are faced with such a situation it seems to me that, not having any other alternative, the problem becomes a responsibility of the Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired. All time has expired.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) the board of trustees selected in accordance with subsection (b) of this section, and their successors, are hereby incorporated and made a body politic and corporate, by the name of "The Washington Hospital Corporation" (hereinafter referred to as the "Corporation"), and by that name may contract and be contracted with, sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded in any court of law or equity of competent jurisdiction, and may have and use a common seal.

(b) The business and affairs of the Corporation shall be conducted by a board of trustees, which shall be composed of nine members, unless otherwise increased as hereinafter provided, one of whom shall be appointed by the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, one by the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, one by the Community Chest of Washington, District of Columbia, two by the board of directors of Garfield Memorial Hospital, two by the board of directors of Central Dispensary and Emergency Hospital, two by the board of directors of Episcopal Eye, Ear, Nose, and Throat Hospital, and two by the board of directors of any other participating hospital as described in section 2, all of such hospitals being in the District of Columbia. Each of such trustees shall be appointed for a term of 5 years and the original appointments shall be made within 60 days after the date of enactment of this act; and such Corporation shall have power to make bylaws not inconsistent with this act for the conduct of its affairs. Any vacancy on the board of trustees shall be filled by appointment made in the same manner as in the case of the original appointment. If any of those entitled to make appointments shall fail at any time to appoint any trustee, then such appointment shall be made by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service for service temporarily until such trustee shall be appointed in the regular manner.

(c) The board of trustees first appointed shall meet within 90 days after the date of enactment of this act and elect a president, vice president, secretary, and treasurer, and such additional officers as the bylaws may provide, and also transact such other business as may properly come before them, including the adoption of bylaws for the proper conduct of the Corporation. Thereafter the meetings of the trustees shall be held at such times and places as may be provided in the bylaws. The Corporation shall not be conducted for profit, and it is hereby declared to be a charitable and benevolent institution and all of its funds and property shall be exempt from taxation.

(d) The Corporation shall have perpetual succession and shall have power to acquire, hold, and dispose of real and personal property, and generally to do all lawful acts necessary to carry out the functions vested in it by this act and to provide for the operation of the hospital center established in accordance with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 2. The Corporation is authorized to enter into agreements with Garfield Memorial Hospital, the Central Dispensary and Emergency Hospital, Episcopal Eye, Ear, Nose, and Throat Hospital, and any other hospital in the District of Columbia desiring to come under the provisions of this act on a fully participating basis (hereinafter referred to as "participating hospitals") providing for the establishment, maintenance, and operation of a modern, adequate, and efficient hospital center in the District of Columbia, with a capacity of not more than 1,500 beds and with all necessary parking space, appurtenances, equipment, and other facilities, such as operating rooms, laundries, laboratories, X-ray machines, heating plant, nurses' school and home, and the like. Such agreements may be conditioned upon a suitable site, buildings, and equipment for such hospital center being provided in accordance with section 3 of this act; and shall provide that when a suitable site, buildings, and equipment are so provided, the participating hospitals will undertake to maintain and operate the hospital center, under the supervision and control of the board of trustees of the Corporation and in accordance with the provisions of this act, and that the participating hospitals will devote their full resources to this purpose: Provided, That no part of the funds of one hospital shall be required to be employed for the maintenance or operation of any part of the center used exclusively by another hospital. Such agreements shall provide for the payment by the participating hospitals of one-third of the initial cost of establishing and equipping the hospital center, such amount to be allocated among the participating hospitals as may be agreed upon by the participating hospitals and the Corporation, as nearly as may be upon the basis of the space in the hospital center operated and maintained by the respective participating hospitals and paid in accordance with the provisions of section 6.

SEC. 3. (a) After the Corporation has entered into agreements with the participating hospitals in accordance with section 2, the board of trustees of the Corporation shall select, with the approval of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, a suitable site within the District of Columbia for such hospital center.

(b) Within the limits of appropriations made therefor pursuant to section 6 of this act and subject to the approval of the board of trustees of the Corporation, the Federal Works Administrator is authorized and directed, as promptly as may be upon the termination of the war—

(1) to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, the site selected by the board of trustees for the hospital center, together with such real property as may be situated thereon;

(2) to provide buildings (either by new construction, or alteration and renovation of existing structures), additional improvements and appurtenances, and such equipment and machinery as may be necessary for the proper operation and maintenance of such hospital center; and

(3) upon completion of such hospital center, to convey, on behalf of the United States, all right, title, and interest therein to the Corporation.

(c) All plans, designs, and specifications for buildings and equipment for such hospital center, and for improvements upon its site, shall be subject to the approval of the board of trustees of the Corportation.

SEC. 4. When the hospital center has been conveyed to the Corporation, it shall be maintained and operated by the participating hospital under the supervision and control of the Corporation. Each of the participating hospitals shall be entitled to the exclusive use of such part or parts of the hospital center as may be determined by agreement between such hospital and the Corporation, for the purpose of conducting its operations as a hospital within such part or parts of the hospital center. The participating hospitals jointly, under the supervision and control of the Corporation, shall maintain and operate within the hospital center such central heating, laundry, and other facilities and services necessary to the proper and efficient operation and maintenance of such center as the participating hospitals and the Corporation agree may best be operated or performed by such hospitals jointly. The cost of maintaining such joint facilities and services shall be paid by the participating hospitals in such manner and proportion as the Corporation determines to be appropriate and equitable.

SEC. 5. (a) The Corporation may, in its discretion, enter into agreements with any voluntary hospital in the District of Columbia rendering service for indigent or semi-indigent patients and may allocate to such hospital, from appropriations made pursuant to section 6, such sums as may be available upon completion of the hospital center, for the replacement, enlargement, renovation, or modernization of any part of such hospital's buildings as said Corporation may determine to be in the public interest, having in view the most economical and effective use of available funds for hospitalization and to the end that the facilities of such hospital may be utilized to the best advantage. Such sums so allocated for affiliating hospitals shall be paid to such hospitals by the Secretary of the Treasury upon certification by the Corporation, and shall be paid at such time or times as may be specified in such certificate: Provided, That before entering into any such agreement, the Corporation shall be satisfied that such hospital is prepared to undertake such responsibilities of management and maintenance as may be necessary to conduct its operations as an affiliate of the hospital center. Such affiliation shall obligate such hospital to coordinate its facilities with the hospital center in such manner and subject to such conditions as may be determined by the Corporation in the public interest.

(b) The board of trustees of the Corporation shall have power, in its discretion, to increase its membership for the purpose of giving appropriate representation to participating and/or affiliating hospitals.

SEC. 6. (a) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

(b) Out of amounts appropriated pursuant to the authorization in subsection (a), the Federal Works Administrator is authorized and directed to advance the shares of the cost allocated to the respective participating hospitals upon agreement by such hospitals to repay the amounts so advanced over a period of 50 years from the date of completion of the hospital center with interest at the rate of 2 percent per annum upon any unpaid balance. The first payment of interest and principal shall be made 5 years after the date of completion of the hospital center, and shall cover amounts accrued up to that time.

SEC. 7. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. HEALY (interrupting the reading of the bill). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That in order to provide more adequate hospital facilities in the District of Columbia the Federal Works Administrator is authorized to acquire land and construct buildings and to make grants to nonprofit private agencies and to these ends is empowered:

"(a) to acquire prior to the approval of title by the Attorney General (without regard to secs. 1136, as amended, and 3709 of the Revised Statutes) improved or unimproved lands or interests in lands in the District of Columbia by purchase, donation, exchange, or condemnation (including proceedings under the acts of August 1, 1888 (25 Stat. 357), March 1, 1929 (45 Stat. 1415), and February 26, 1931 (46 Stat. 1421)) for such hospital facilities;

"(b) by contract or otherwise (without regard to secs. 1136, as amended, and 3709 of the Revised Statutes, and sec. 322 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412)), prior to approval of title by the Attorney General, to make surveys and investigations, to plan, design, and construct hospital facilities in the District of Columbia on lands or interests in lands acquired under the provisions of subsection (a) hereof or on other lands of the United States which may be available (the transfers of which for this purpose by the Federal agency having jurisdiction thereof are hereby authorized notwithstanding any other provision of law), provide proper approaches thereto, utilities, and procure necessary materials, supplies, articles, equipment, and machinery, and do all things in connection therewith to carry out the provisions of this act; and

"(c) to make grants to private agencies upon such terms and in such amounts as the Administrator may deem to be in the public interest to enable such private agencies to make surveys and investigations, to plan, design, construct, remodel, relocate, rebuild, renovate, extend, equip, furnish, or repair hospital facilities in the District of Columbia: Provided, That in no event shall the amount of the grant exceed 50 percent of the value of the hospital plant of the private agency as improved with the aid of such grant. As used in this act, the term 'private agencies' shall mean any nonprofit private agencies in the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 2. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, whether relating to the acquisition, handling, or disposal of real or other property by the United States or to other matters, the Federal Works Administrator, with respect to any hospital facilities acquired or constructed under the provisions of this act, is authorized to enter into leases with private agencies for the operation and maintenance of such hospital facilities or usable separable portions thereof upon such terms, including the period of any such leases, annual rentals, provision for joint use of facilities, provisions for operation, maintenance, repair, and replacement of buildings, equipment, machinery, and furnishings and appropriate security to assure the performance of any such leases, and to sell for cash or credit or to convey in exchange for other properties any such hospital facilities or usable separable portion thereof to private agencies on such terms as may be deemed by the Administrator to be in the public interest: Provided, That all hospitals participating in such center shall be required either to convey to the Government, free and clear of all incumbrance, the land and buildings now held by them or to sell the same at such prices as is agreed to and approved by the Federal Works Administrator and to pay the proceeds thereof to the Government at the option of the Federal Works Agency.

"SEC. 3. In carrying out the purposes of this act, the Federal Works Administrator shall provide a hospital center of such size and design as he shall deem feasible and economical of operation.

"SEC. 4. In carrying out the provisions of this act the Federal Works Administrator is authorized to utilize the services of or to act through the United States Public Health Service in the Federal Security Agency, the Federal Works Agency, and any other department or agency of the United States, and any funds appropriated pursuant to this act shall be available for transfer to such department or agency in reimbursement thereof.

"SEC. 5. Thirty percent of the net amount expended by the Federal Works Administrator under this act shall be charged against the District of Columbia and shall be repaid to the Government by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia at such times and in such amounts, without interest, as the Congress shall hereafter determine. The District of Columbia shall be entitled to 30 percent of the sale price of any of the properties sold by the Federal Works Administrator under section 2 of this act, other than properties the value of which is deducted from the gross amount expended to determine the net amount upon which the 30 percent to be charged against the District of Columbia is computed, and the District of Columbia shall also be entitled to receive 30 percent of any rentals received from the leasing of any of the hospital facilities acquired or constructed by the Federal Works Administrator under this act. The amounts which may be due the District hereunder shall be credited on the amount owed the Government by the District of Columbia until such obligation of the District is discharged in full.

"SEC. 6. For carrying out the purposes of this act, including administrative expenses, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated during the period ending June 30, 1952, the sum of $35,000,000 to be appropriated at such times and in such amounts as the Congress shall determine."

Mr. HEALY (interrupting the reading of the amendment). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the committee amendment be dispensed with.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will the bill be open for amendment at any point?

The CHAIRMAN. It will be.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ABERNETHY: On page 8, after the word "buildings", strike out the remainder of line 25 and all of line 1, page 9, down to and including the word "agencies" and all of subsection (c) on page 10.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to restore the bill to the original objective, that being the construction of a hospital center in the District of Columbia in which three certain hospitals propose to participate, therefore eliminating from the bill grants to private institutions which were not originally considered and which do not participate in the hospital center.

Mr. Chairman, originally it was proposed that this would be an $18,000,000 program. It was proposed that a hospital center would be constructed at that cost. The three hospitals which I have mentioned earlier in the day would participate.

During the hearings other private hospitals of the District of Columbia came in, and I cannot blame them, and said, "We want to get into this too." That was the substance of their testimony. "We do not want to participate in the hospital center, but since you are giving money to these three hospitals to come into a center why can you not give us a little money?" So provisions were written into the bill, being subsection (c) of section 1 as well as other language appearing earlier in the section, that propose to make grants to these private hospitals to the extent of 50 percent of the "improved" value.

Now, that is a catchy phrase. That is the way the bill reads and I wish you would follow me and see just how liberal it is. Let us suppose there is a private hospital that is not participating in the center whose buildings and real estate and other properties are worth $5,000,000. The Government will make them a grant of $5,000,000, bringing the total value of the plant to $10,000,000. Therefore they use the words "50 percent as improved." So, to turn it around and put it in plain English, it is simply a 100-percent grant.

If that is what you want, it is all right with me. But I submit it is entirely too liberal. I might be willing to make reasonable grants to our States for the improvement of hospital facilities, but I shall refuse to support 100-percent grants to the States as well as the District of Columbia. I hope you will support this amendment.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi. He has been a member of the District Committee for a number of years. I have been a member of that committee for 10 years. Both of us have given some thought to this problem. I thoroughly concur with the sentiments he expressed here today that the language in this bill providing for a grant to every hospital in the District is something new. It was not thought about at all when the Senate bill came over to us for a hospital center. But when it appeared that these hospitals mentioned would come into the hospital center by selling their own property and making their assets available, of course, the other hospitals throughout the District said, "Well, we ought to be given a lift, too." They further stated, "That they were not in a position where we can make much of a contribution by way of selling our property and then making our assets available to the hospital center, but we feel we are doing a very noteworthy work in the District and we feel that we ought to be assisted." That was the plea of every representative of every hospital that came before the Committee on the District of Columbia in support of or in the discussion of this bill. Some of those hospitals had 25 patients, some 35; some were convalescent homes, all doing splendid work that we ought to endorse, but the same kind of work we see done in every community in this country by public spirited and patriotic citizens of our communities.

The question is, Are we interested in hospital centers as such? Are we interested, as the Commissioner of Public Health in the District of Columbia is, in a decentralization of hospital facilities, or are we interested in opening up the purse strings of Uncle Sam, as I said in the committee when these representatives of the hospitals appeared before us, so that everybody can come and reach into the grab bag, running into perhaps millions of dollars? There you have it in today's bill. The door is open and the coffers of Uncle Sam are ready for anybody who wishes to make application. That is something new. That was put in the bill by the House Committee on the District of Columbia. How far removed it is from the original hospital center bill that was called to our attention.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The original bill, called to the attention of the House Committee on the District of Columbia, as it came from the Senate was a 100 percent Federal contribution to this program, was that not correct?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. That is right. The gentleman from West Virginia was opposed to it and I think every member of the House committee opposed it and down through these many weeks we have consistently opposed it.

The important thing in this connection, Mr. Chairman, is the administration of this hospital. How are you going to administer it? Three hospital representatives, with $5,000,000 out of $40,000,000, want to run the hospital without any representation from the District at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, when General Bradley appeared before the Committee on Appropriations some months ago and first indicated he, on the advice of General Hawley, Chief of the Medical Division, was going to let some of the Army and Navy hospitals go to surplus, there was considerable protest, largely because we felt that a good many of those hospitals were necessary if the construction was adequate and the location was decently good and that they were usable for veterans' purposes. Subsequently I offered a resolution through the Committee on Appropriations, and the committee staff then made an investigation. General Bradley and General Hawley stood by their original preannounced plan. The thing that directed my attention to it at the time was this. You are going to take some Army and Navy hospitals out of circulation, put them on the discard list, and sell them if you can find a buyer, and at the same time you are going to continue to build 250- and 300-bed hospitals over the country. So I raised the question at once with General Hawley. I said, "What is the idea?" He said, "Obviously, after veterans come into the medical centers that we contemplate, there will be a convalescent period later, so we will farm them out to these little hospitals that are strategically located." So under that proposal hospitals are going to be built.

In the same sense a medical center in the District of Columbia is not going to meet all the physical and hospital needs of the District. For instance, if one of these hospitals now in a state of disrepair can be improved, can be renovated, can be repaired and be made useful, and beds and new equipment and facilities installed, that is the thing we want to do, but to do it there must be some grant money, not to exceed 50 percent.

What my friend, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ABERNETHY] proposes to do is to strike that out entirely, and there will be no way of renovating those structures if they should be useful in the future, even after such a hospital has signified its intent to share in the facilities of this medical center. I do not want to see all those facilities now existing, if they are useful and if there is a value there to be recaptured, blotted out of existence to stand there until the clammy hand of time shall have effectuated a complete ruin. Money here, however, is necessary, and there is a limitation of not to exceed 50 percent on the grant money for that particular purpose. That is what we had in mind. If we are going to adopt this amendment, then we might just as well forget about the hospital program for the District of Columbia, that is all. For all practical purposes it is a death stab to this program, and that is the end of it for the Seventy-ninth Congress. If you are going to adopt that amendment, it is as simple and just as short as that.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Is it not a fact that if this amendment is adopted the hospital center will still be left in the bill?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Possibly so.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Definitely so.

Mr DIRKSEN. But what about the facilities that must be repaired in order to meet this maximum number of beds that you have to have for an area of this size, including metropolitan Washington?

Mr. ABERNETHY. Is it contemplated that they will never be able to make these repairs unless they get a grant from the Government to do all the work?

Mr. DIRKSEN. My friend knows what the fiscal situation is with respect to all of these hospitals. They are reaching up to touch bottom. It is like the little hospital out in my home town, which puts on a drive for funds every so often, because you have so many indigent patients, you have so many impoverished patients who cannot pay; yet what a cruel and distasteful thing it would be to deny them hospital accommodations simply because they did not have money in their pockets. We have to make allowances in a situation of this kind because hospitals are after all institutions to provide service to the public. If a person does not have the money, you have to take him in anyway.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I agree with what the gentleman says in a way, but the object of the bill is not to take care of charity patients, it is to take care of everybody in the District of Columbia that is able to pay.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The very purpose of this section the gentleman proposes to strike out is to make grant money available, not to exceed 50 percent, so that those institutions can be renovated and repaired and a number of beds added to the total we have now, so that finally the case load will not be beyond the bed capacity of all the hospitals in the District of Columbia.

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. O'HARA. The gentleman will recall that in the hearings these smaller and outlying hospitals, which probably give the greater service to the city of Washington, had the greatest desire and expressed the desire to serve their communities. They said they wanted to serve their communities and that their people would go only to these neighboring hospitals.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Precisely so. It follows out the pattern that General Bradley and General Hawley have commenced, that you have a medical center, but you have to have small hospitals in strategic areas for the purpose of taking care of the convalescents and the normal medical cases that may arise.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois be permitted to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman give us some information on this point: If this is necessary to be done in this community, what is to be considered as necessary in the communities over the country where they have hospitals that also are up against it?

Mr. DIRKSEN. There is no doubt that a similar service can be purveyed to other communities. The Hill bill, which has already passed the Senate, and which probably will be reported here, on the basis of per capita income and population seeks to make grants through hospital authorities to all the States of the Union. I agree thoroughly, of course, that the amount of money available under that bill for other jurisdictions will not be comparable with what we are making available here to the District of Columbia. The only argument we can adduce in behalf of an additional and larger percentage of funds here is that people from all the States of the Union have gravitated here, and we have to provide some kind of medical service, which is not now decently available, may I say. So we look upon it as an institution in the Nation's Capital where we can err on the generous side. That is the only argument I can make for it.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield with pleasure to the gentleman.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Does this proposition rest upon the theory that the Federal Government should go into the various communities of the country and into the States and make an appropriation to aid them in their hospital work?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is precisely the theory upon which the Hill hospital bill proceeds. That bill passed the Senate and will come up in this body this week, as I understand.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. This bill is part of that general scheme?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The theory is there. The amount of money involved here is somewhat larger.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that Washington ought to be the model for the entire country insofar as hospitals are concerned. It is a very direct responsibility of the Congress and we must make sure that that is accomplished. Many persons were not allowed to go into the hospitals during the war because there were no beds. There were not even enough doctors to take care of the patients at home. You will have an increased patient load for that reason. I hope everything will be done to make sure that Washington has proper buildings, good doctors, good hospital staffs, and nurses and attendants and insist that high standards be maintained. Some of Washington's hospitals are a national disgrace. Then I feel Congress will have done its duty.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I take this time to try to find out what we are doing here. I gather from the statements made in this discussion that this is a part of a general scheme for Federal aid to private hospitals all over the country. I so understand the statements just made by my distinguished friend the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] under this bill which is just like this one. The Federal Government will be going into the various communities making surveys to determine community needs as though the people in these communities do not have intelligence enough to determine those needs. Of course, the people of the country have to pay the bill. Then the Federal Government is to make appropriations for these hospitals and incur expenses which the people have to pay.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Just for the sake of clarity, under the bill which passed the Senate, the State must set up a hospital authority and it must comply with certain minimum standards which are set out in the bill. When that is done, then, of course, it is funneled from the Federal Government to the States for distribution among the communities.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is just a part of the general pattern which is bankrupting the Federal Government, helping to build up and maintain an army of Federal employees, destroying the sense of responsibility of the States, communities, and individuals. I do not like to continue to talk about these things. It is not pleasant to oppose these groups of public-spirited people who want to go the easy way to get what is needed. But I cannot pretend not to know what this rushing off up here for money and thereby relieving people of the necessity to do the job themselves, is doing to the people themselves, and doing to the States and smaller units of government. It is bad enough to persist in a policy certain to bankrupt the Federal Government, but that result is insignificant compared with the bankrupting of these sterling qualities of self-reliance and of capacity which can be preserved only by doing difficult things.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, the gentleman from Illinois is not talking about the bill pending, but is discussing the bill which is still in the Senate.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. We are discussing a bill which is before us, but that is not all we are discussing. The thing involved is much bigger than this bill, as I understand the statement made. All over the United States public-spirited people have heretofore dug down into their pockets and taken care of the situation in their own communities. It has not been easy. Meetings are held, committees are formed, leaders developed. Real democracy gets into motion. Community solidarity is strengthened. Community fitness is developed. That mythical magnificent thing is done to character which comes only to those who do for others with their own, for others in need, from whom they expect nothing in return.

Mr. Chairman, our people have built up strength of character and self-reliance during the periods of our pioneer experiences. We, of my generation, are destroying it with a profligacy more reckless than that with which we are squandering our great governmental heritage. One of the many ways by which we are doing it is by having a great centralized paternalistic government rob them of the necessity of doing the things which would help them to keep strong and fit to govern in a great democracy. My generation is doing this with borrowed money which other generations must pay, generations whose stamina our policy makes less fit to carry on. Every dollar of the some hundreds of billions of dollars that have been invested in the obligations of this country, some of it to help carry on the war, but some of it to pay the current governmental expenses of this generation, must be paid by those who are to come after us in responsibility. Up from communities where there is more money than ever before, in great waves of political power, people who do not realize what they are doing through our help are raiding the Federal Treasury for the money to meet current community needs. That is the bankruptcy which hurts; deep down in the people it hurts. These drafts upon a busted Federal Treasury are serious but, my colleagues, are nothing to compare with the hurt resulting from this dependence these drafts place upon the strength of our people, strength built up among a great people during the centuries of their independent self-reliance as to these matters of intimate duty and responsibility, before they ever heard of this Uncle Sam business—doing things for everybody. It does not make sense. Weakening the base—the self-reliance and capacity of the people while piling up the burden of our own expenses upon the generations of children which are to come after us. They are helpless. We are their guardians. They have no vote. There is not a State in the United States that is not in a better financial condition than the Federal Government, and not many communities or municipalities. These hospitals in all the States are to come here to the Federal Government, and the Federal Congress is to vote an appropriation of Federal money to help the hospitals in the various communities. Back with those dollars goes Federal power. There is not a Member of the Congress who does not realize that where the Federal dollar goes Federal power follows, and adds to the number of Federal employees who are administering the thing.

We have another group that wants an appropriation to help develop the libraries all over the country. We have already voted some money to pay for the lunches for school kids. If this thing keeps up, what will be the justification or excuse for the maintenance of State government or the community government, or how can they be maintained as sovereign efficient agents of local government?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. This bill sets the pattern for the Federal Government to step into every community in this country and make a direct contribution or grant for hospital purposes. Under the provisions of this bill every hospital in this District, no matter how large or small, can come in and make application and be granted 50 percent of the hospital facilities if the improvement is carried through.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. We know that the total of governmental power now concentrated here in Washington is beyond human capacity to understand. That is what is happening here at this end.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. We had the atomic bomb under consideration the other day. That is something that the individual Member of Congress should devote a week or 10 days to. We came here and did the best we could and took a chance on it and we voted on that proposition. There was not a chance for the individual Member properly to study it. The same thing was true with regard to the British loan. It is utterly impossible, and every Member of Congress knows it, for a Member of Congress to give that degree of examination necessary to deal with the business of this Government from the standpoint of how a statesman should deal with it. That is no reflection on the Congress. And yet we are piling up more duties here. We are developing a condition under which it is impossible for Members of Congress to develop that degree of statesmanship required by the circumstances of this country. We are doing it largely because of the fact that the communities, the States, and the individuals are coming up here to the Federal Government to get money out of the Federal Treasury. If we would help them to understand that they are not getting something for nothing, that every dollar must be paid back in dollars, that the cost of double administration must be paid in dollars, that interest must be paid in dollars and that the loss of local control over local matters and popular control over government and that somewhere down the line there must be travail and bitter struggle to regain that which all are now throwing away they would not insist. Mr. Chairman, if this explanation by the advocates of the bill that it is a general pattern of the bill recently passed by the Senate under which everybody in all communities come up here and get money out of the Federal Treasury, for community hospitals, the bill ought to be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, some time ago my daughter-in-law was confined in this city. Her husband was a member of the armed forces. She was in the hospital for 3 days and then they ushered her out.

Now, let us be sensible about hospitalization. This is the situation as it actually exists now. If a person who has some influence can stay only 3 or 4 days in a hospital in a maternity case, what will the family do who are without influence? There are private institutions in this town that have served the community for a hundred years. What do we propose? Abandon the old and grab the new? I am a little surprised at the debate as it goes on here today. No one has more respect for the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] than I. Did anybody raise a voice against the British loan last week? This is for our own people. This, I repeat, is for our own people. Every time we attempt to do something for our own we start talking about economy. This is something which deals with the general welfare, and dealing with the general welfare it is the function of the Federal Government to help. We have the example of the war period. The boys who were rejected—rejected because they were unfit to serve. But that is forgotten today. We avoid the issue. The issue is, Are we interested in the health of our people?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I have tremendous respect for my distinguished friend, but this institution he speaks of has been operating without this kind of bill for a hundred years.

Mr. RABAUT. And it has been operating in poverty, the strictest kind of poverty. If you do not believe it, appoint a commission to investigate. Serving, serving in poverty in the Capital of the greatest nation in the world.

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield.

Mrs. BOLTON. The understanding I have of this is that the point at issue is not that we are setting up something which is going to serve all the cities in the country. It is serving Washington, the Federal city, which is entirely different from our going into other cities, is it not?

Mr. RABAUT. Yes; some are looking for bridges to cross which have not yet been erected, glancing over the wide horizon, supposing things might happen—if, when and why. Let us cross those bridges when we reach them.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I offered the amendment and I presume the gentleman is talking to the amendment. The question is not whether we are interested in taking care of the sick and injured in the District of Columbia who are unable to take care of themselves, the question is whether or not it is the duty and responsibility of the Federal Government to take care of everyone in the District of Columbia.

Mr. RABAUT. No; that is not the question. I have not referred to it nor have I mentioned it.

Mr. ABERNETHY. That is the issue.

Mr. RABAUT. I said there is an institution in this city that has operated in poverty for a hundred years; and I wonder if it is necessary for an institution that serves humanity, serves it for a pittance, to operate in poverty for a hundred years?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I said earlier today that the hospital facilities within the District of Columbia are deplorable for the task they are called upon to meet. The gentleman has said that in other words, and he is correct.

Mr. RABAUT. I thank the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I wish to say to my friend that I agree that the situation with regard to Washington is different from the situation over the country generally. What I was trying to do was to direct to his attention the thought as to whether this bill would operate as a pattern with reference to areas outside the District.

Mr. RABAUT. I am talking only about the District of Columbia and the matter that is before us today. I think we certainly ought to remember institutions that serve for so long a period and not jump to conclusions and take on a new situation, forgetting institutions that have service for over a century.

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield.

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. I have made an investigation of the welfare institutions of the District of Columbia. I agree that the gentleman is absolutely correct and commend him for his statement.

Mr. RABAUT. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. LAFOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, there are several things to be deduced from what has been said here today as to whether we are going to look forward and show an understanding of these health problems.

The gentleman from Texas, eminently respected by all Members and my myself, has talked about the inability of the Members of Congress to deal with these questions. In large respect I am in agreement with him, but for some reason within the last few days those people who are trying to put through a bill for the report of congressional procedure in order to strengthen Congress and make it possible for the people to be adequately represented, as the gentleman wants them to be, have taken out a provision for an executive or administrative assistant to Congressmen. You cannot turn the clock back. The problems which confront America are no longer eighteenth or nineteenth century problems. To me you have to strengthen this institution which is the bulwark of this country and which, in my opinion, is the most important branch of government. You cannot vote to take out an administrative assistant for a Member of the Congress on the idea that it costs maybe $350,000, then vote millions of dollars for attorneys and advisors in all of the executive branches of the Government and come here, finally, and say that you cannot handle the problems of government. Why, you have got to prepare yourselves by assistants so that you can solve the problem and look forward. That is the intelligent approach to it. You cannot go back to the eighteenth and nineteenth century or its simple problems. You cannot get rid of these twentieth century problems. Do not say to the people that you are capable of handling these problems without assistance; some one to take off the load of incidental things, but say to the people "I will not be able to give study to all the problems of government; therefore I need an assistant and I am explaining to you why I need an assistant." I will not come here and yell for help and then deny myself the help which I only have the power to give myself. Something has been said here about taking care of all the people of the country. Well, there are only two classes of people who get really expert medical service in the United States—those who have the money, in this particular community, to a large extent those who have some position, and the very poor, who are operated on and taken care of as charity cases.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAFOLLETTE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I would like to challenge that statement. My 30 years of experience in the practice of medicine completely refutes that statement.

Mr. LAFOLLETTE. That is a very direct challenge. It almost comes to saying I am a liar, which I do not think the gentleman means to say. I also have lived for 45 years in a community about the size of the gentleman's community, or a little larger, and I know myself that the middle class of people, the people with $150 a month, who have to skimp and save in order to get medical attention, do not get adequate medical attention. So we hear all this talk about why do we have to take care of all the people. Well, all the people happen to be citizens, and it is an obligation of the Government of the United States to provide hospital facilities at least, so that those people, if they can pay, may find a hospital and get into it.

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the perfecting amendment to the committee amendment and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman from Texas, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, has just said there is a great deal more in this proposition than the enactment of this bill. All over the country there is a general impression that the Federal Government is about to resume the old WPA handouts. In every section there is the hope that now that the war is over we will go back to the good old days before the war and the local communities will build hospitals, libraries, schools, airfields, and public construction of all kinds, and the United States Treasury will foot the bill. The fact that we are staggering under an unprecedented national debt of $275,000,000,000 seems to make no impression on them. And it seems to have made no impression on the sponsors of this bill. This is the beginning of a program the end of which no man now living can foresee. There is not a county or a municipality in the United States which does not have plans to build a new hospital or revamp and enlarge an old one, as well as water and sewage systems and public utilities of every character. The passage of this bill, the provision of this gratuity, will be the signal for them to descend on Congress for similar largess from the public purse. And there is not money enough to do it. There is not money enough to make a payment on the national debt. There is not money enough to pay legitimate expenses without a bond issue. We have had a good deal of talk here the last few days about enacting OPA regulations to prevent inflation. Here is the place to control inflation. It is such gratuitous expenditures as these that render it impossible to balance the budget, prevent payments on the national debt, prevent reduction in tax rates, and bring down the purchasing power of the dollar.

There is not a State or major city in the Nation that is not in better financial condition than the Federal Government. And that is particularly true of Washington. Without indebtedness, with a low tax rate, and with the largest average earned income per capita of any city in the world, it is amply able to take care of its own ill and indigent.

They say the Washington hospitals are congested. Of course, they are congested. The hospitals of every city are congested—New York, San Francisco, Chicago, and St. Louis. That is not an exceptional situation. But no one is going without hospitalization here in Washington—as they are in many sections of the country where there are no hospitals at all. Why should not Washington, like the rest of the country, take care of her own?

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GAVIN. Why should not Britain take care of their own, too? We just donated billions of dollars to them.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. What has that to do with the price of oranges, or the height of Christmas trees? The gentleman cannot see straight. He cannot think straight. We are talking about hospitals—in Washington, D. C.—not something on the other side of the Atlantic.

And while we are talking about Washington, let me quote from a recent editorial from a Washington newspaper:

WORTH REMEMBERING

In this age of hand-outs and a growing demand for them, it might be a good idea to remember the quotation in Plutarch's life of Coriolanus: "The man who first ruined the Roman people was he who first gave them treats and gratuities."

That is a Washington comment. Let us take it to heart.

Let us go ahead and in a legitimate way take care of the hospital needs of this city, but let us not start a spending program which will spread throughout the country and which will saddle upon us obligations which will disorganize the national budget and delay indefinitely the liquidation of the national debt and the reduction of Federal taxation.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment ought to be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN].

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to no man in this House or in the Nation in my sincere desire to see that our poor and needy people have proper hospitalization, but as I see this legislation it is simply an opening wedge, as has already been explained so ably by the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS], to have the Federal Government contribute great sums to every village, town, and city in the United States for hospitals. It has come to a pretty pass if the people of the District of Columbia and of other municipalities in this Nation have lost so much of their benevolence toward their suffering neighbors that they refuse to take care of them when they are sick and must look to a paternal Government to take care of their neighbors, their friends, and their families. There is not a hamlet, a town, or a city in this country today that is not better fixed financially than the Government of the United States. Certainly with the large income the people of Washington, D. C., always have, if they are unwilling to take care of their suffering friends, neighbors, and families, then I think things have certainly come to a pretty pass here in our Nation's Capital.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. O'HARA].

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi of course strikes out the heart of this bill. It strikes out the small neighborhood hospitals that are involved in the bill. I call your attention to the fact that this medical center is only a part of the program. We have the small hospitals which serve their particular communities, and I venture to say serve more of the charity type of patients than would a medical center. They serve their communities because the people living in the communities want to be treated in their neighborhood hospitals. If you want to sabotage the bill you might as well vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HARA. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It has been said that this is a precedent for some general program. I do not understand it that way.

Mr. O'HARA. Of course it is not. The situation entirely is that the Congress is responsible for the District of Columbia. This is a red herring that they are dragging in here, this talk about an entering wedge. Either turn the government of the District of Columbia back to the people of the District and let them run it or do a fair and decent job of running it as the Congress of the United States, one of the two.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HARA. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. The gentleman knows that if we do anything for the District of Columbia every village, town, and hamlet in the United States will say, "Certainly you want to treat us as fairly as you do the people of the District of Columbia."

Mr. O'HARA. The gentleman from Iowa comes from a fine, wealthy part of the country where every town has a hospital.

Mr. JENSEN. And we are going to take care of our own sick and suffering people.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER].

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yiueld?

Mr. COLMER. I yield.

Mr. ABERNETHY. In answer to my friend, the gentleman from Minnesota, I disagree with him that this amendment strikes the heart out of the bill. The fact of the matter is that the bill originally was for the construction of a hospital center and after we got the hospital center in, then they decided to bring in all the hospitals. So we are just striking out the end of the bill. That is all it amounts to.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. I yield.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. As a matter of fact, the title of the bill only refers to the establishment of a modern, adequate, and efficient hospital center.

Mr. COLMER. That is right.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. There is no reference whatever to helping any smaller hospitals.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. I yield.

Mr. RABAUT. What constitutes a hospital center if it is not an association of hospitals which will go into the medical center?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. But under the provisions of the bill they cannot go into the medical center.

Mr. RABAUT. I just asked you what constitutes a medical center.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, I cannot yield further.

In a few days the House is going to be called upon to vote upon a bill which has already passed the Senate, known as S. 191, which would give every community in the United States, including the District of Columbia, an equal chance to share in Federal funds for the construction of hospitals that the communities need. I do not think it is fair that the District of Columbia should be set aside to receive preferential treatment over your community and my community. They all ought to share alike. I know there is a lot being said about this being the seat of government. Now, how many communities in the United States would not be glad to have that burden thrown upon them of being the seat of government? I am in favor of defeating this bill and considering S. 191 when the time comes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I am vitally interested in seeing that the District has proper hospital facilities. I do understand that the three hospitals to be absorbed or abolished in this bill have been doing right well financially. Their physical property is old. Some District hospitals are a disgrace. They need repairs and new equipment. The Speaker of the House appointed me as a member of one of the hospital boards here in the city. I attended a number of their meetings. They are always asking for some money from the Federal Government. The hospital has money in the bank and assets sufficient to make improvements. I believe it is the duty of Congress to assist with new buildings just as we did in the case of the George Washington and Georgetown Hospitals. It is my understanding these two universities received an outright grant. Washington needs better hospital facilities. I understand the three hospitals included in this bill have no debts at all. They have been able to go along and serve the community and are out of debt. They may have made some money and they may have money in the bank. I am not sure about that. At least, they are not running in the red but are on the right side of the ledger. A hospital center appeals to me. I would like to see a large medical center here. I do think the administrative difficulties are very great. This does appeal to me also because I am interested in hospitals. I ran a hospital for some 20 years. I know that hospitals can make a little money if they want to. It does seem to me that if we are going to build hospitals now, they ought to be built under the RFC or some fund like that. Thus the hospitals might be self-liquidating. I believe it can be done. The people using hospitals who are able to pay should pay enough to meet all expenses and have a sinking fund to retire the debt and keep up the repairs.

The other thing I am reminded of is the Hill-Burton bill that will soon come before the Congress. I understood the gentleman to say that all communities would be treated alike in this bill. It is my understanding of the Hill-Burton bill that these funds will be available to those communities where there is a shortage of hospital and public-health facilities. Unless this bill is amended, I think that condition still prevails. I doubt if Washington, D. C., can qualify under the Hill-Burton bill.

I am also reminded of the fact that in the city of Washington, while living costs are high, the people living here get more money on the average than any other individuals in cities of comparable size.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER] has expired.

The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER] to the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, on a division there were—ayes 53, noes 30.

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: On page 12, line 3, strike out all of the language beginning with the word "thirty" in line 3 and ending with the word "determine" in line 8, and substitute therefor the following: "The net amount expended by the Federal Works Administrator under this Act shall be charged against the District of Columbia and shall be repaid to the Government by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia in equal installments annually over 20 years, with interest on unpaid items at the rate of 2½ percent per annum."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I recognize the need for hospital facilities in the District of Columbia. On the other hand, there is no occasion in the world for the United States of America to pay perhaps the whole cost. That is what it could be under the language that I have attempted to strike out, because they are not required to pay it at any particular time and they are not required to pay interest. It could be put off forever.

I have provided here that the District of Columbia should pay the whole bill and pay it over 20 years in equal annual installments. That would require a contribution out of the District of Columbia treasury of only about $2,000,000 a year. Can anyone say that the District of Columbia, the richest city in the world, without any bonded indebtedness whatever, should not pay the bill for fixing up its hospital situation? I cannot understand how anyone can come here and say that the people in our districts back home should pay the hospital bills of the District of Columbia. Let them raise the tax rate 60 cents a thousand if they have to. What hurt would it do?

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. JENSEN. They pay less tax, less millage, than any city anywhere in the United States, right here in the District of Columbia.

Mr. TABER. They do and there is no excuse for it.

This is not a Federal responsibility, we are dealing with a responsibility which is local and which has always been made local; and there is no excuse whatever for trying to make it a Federal responsibility. Let us be honest, let us be honest with the people back home, let us provide for this hospital situation as will be done if my amendment is adopted, but let the District of Columbia pay for it as they should. They charge plenty for rent, they charge plenty for hotel rooms, they charge plenty for everything you buy here; and the folks who come in here who have to be hospitalized, directly and indirectly pay any charge that the District itself would have to pay out of its tax revenues. There is absolutely no excuse for approaching this problem on any other basis. It is not meeting responsibility to those who are sick and in distress, but when you provide that the Federal Government shall do this whole job as this might result, you are simply failing to meet your responsibility to your own districts back home and at the same time be fair to the District of Columbia.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, I spent 20 years as a member of the board of trustees of a hospital. I know what hospitals mean to any community; but I do not believe the hospital need of the community is the factor at issue in connection with this bill.

Earlier in the afternoon, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] said that costs should have no consideration in our action on this bill. That unfortunately is the daily attitude of this Congress on almost any bill. It was not long ago that the matter of the Federal contribution to the District of Columbia was before us, and at that time the District Committee spoke to us very eloquently as to the bad state of District finances. Why has not the District Committee come in to us meanwhile with some measures to increase taxation? I have not seen or heard of any such bill. On the other hand we have in the report on the bill now before us the statement:

> The District budget is not in balance, or is so close to the red that additions to the expenditure side cannot be made until more revenue is in sight.

Much more revenue is in sight. It just is not being utilized.

My home State and city have what I think are the finest hospitals in the country. How have those hospitals been acquired? They have been acquired by taxes. Our real-estate taxes in the city of New York are at least twice as high as in the city of Washington. We have sales taxes, gasoline taxes, public-utility taxes, and real-estate-use taxes; and in addition the city is bonded to the hilt. Through such means have we been able to build these hospitals to take care of our people. Washington, as has been said, is not taxed heavily. Why on earth should the people of my district be taxed on top of their already high taxes to build hospitals in the city of Washington when the people who live in the city of Washington do not bear an adequate tax burden?

Mr. Chairman, this bill should be defeated.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pending amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the adoption of the pending amendment means there will be no hospital program for the District of Columbia. That is not an overstatement, that is not motivated by any endeavor to scare you; it is just a plain, simple, unembellished, unadorned statement of fact. Thirty-five million dollars at accrued interest, amortized over a period of 20 years, as proposed by the gentleman from New York, means that every dollar of the $2,000,000 that you added to the lump-sum estimate by the Federal Government by vote of this House a few weeks ago will be sponged out and will have to be devoted to this one exclusive purpose if you are going to have a hospital program.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. The gentleman knows that they can raise the tax levy 60 cents a thousand or they could put on a sales tax and have plenty of money to meet their obligations. Why do they not do it?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Before you can propose a revenue system for the District government, in addition to what you have, it becomes necessary, first of all, to hold hearings before the District Committee. That results in long, arduous, and painful labor. Everybody will have to be represented. At long last you seek to develop a revenue program; then you bring in a balanced revenue program before this House.

Mr. TABER. That might not be the fact.

Mr. DIRKSEN. You remember the difficulty we had in imposing an income tax on the District of Columbia. You remember the difficulty we had even considering a sales tax before. I was one of the antagonists rather than one of the protagonists. The District of Columbia has got to wait until this Congress acts, and it is anybody's guess as to what will happen on this floor.

We started today at 12 o'clock. It is now 4:20 in the afternoon and we have not gotten through District business yet. The members of our committee have worked earnestly early and late, they have given diligently of their time and attention and have studied the bills. Yet Members will come over here, pick up a bill they have not seen until the calendar starts, and find something they can attack. Get me straight, I am not lecturing. Goodness knows, I have been here too long to want to lecture anybody. But it does not make one feel too good deep down to give so freely of his time on these matters, then have the thing kicked around unless there is a pretty good reason. You know, I tried for years to get off the District Committee. The District Commissioners came down and saw the minority leader and said, "Keep Mr. DIRKSEN on the District Committee." It is a labor of love, of course. I do not mind when you come down here and kick out a bill, but I would like to have you have a good reason, based upon a careful analysis of the bill, before you do that.

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. FOLGER. I am inclined to go along with the gentleman and the committee, but I am wondering why the matter should be handled as an exclusive need here. Why should not a general hospital bill be passed for the United States, including the District of Columbia?

Mr. DIRKSEN. There is a general hospital bill to come on which will make available for that purpose between $400,000 and $700,000 a year to the District of Columbia from a very limited amount that is provided. You could not begin to build 10 wards in a hospital with the money that the District would get out of the Hill hospital bill. That is the difficulty today.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I reply to the observation made by my friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] when he speaks of the people here putting into effect a sales tax, that that must be done by the action of this Congress. On several occasions, when I was chairman of the House Committee on the District of Columbia, we brought legislation here for Congress to approve a sales tax, but it was defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for four additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. RABAUT. I just rise to say that I want to congratulate the people of the District of Columbia in the decision of the minority leader in placing the gentleman on the Committee on the District of Columbia and keeping him there, because I think he is doing a very good job.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Well, we just labor at it as best we know how.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. If the people of the District of Columbia would do what the people in my own city did recently, namely, solicit subscriptions for a new hospital, they could achieve the same goal.

Mr. DIRKSEN. And may I say to my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania that here in Washington they have attempted to raise $1,000,000 for a Children's Hospital. That has been in progress for weeks and weeks and weeks and the best they have been able to get is 50 percent of that goal.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. As the distinguished gentleman knows, I have served on the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations for some time.

Mr. DIRKSEN. And the gentleman has done a great deal of labor, too.

Mr. JENSEN. I thank the gentleman. I have listened to these do-gooders from every welfare organization in this District, and when you talk about Congress attempting to put on any kind of a tax on the people in the District of Columbia, boy, they send hoards of lobbyists up there to tear you to pieces. The gentleman knows that.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I have not seen that, I am sorry to say.

Mr. JENSEN. The gentleman has not?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not think that a person who openly represents himself in favor of a measure before the committee is a professional lobbyist, if he is doing it on his own and not for any particular group or for pay.

Mr. JENSEN. They may be amateurs, but they are pretty good.

Mr. DIRKSEN. In closing, let me affirm that I meant no impertinence to anybody. It is all in the best of grace, and may I say that the Committee on the District of Columbia does the best job it knows how.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I have labored on the Committee on the District of Columbia with the gentleman from Illinois longer than any other Member here.

Mr. DIRKSEN. And he is a valiant Member.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. And I think I can agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] that in every community in this country of ours this is taking place. We find drives on almost every year. The same thing is true in my city. And, I know that when the gentleman and I worked out the income-tax law here a few years ago we observed that the income that was going untaxed in this city amounted to $300,000,000 a year in personal income. I wonder why that source could not be taxed.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me make this observation. It is pretty easy to bandy a lot of general assertions on this floor that will not stand up in the light of day. The gentleman from Missouri, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, said a moment ago that they have the largest per capita earned income in Washington of any jurisdiction in the United States. That is certainly true. But earned income is one thing. Income that remains in the District of Columbia to be taxed is another. Why, an old attorney who has lived in the District of Columbia for 40 years, has always voted in Pennsylvania and never paid an income tax in this jurisdiction. It is one thing to leave the income here to be taxed, and it is another thing to take it away.

The other thing is this: With an area having 270,000 people from the outside, the interest and abiding loyalties are back home, just like my loyalties are back there. Manifestly, this does not become a jurisdiction where colossal incomes, like those in Hollywood, are taxed. If you can find those sources, you are a better man than the assessor, Ed Dent, or your humble servant who is addressing you at the present time.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. RABAUT. When they are sick in the District of Columbia, whether their affiliations are back home or not, they seek out a District of Columbia hospital.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Of necessity that is true.

I hope the amendment will not prevail, but it is wholly within the grace of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] to the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the Committee divided; and there were—ayes 36, noes 45.

So the amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ABERNETHY moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I endeavored as best I could and as fairly as I could to explain this bill in my opening statement. I said at the time that I appreciate the fact that additional hospital facilities are needed in the District of Columbia.

I live in a little town of 2,700 people. We do not have an adequate hospital there. I should like to have one. But if I had dropped a bill into the hopper authorizing only a $10,000 federally financed hospital for my little city it would never have received a hearing, much less been reported to the floor for consideration.

I appreciate the fact that this is the seat of government and probably deserves some special treatment, but my opinion, as I stated before, is that that treatment should be in the form of additional Federal contributions to the District of Columbia.

I think the House has made up its mind. The day is pretty well spent. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], which I supported, having been defeated, you now have before you a bill which authorizes about $20,000,000 for a hospital center which will cost the people of the District of Columbia, according to the estimates laid before the committee, only about $3,000,000 of that $20,000,000. The bill does not spell out when or how the District share will be repaid. We have the cart before the horse. I think this bill ought to go back to the committee; in fact, I think it ought to go out completely. In order to bring the issue to a head, I have offered the motion to strike out the enacting clause. My purpose in so doing is to defeat the bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion.

Mr. Chairman, the committee submitted language which is just as definite as any language can be to impose a firm obligation upon the District of Columbia, and it leaves it to a future time to determine how and when it shall be done; in other words, it is still in the hands of Congress.

Let me read you this language. It is section 5 on page 12:

SEC. 5. Thirty percent of the net amount expended by the Federal Works Administrator under this act shall be charged against the District of Columbia and shall be repaid to the Government by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia at such times and in such amounts, without interest, as the Congress shall hereafter determine.

There is no money that you can get at the moment. It would be foolish to write in that kind of proposal here saying that so much is to be taken out of such and such a fund when there is nothing in it, or so much to be taken out of another fund when there is nothing in it. There is, however, developing at the present time, if you please, a completely integrated tax structure, a matter to which we are all giving our attention, and we hope to revamp the whole tax system. Some additional funds may develop and then at the earliest date Congress, under this power having fixed a firm obligation upon the District, will have to determine how that debt shall be amortized. What more can we do under the circumstances? There would be no virtue in passing this preferential motion. The function of a preferential motion is to test the sentiment of the House early in debate to find how the Members feel about a matter. We are about to finish the consideration of the bill in the Committee of the Whole. There are no more amendments. Therefore, there is no virtue in striking out the enacting clause at this hour of the afternoon. The matter will shortly be determined in the House. So why not let the matter go on as it is now and then determine the question by a record vote. That would be the sensible thing to do. I, therefore, implore you very respectfully to vote down the preferential motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ABERNETHY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ABERNETHY) there were—ayes 39, noes 66.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the answer to one or two questions so that I might with some degree of intelligence vote upon the pending legislation. I hope the chairman of the committee and my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Illinois, will correct me if I am in anywise in error in what I shall say.

I understand that the District of Columbia government is generally in charge of the Congress of the United States. It is run by Commissioners appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. So far as the conduct of its municipal affairs is concerned, it is conducted almost the same as any other municipality with the exception that it does not have a board of aldermen. In effect, the Congress acts as the board of aldermen. Who fixes the tax rates for the District of Columbia?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Congress fixes the tax rates for the District of Columbia. It can write the tax rates in legislation at any time or change them at any time.

Mr. KEEFE. Does the Congress actually fix the tax rate?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes. When we brought in the last omnibus tax bill we spelled out all the different rates.

Mr. KEEFE. Who levies the assessment? Who approves the assessment?

Mr. DIRKSEN. They have an assessor here just as they have in any other jurisdiction.

Mr. KEEFE. Is the assessment made by that assessor approved by the Commissioners or approved by the Congress?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The Assessor's conduct is under the Commissioners, but obviously the Commissioners could not approve the assessment of every parcel of land or real estate in the District of Columbia.

Mr. KEEFE. They approve the equalization of the assessment, perhaps.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I would say it is submitted to the Board of Equalization.

Mr. KEEFE. So that we have this situation, that the Congress actually levies the tax rate. The assessments that are placed are made by the Assessor under the jurisdiction and direction of the Commissioners. Is that right?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes. The District Assessor is a hired man.

Mr. KEEFE. Exactly, just as in any other place. If there is any responsibility for failing to impose additional taxes upon real estate in the District of Columbia, that responsibility rests squarely with the Congress of the United States. Is that right?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Precisely so.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I do not agree with that.

Mr. DIRKSEN. In the last bill we recited in dollars and cents what the tax rate should be. There was an opportunity for anyone to increase it or decrease it or modify it or do anything they wanted to do with it.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I do not agree with that.

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts who says he does not agree with the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. We determine what the rate shall be, but the assessment of the property is made by the Board of Assessors, and values are determined by the Board of Assessors. So that the tax bill itself is modified by the rate we set.

Mr. KEEFE. That is true in every community. We all know that. The rate is fixed by the Congress.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Precisely.

Mr. KEEFE. But as far as the actual taxpayer is concerned, he is interested in the application of that rate to the assessment, and if the commissioners have charge of the assessments and the assessments are made on the basis of true value, then, of course, the dereliction is with the Board of Commissioners and not with the Congress. May I ask the former chairman of the committee the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] whether or not the assessments on real and personal property in the District of Columbia are made on a basis of fair values or otherwise.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I wanted to make an observation on the tax situation and then would be glad to reply.

Mr. KEEFE. Will the gentleman answer the question, if he can, please?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I desired to make an observation and then answer the question, but I will do it the other way if the gentleman prefers. I was on my feet when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] was speaking and hoped to comment on tax matters in reference to District levying procedure.

Mr. KEEFE. Very well. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman from Masachusetts spoke about the Congress levying the taxes. Congress decides the taxes to be levied and the type of taxes to be used here. The Congress has had an opportunity to vote for a sales tax and has voted it down.

Now, will the able gentleman state the question again?

Mr. KEEFE. The charge has been made repeatedly on this floor that this is the least-taxed community in the United States. Now, if it is, the first responsibility, that of fixing the rate, falls squarely on the Congress. Secondly, the application of that rate, which in effect determines the actual amount of taxes, is upon the assessment as made by the Assessor, his assessment being approved not by the Congress but by the Commissioners. The question I ask the gentleman is whether or not the assessed valuation of properties in the District of Columbia is upon a reasonable and equitable basis, comparable with other cities of similar character, and on a full basis of value.

Mr. RANDOLPH. It is my feeling that valuations are reasonable and equitable, and I believe that is the viewpoint shared by most persons who have studied the problem.

Mr. KEEFE. Of course, the tax rate means very little if the assessment is at full value.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for four additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I have not checked specific parcels in the last year or two. I expect it is 2 years or 3 years ago, but I had them certify to me the rate and the application and the net taxes paid on perhaps several hundred parcels of real estate, just picked at random in Washington. I tried as best I could, from people who were skilled in that field, to find out whether it was fair, whether it was too low, or whether it was too high. I think the consensus of judgment was that in many cases it was fair, and in many cases the actual taxes paid were higher, proportionate to the actual value of the property.

Mr. KEEFE. May I ask the gentleman whether or not his committee has made any study or investigation of the relationship of sales to assessment? In my State, for example, every single sale is recorded and it goes into the hands of the assessor. Is that done here in the District of Columbia? Is there any relationship between sales value and assessed value?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am sure that the best of assessment technique is employed here; at least that has been my experience over a great many years. There is not the slightest reason to believe that there is any deviation from a sound assessment technique and a sound collection system.

Mr KEEFE. If there were not a sound assessment technique and if there were not a sound assessment today it clearly lies within the province and prerogatives of the Congress of the United States summarily to make correction. Is not that true?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is correct.

Mr. KEEFE. So, after all is said and done, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, after listening to all this debate and not pretending to know too much about it, that while we are doing a lot of squawking about the District of Columbia, the District of Columbia under the law and the Constitution is apparently our child and it is our responsibility as Members of Congress. We cannot just lightly brush that responsibility aside and say that because we do not have a hospital down in some town in Wisconsin or Mississippi, we, as Members of Congress charged with the responsibility for legislating for the District of Columbia are going to let this miserable condition prevail that does prevail in the District of Columbia. I personally hope that we can use some judgment this afternoon in passing legislation for the District of Columbia and not just brush it aside as you would some stranger. It is our child, it is our responsibility, and we must exercise and carry out that responsibility.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Does the fact it is our responsibility justify providing up to 70 percent of the cost with Federal funds?

Mr. KEEFE. That is not a fair statement.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The bill itself provides that 70 percent of the funds shall be spent by the Federal Works Administration and it further provides that the cost——

Mr. KEEFE. Just a moment, please. The thing sums up to just this in my feeble opinion: It is admitted that the hospitals are in a deplorable condition. It is admitted that there are only two ways in which to improve the situation, one through public subscriptions—and you are not getting them—and the other through Federal aid to the municipality, if you may call it such. There seems to be no other way to get the money. You say the District of Columbia does not have the money in its till. The only way to put it there is to levy taxes then on the people of the District of Columbia; and if we need hospitals, if they are as deplorable as they say they are, let us build the hospitals, and if the Congress has the power let us levy the taxes to pay for them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I do not like to oppose this measure. I do not like to oppose the Members of Congress who have good purpose in advocating it. But I have made examination of this policy, this dependence upon the Federal Government, and its effect. I give to you for whatever it may be worth, the certainty of judgment that if we continue to recognize that when a community fails to do that which is within its responsibility and power that the Federal Government ought to step in, we will create such a lack of sense of duty and eventually lack of fitness to do things that the Federal Government will not only have to step in but will have to stay in. By its nonuse the communities will have lost the ability to do for themselves. Totalitarian government will have been established. By this policy, which hides the destination, we move along the only road that would be permitted taking the people toward a totalitarian system of government. If we would state boldly to the people of the United States that we want to do this they would defeat every one of us. We do not tell them that. But if we continue to have the Federal Government entering those fields of service that lie within the interest of the private citizen and smaller communities of the Nation, and the State, we move as definitely toward a totalitarian system of government as if it were our admitted and intended destination. If the people are relieved by the Congress from the necessity of doing the things that are within their capacity, their capacity is reduced, and in proportion as their capacity is reduced the excuse for Federal intervention with Federal dollars is increased. After a while there will be the real necessity because that power not used is lost. That is the road we are traveling.

The distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], who is the ranking minority member of the District Committee, stated that this bill is in line with another bill that has been passed by the Senate under which the Federal Government is expected to make appropriations in the several communities of the United States to aid in building hospitals.

The people in my community are asking me to support that bill. It is not a pleasant thing not to do it. I know something about the difficulty that the people have in raising money for things in their communities, but I declare to you, Mr. Chairman, those difficulties, as much as we would like to be rid of them, are not without their compensation. People never develop any ability by doing things that are easy. I have seen people in my community get together, have meetings, work up sentiment and have a hard time of it. But such things make a great people. They feel responsibility. The individual who does that which pinches him to help his fellow man in difficulty gets just as much benefit out of it as the individual whom he is serving.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Does not the gentleman make a distinction in the case of the District of Columbia?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do. I do recognize a definite difference between the responsibility of the Congress for conditions in the District of Columbia and its responsibility for conditions outside the District because the Congress must act for the District as its local governing body. If this Committee had a bill which definitely recognized that difference and went no further, then I would be in favor of that bill, but, as I understood the statement, and as I understand the arguments that have been made and the reasons asserted here, this bill is an entering wedge. I understand this bill is an entering wedge for the bigger bill that passed the Senate and I understood from the statement of the gentleman who favors this bill that he favors it on the same basis he would favor the bigger bill when it gets here.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. The gentleman believes then as I do. I am sure, that certainly when the big bill comes here before the House that we who vote against that bill will be in a bad position if we vote for this little bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I am always interested and attentive when our distinguished colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] speaks to this body. I am sure that I join with the Members on both sides of the aisle in saying that when we lose a Member of the caliber of the gentleman from Texas, who is to retire voluntarily, that not only we but the country are the losers.

The gentleman says that we treat this problem as a local problem. I think he is in error. I feel it wrong to say that this is a local problem, or even Washington, D. C.'s, problem. I believe, as he later said, that it is a national problem. Mr. Chairman, it is a District of Columbia problem in that here is the seat of government for the people of his State of Texas, in a certain sense, and for the citizens of West Virginia also. We embrace this challenge in an approach country-wide in character. That is why we believe this hospital condition, deplorable as it is, must be attended to by the Congress of the United States sitting as the guardian not only of this city, or of this District, but of the Federal structure of the United States.

Does the able gentleman agree?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I recognize this problem.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I trust the gentleman will finally be persuaded to join with those of us who will vote for the passage of this legislation. We must assume a responsibility to act for Washington—but in a larger sense to provide for adequate hospital facilities for the Capital City of this Republic.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES].

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, just a word. I think I have some knowledge of the provisions of this bill. I have given it a good deal of time, as have the other members of the committee. I just want to reiterate what I had to say in the early part of the afternoon that what I am concerned about as much as anything else is the administration of this hospital when it is completed. There are no provisions in this bill for the administration of this tremendously large hospital center, and we are given to understand that under its provisions three of the large hospitals presently operating in the District will sell their buildings and their assets and turn over those assets to the Public Works Administration. The estimated cost of this hospital center is anywhere from twenty to thirty million dollars. It was originally estimated at $20,000,000 when it came from the Senate. There are no other hospitals in the District, apparently, that want to go into this hospital center. So with the $5,000,000 of assets that they will turn over to the Federal Works Administration, the Federal Works Administration with the other twenty to thirty million dollars will construct the hosptal and the representatives of these three hospitals will go in and operate this huge medical center. There is not a representative of the District of Columbia to be on the board. There is not a representative of the United States Department of Health or the Federal Government to be on the board. We will have no control whatever over the administration and the expenses of that hospital when it is completed. If you want to do that sort of a job, why, go ahead.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ABERNETHY].

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ABERNETHY: Page 13, line 1, strike out "$35,000,000" and insert "$17,500,000."

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, this bill originally authorized an appropriation of $35,000,000, about $15,000,000 to $18,000,000 of which would be utilized in the construction of a hospital center and the remainder to be disbursed in grants to hospitals which do not participate in the center. The Committee having earlier in the day in adopting my amendment stricken from the bill the grants to private hospitals, it therefore follows that the Committee should limit the authorization to the estimated cost of the hospital center. It was estimated before the Committee that the hospital center would cost anywhere from $15,000,000 to $18,000,000. The adoption of this amendment would leave sufficient authorization for the hospital center while reducing the over-all authorization.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ABERNETHY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Has the gentleman any figures to substantiate what I had to say about the Federal Government assuming about 70 percent of the cost of this program?

Mr. ABERNETHY. I have. The bill as reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia provides, according to estimates made during the hearings, that the District of Columbia and the hospitals participating in the Center would contribute about 22½ percent of the entire cost; and when eliminating that portion which the private hospitals would contribute, it leaves the District of Columbia actually contributing only 8.6 percent of the cost of the entire program.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. What about the Federal Government?

Mr. ABERNETHY. The Federal Government would contribute 77.5 percent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. FOLGER].

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Chairman, the reason I ask for this time is that I asked the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] a question and its implications might have an effect I do not wish it to have. I realize there are hundreds of thousands of people in the city of Washington who come from the States of this Union who will require and receive the benefit of hospital facilities here in the District, and that the comparable amount that should be allocated to the ordinary city or town does not apply to the District of Columbia, where we have so many people who are not taxpayers but who would be given the benefit of these facilities. I am afraid that we will make a mistake if we vote this bill down. As far as the administration of it is concerned, that can be attended to by the Congress by a provision later on. I have come to the conclusion that we ought not to defeat this measure.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOLGER. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. May I point out that the people coming from the States to live in Washington pay for their care in the hospitals just as they pay for their food and their clothing, and they pay well for hospital service.

Mr. FOLGER. If the facilities were not here, they might die and not have the opportunity to pay for their treatment. It is a preparation for the people not only taxpayers here but people from all the States.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOLGER. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. May I point out that we are constantly decreasing the taxable property in the District of Columbia, year by year.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TRIMBLE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 223) to provide for the establishment of a modern, adequate, and efficient hospital center in the District of Columbia, had directed him to report the bill back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the previous question is ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the so-called Abernethy amendment.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands the situation, the gentleman cannot demand a separate vote on an amendment to an amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BATES of Massachusetts) there were—ayes 75, noes 42.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 162, nays 106, not voting 162, as follows:

COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking and Currency may sit during general debate while the House is in session for the remainder of the session, for the purpose of considering the bill S. 1592, the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. KNUTSON. I object, Mr. Speaker. They have already done enough harm.

WAGNER-ELLENDER-TAFT BILL

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, there has been a general request coming from all over the country that the Committee on Banking and Currency proceed with the hearings on the Wagner-Ellendar-Taft bill. We started hearings some time ago, but because of dilatory motions made by some of the Members we were unable to proceed with expedition. I believe if we were permitted to sit during the sessions of the House while general debate is being held we could make some agreement to limit the hearings and be able to report out a bill at this session. Certainly this bill deserves consideration where so much general interest has been expressed in it. I regret exceedingly that there has been objection to the request that the Committee on Banking and Currency be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House.

ANNUITIES FOR CERTAIN OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES WHO HAVE RENDERED AT LEAST 25 YEARS OF SERVICE

Mr. FORAND (at the request of Mr. JACKSON) submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 4718) to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, to provide annuities for certain officers and employees who have rendered at least 25 years of service.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VOORHIS of California asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include a letter from the Department of Justice and certain material having to do with the National Petroleum Council.

GEN. JOHN J. PERSHING

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 3944) authorizing the President of the United States to award a special Congressional Medal of Honor to General John J. Pershing, United States Army.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States of America is authorized to award, in the name of Congress, a special Medal of Honor to General John J. Pershing, General of the Armies of the United States of America, in recognition of his peerless leadership, heroic achievements, and great military victories, as Commander in Chief of the American Expeditionary Forces in Europe in World War I, and for his gallant and unselfish devotion to the service of his country in his contribution to the preparation for, and the prosecution of, World War II.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"The President of the United States is requested to cause a gold medal to be struck, with suitable emblems, devices, and inscriptions to be presented to Gen. John J. Pershing, General of the Armies of the United States of America, in recognition of his peerless leadership, heroic achievements, and great military victories, as Commander in Chief of the American Expeditionary Forces in Europe in World War I, and for his gallant and unselfish devotion to the service of his country in his contribution to the preparation for, and the prosecution of, World War II.

"SEC. 2. When the medal, provided for in section 1 of this act, shall have been struck, the President shall cause the same to be presented to General Pershing in the name of the people of the United States of America.

"SEC. 3. A sufficient sum of money to carry this act into effect is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Speaker, this bill has the unanimous approval of the Military Affairs Committee. I have taken the matter up with the leadership on both sides of the House, as well as the Speaker of the House. There is no opposition to it. I ask that the House pass the bill as amended.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, I shall support the pending resolution.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the President of the United States to award a special medal to General of the Armies of the United States John J. Pershing."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TOLAN (at the request of Mr. DOYLE) was given permission to extend his remarks and include a letter.

Mr. DOYLE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and include a sermon by Reverend Anderson, of Long Beach, Calif.

Mr. McKENZIE (at the request of Mr. LARCADE) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances.

AMENDING THE NATIONALITY ACT OF 1940

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 388) to amend section 201 (g) of the Nationality Act of 1940 (54 Stat. 1138–1139; 8 U. S. C. 601), with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That section 201 of the Nationality Act of 1940 (54 Stat. 1138–1139; 8 U. S. C. 601) is hereby amended by adding the following subsection to be known as subsection (i):

"'(i) A person born outside the United States and its outlying possessions of parents one of whom is a citizen of the United States who has served or shall serve honorably in the armed forces of the United States after December 7, 1941, and before the date of the termination of hostilities in the present war as proclaimed by the President or determined by a joint resolution by the Congress and who, prior to the birth of such person, has had 10 years' residence in the United States or one of its outlying possessions, at least five of which were after attaining the age of 12 years, the other being an alien: Provided, That in order to retain such citizenship, the child must reside in the United States or its outlying possessions for a period or periods totaling 5 years between the ages of 13 and 21 years: Provided further, That, if the child has not taken up a residence in the United States or its outlying possessions by the time he reaches the age of 16 years, or if he resides abroad for such a time that it becomes impossible for him to complete the 5 years' residence in the United States or its outlying possessions before reaching the age of 21 years, his American citizenship shall thereupon cease.'"

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the Senate amendment?

Mr. LESINSKI. Yes. When the House passed the original bill H. R. 388 an error was made so that the privileges ran to other than service people and excluded service people directly. The present amendment passed by the Senate merely adds a new section to section 201 of the Nationality Act of 1940 and limits the benefits to service people only.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It now only includes service people?

Mr. LESINSKI. Just service people.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EDNA RITA SAFFRON FIDONE

Mr. BUFFETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 5047) for the relief of Edna Rita Saffron Fidone.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain this bill?

Mr. BUFFETT. The bill is to enable a serviceman now located in this country to bring his wife from Australia. She was heretofore kept out by a technicality. This bill will simply mean that the wife can come here now instead of 6 months from now.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It was favorably reported by the committee?

Mr. BUFFETT. Yes. It was favorably reported by the committee, and it has been approved all along the line.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the immigration laws, relating to the issuance of immigration visas for admission to the United States for permanent residence and relating to admissions at ports of entry of aliens as immigrants for permanent residence in the United States, the provisions of section 3 of the Immigration Act of 1917 (39 Stat. 875), as amended (U. S. C., title 8, sec. 136 (e)), which exclude from admission into the United States "persons who have been convicted of or admit having committed a felony, or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude", shall not hereafter be held to apply to Edna Rita Saffron Fidone, on account of a conviction in Australia for having been involved in the stealing of certain merchandise. If she is found otherwise admissible under the immigration laws, an immigration visa may be issued and admission granted to Edna Rita Saffron Fidone under this act upon application hereafter filed.

With the following committee amendments:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert "That notwithstanding the provisions of eleventh category of section 3 of the Immigration Act of 1917 (8 U. S. C. 136 (c)), Edna Rita Saffron Fidone, the wife of a citizen of the United States who served honorably in the armed forces of the United States during World War II, may be admitted to the United States for permanent residence under the act approved December 28, 1945 (Public Law 271, 79th Cong.), if she is found otherwise admissible under the provisions of the immigration laws."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HAGEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a magazine article.

Mr. GOODWIN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mrs. SMITH of Maine asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in the RECORD and include an article on the making of Maine, from the Maine Publicity Bureau.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, following the regular business and any other special orders, I may address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM FOR TOMORROW

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to inquire of the majority leader as to the program for tomorrow.

Mr. McCORMACK. The first order of business will be the rule on the Reed bill, after which the OPA conference report will be taken up. Following the OPA conference report, consideration of the Reed bill under general debate. Following the Reed bill will be the amendments to the Social Security Act.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The social-security bill will follow the Reed bill in that order, no matter whether it is reached tomorrow or not?

Mr. McCORMACK. Exactly.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. KUNKEL. How much time is there on the social-security bill?

Mr. McCORMACK. One hour, I think. There are 2 hours' general debate on the Reed bill.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY] is recognized for 1 hour.

SOME FACTS ABOUT OUR DOMESTIC AND FOREIGN AGRICULTURAL SITUATION

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I have observed the expansion of the farm industry of my State and also of the Nation. I have observed the improvements in quality of food produced. I have for many years made an effort to keep up to date in the scientific progress made in the study of the production and marketing of agricultural products and in the local, State, National and international exchange of all products.

I have hesitated to present the results of the study I have made because they reveal facts which are revolutionary and which are most contrary to the propaganda disseminated by the present administration.

First of all, I wish to call your attention to the fact that the figures and charts which were utilized in my study were obtained from official Government agencies. At this point I wish to quote statements by G. L. Shores, of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the Department of Agriculture, which appear on pages 404 of the Journal of Farm Economics, volume 26:

We—

Meaning United States—

were consistently a net exporting Nation in these products—

Meaning food products—

during the period 1912 through 1924 and a net importer during the period 1925 through 1941.

The above comparisons point to the significant but not too widely recognized fact that the United States foreign trade in foodstuffs during the past three decades has been small relative to production and that except for the two war periods, the country—has been a net importer of foodstuffs.

I have used three charts and many tables from the Agriculture and the Commerce Departments. I have also used the Carl H. Wilken chart on factory pay rolls and national farm income in this study. Chart No. I indicates the total agricultural exports and imports. Chart No. II shows the exports and imports of foodstuffs. These charts were obtained from the Department of Commerce, which Department also furnished a break-down of the food items used in the charts. The imports and exports of foodstuffs include meat products, dairy products, fish, animal edible fats, grains and preparations, vegetables and preparations, fruits and preparations, edible vegetable oils, sugar, glucose, fruit juices, tapioca, nuts, and feeds. Most of the noncompetitive foodstuffs imported were bananas, spices, coffee, tea, and cocoa.

THE TOTAL AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS CHART

First we will consider chart No. I and tables showing the total agricultural exports and imports. What conclusions can we arrive at from this information?

First. That in 1925 the United States changed from an agricultural export nation to an agricultural import nation.

Second. That from 1925 to 1945 the United States has been an agricultural import nation.

Third. That in 1928 to 1930 large amounts of agricultural imports were made. Did the world-wide depression encourage this dumping of huge amounts of agricultural products on the United States markets for the dollars needed? Was the United States the best market to be found in the world? How much influence did the agricultural imports of these 3 years have on the depressed agricultural prices of 1931, which continued until 1940? And what effect did these agricultural imports of 1928–30 have on the factory pay rolls of the United States?

Fourth. That imports and exports of agricultural products dropped to a low point in the early 1930's because of low prices.

Fifth. That since 1933, when the New Deal era began, the agricultural imports rose very rapidly and the exports of agricultural products went suddenly down.

During the 1935 to 1940 period the exports were being subsidized. Even in 1939, when the whole domestic agricultural program had bogged down and when farmers rceeived as low as 54 cents per bushel for their wheat, a 25 to 30-cent subsidy was being paid to encourage wheat exports. Is it common sense to pay a subsidy to United States farmers for not producing a crop and at the same time pay another subsidy to get rid of it? Is it common sense that for 3 years of the 7 prewar New Deal years we imported twice as much wheat as we exported?

Sixth. The agricultural exports of 1941 to 1944 were largely lend-lease. However, the reverse lend-lease and the direct purchases are not reflected in these charts or tables as imports, inasmuch as these products never were actually imported into this country.

Even in 1944 the imports exceeded the exports.

Seventh. In 1945 the United States exports and imports were about equal. This indicates that the United States can be self-sustaining and self-sufficient agriculturally. The long hours put in by farmers in their efforts to go all out for production for the war effort, coupled with above-average weather conditions, made the years 1940 to 1946 the most productive in the history of our Nation insofar as the raising of food was concerned.

Nevertheless, the United States, with 500,000,000 acres of farm land and with 350,000,000 of those acres in crops, together with the ever-changing methods of progress in crop, soil, and livestock improvement, could easily produce additional agricultural products. The farmers of the United States can, with justifiable incentives, double the present agricultural production. However, they will not work toward that end if conditions continue to prevail as indicated by the chart, wherein tremendous amounts of agricultural products were imported at the same time that American farmers were being paid billions of dollars for not raising the same crops.

Eighth. A careful consideration of this chart by some Members of Congress should prevent them from advocating the school-lunch program as a program to remove agricultural surpluses. The justification of school lunches is in the benefits derived for the children who need the nourishment the lunches provide. It is ridiculous to try to deceive the farmers about the project, and the appropriation should be made for use by the Federal Security Administration. This appropriation does not belong in the agricultural appropriation bills. Any amount of food used for school lunches has been insignificant in comparison to food imports.

I now would like to consider chart No. II and tables from the Commerce Department indicating the exports and imports of foodstuffs and the conclusions that can be drawn from same.

First. In 1925 the United States changed from a food export country to a food import country—from a self-sustaining agricultural country, to a non-self-sustaining agricultural country. From 1925 to 1942, more competitive products—that is, those competing with foods already produced in the United States—were imported than were exported.

Second. The exports of agricultural products as a percentage of our total exports have gradually dwindled from 20 to 35 percent, down to 6 percent in 1940.

Third. The importation of huge amounts of competitive food products in 1927, 1928, 1929, and 1930 indicates that the United States agricultural market prices attracted the foods of the world in spite of the duty.

I would like to call attention to the seriousness of our present policy wherein the United States agricultural floor price, according to law as embodied in the Steagall amendment, is 90 percent of parity, and this 90 percent parity legal lawful floor price is greater than the world price plus the proposed duty on the most important agricultural products.

The economic situation created by subsidizing exports presents a problem for consideration and evaluation. Cotton is being subsidized now with an export bounty of $20 per bale or 4 cents per pound. I do not want to discuss the merits or demerits of such a procedure. The point I wish to make is this: If the United States has to pay a subsidy of 4 cents per pound to have United States cotton in a position to be placed on the world cotton market, what is in the offing? If there is the same corresponding difference between the world price and the United States price on other agricultural products, what will the import situation be in 1947, 1948, 1949, and 1950? We will soon be subsidizing imports unless some forward thinking is done now.

Fourth. The official figures indicate that in 1942 and 1943 the United States was self-supporting so far as food was concerned, although in 1944 our imports exceeded our exports. In fact, during the first 3 months of 1946, more food was exported than was imported. While some of the food exported in 1945 and 1946 might have been obtained from our normal stock piles, the fact remains that the United States can easily feed itself if given the American market and the opportunity. The figures and chart for the war period, indicate the imports of food, but like the agricultural products mentioned above, they do not take into account reverse lend-lease and direct purchases as this food never actually came into the United States. We must also realize that some of the exports of food during the war period were for the purpose of feeding other peoples in addition to lend-lease and UNRRA. This includes the food distributed by the Army.

Fifth. From 1910 to 1945, the percentage of foodstuffs imported in relation to United States production of food for the year has ranged from 4 to 10 percent of the United States production. The exports of foodstuffs ranged from 2 percent of our national food production in 1936; 7 to 12 percent during World War I; and from 4 to 9.1 percent during the World War II period. It is recognized that a small percentage of exports can and does have a marked influence on the prices in the American markets. By the same token, a small amount of imports can likewise have a marked influence on the prices in the American market places. With a stepped-up domestic production, you will realize the effect the imports can have on the prices in the United States markets on food and other agricultural products.

Sixth. Imports classed as competing (those produced in the United States) exceed the imports of noncompetitive foods during all the years from 1909 to 1946. The imports of competing food products have been greater than the total food exports each year from 1925 to 1942, although less during 1942, 1943, 1944, and 1945. Let us not be misled about foreign agricultural markets so far as the United States crops are concerned. To obtain world markets the present administration has subsidized these exports. The situation was serious from 1925 to 1932, the situation was made still more serious by the New Deal. We cannot give a market away and have it here at the same time.

Seventh. With the critical demands for food by the world, it is most distressing and irritating to see food wasted in our country. Why have not Irish potatoes been canned in order to furnish food for the hungry people of the world? Why is not a "potato stamp" plan put into operation to furnish potatoes to certain groups of our society? Surely the support price for potatoes should be maintained in accordance with the law and the Steagall amendment, but why use the millions for losses when the potato stamp plan could be used to help our own citizens?

Why were thousands of acres of cabbage permitted to spoil in the fields in 1945? Why were untold acres of cabbage plowed under in North Carolina, as recently reported by our colleague, Hon. GRAHAM A. BARDEN? We never had a food program during the war or before the war which was based on common sense. It appears that the left hand of this administration does not know what the right hand is doing. While food is wasted, $234,000,000 worth of tobacco has been sent out of the country via lend-lease—including $5,000,000 worth to India.

GENERAL AGRICULTURAL OBSERVATIONS

The New Deal agricultural program is upside down. It discourages production of livestock and livestock products which are associated with soil conservation and soil fertility, while at the same time it subsidizes the production of soil-depleting crops as well as pays export bounties in order to dispose of them. The New Dealers are vocal about soil conservation but continually subsidize soil-depleting crops. The New Deal subsidizes cotton exports while the sheep industry is being gradually ruined.

Here are some examples of partisan legislation which have been passed for the benefit of certain agricultural products:

First. The Flannagan bill, wherein tobacco is accorded a 150-percent parity loan, while other agricultural commodities may obtain the 90-percent parity loan or floor price.

Second. The embargo on cotton imports, wherein only 135,000 bales can be imported yearly, an insignificant amount in comparison to our United States production.

Third. The Executive order which increased the duty on crab meat by 50 percent.

Fourth. The Kerr bill which put an embargo on tobacco seed exports. When was this legislation passed? When Mr. Cordell Hull from the tobacco State of Tennessee was Secretary of State and when Henry Wallace was Secretary of Agriculture. Why was this legislation passed? I wrote the Secretary of Agriculture about this legislation and asked why and received the following reply from his office:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, January 22, 1945.

Hon. REID F. MURRAY,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. MURRAY: This is in reply to your letter of January 2, inquiring about the act of Congress prohibiting the exportation of tobacco seed and live plants. This law was enacted to protect the foreign market for American tobacco growers. It was felt that the large quantities of tobacco seed being exported annually to China and other countries which normally imported large quantities of tobacco from our flue-cured districts were contributing to the decrease in these tobacco exports.

The act forbids the exportation of tobacco seed except for experimental purposes, and the officials of the Department concerned with plant breeding stated that one-half ounce of seed is more than ample for planting a regulation-size experimental plot. This, therefore, was adopted as the maximum quantity of seed that could be exported for any one variety. However, under an approved application, a permit may be issued to cover several varieties. Permits are issued only for seed to be used in the course of scientific experiments as conducted by governmental agencies. During the past 4 years, the total quantity of seed authorized to be exported has been slightly under 11 pounds. A copy of the regulations governing the administration of this act is enclosed.

Congressman KERR, of North Carolina, was instrumental in securing the enactment of this law, and you may wish to discuss it further with him.

Sincerely yours,

CHARLES F. BRANNAN,
Assistant Secretary.

If India needed food from 1941 to 1945, and all evidence showed she did, do you really think these tobacco shipments make sense? If the world now needs and has needed food, does it make sense to you to ship them tobacco at a cost to the American taxpayers of $243,000,000 during wartime? Such are the devious ways of the New Deal.

The following information is from official tables which appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS of June 27 and October 16, 1945:

Shipments under lend-lease from Mar. 11, 1941, to Jan. 1, 1946

Product:	Value of shipment
Tobacco [1]	$243, 714, 000
Cheese	224, 080, 000
Butter	94, 928, 000
Dried milk	104, 468, 000

[1] Mar. 11, 1941, to June 1945.

The information given indicates the amounts of tobacco exported under lend-lease in comparison to dairy products. Even the war did not change the formula of "tobacco first."

Fifth. The domestic cartel, wherein the tobacco allotment determines the value of the land. Even a veteran who wishes to farm and raise tobacco cannot do so unless he can purchase a farm which already has a tobacco allotment. What is your name for this kind of a set-up? Is it a feudal set-up?

LIVESTOCK AND LIVESTOCK PRODUCTS IMPORTED

Except during the World War I period, the United States has been on a beef import basis from 1913 and the Underwood Tariff Act, until 1943. Is it surprising that the beef supply for domestic consumption has been limited? The United States with its world renowned Corn Belt is the greatest pork-producing country in the world. From 1921 to 1930, the United States exported an average of over 500,000,000 pounds of pork per year. From 1930 to 1940, the United States exported an average of only 156,000,000 pounds per year. In fact, the 1931 to 1940 net average beef imports of 229,000,000 pounds exceeded the pork exports. In two of the eight prewar New Deal years, the United States had net imports even of pork which amounted to 236,000,000 pounds in 1935 and 234,000,000 pounds in 1937. Think of the scarcity program with the expenditures of millions and billions of dollars which was in operation during these years of high imports.

When the United States converted from an agricultural export to an agricultural import nation in 1925, and when we began to be agriculturally insufficient, it was the danger signal for our economic security. There was never an economic excuse for the sufferings of the 1932 depression.

The rural people purchase 40 percent of the manufactured goods of the Nation, and as a class are the largest group of consumers. The New Deal, by its policies of giving away still more of the American market, added to the distress of the rural population of our country as well as adding to the unemployment rolls of our cities.

Chart No. III shows that the factory pay rolls correspond to and with the national farm income. If the national income is seven times the national farm income, the direct interrelationship between all groups—labor, business, and the farmer—is surely apparent, regardless of whether the hen or the egg was first to appear. It has been stated many times by many people that when the rural population becomes less than the urban population in any country the economic conditions do not become as stable as when there is the proper balance.

In the world, 80 percent of the people are rural people; in the United States less than 25 percent are rural people.

This is not a partisan problem. If it is more desirable to make the United States a still greater and greater industrial Nation, and the United States a smaller and smaller agricultural Nation in comparison, there could be no objection to such an approach. The objection I make is that this position should be so stated. But has it been? There should not be the effort to deceive the rural people of America. People are deceived enough and we should not be putting people on the public pay roll for that purpose.

There is no reason to have groups issuing propaganda telling people what they are doing for them while they are doing something against and to them. Many Republicans did see this picture in the 1925 to 1930 period and tried to do something about it. The New Dealers came along and made the problem still worse by their policies. They gave away still more of the farm market and gave factory jobs away at the same time. The New Deal formula used was to give more of the wrong medicine. They ended up in 1939, the seventh year "of the more abundant life" with 10,000,000 unemployed, with wheat as low as 54 cents per bushel, cotton 8 cents per pound, pork 5 cents per pound, milk $1.13 per hundredweight in the butter and cheese sections to the farmer. The war changed this picture, of course, but what wealth has been added to the United States since 1930, may I ask?

The whole reciprocal-trade-treaty approach whereby you trade a horse for a horse with one man, but afterward you find you also have to give 20 to 50 horses to some other more favored man, never made sense in any language. The fellows doing the trading do not have anything to lose unless it would be their jobs if they did not give enough away to enough people.

The reciprocal-trade program was not economically sound. Certain bureaucrats who were never elected by anyone to anything, controlled the incomes of the people and these incomes were reduced and no man can justify the administration of these so-called treaties so far as agriculture is concerned. The New Dealers themselves do not believe in them. Why do I say this? The New Deal erected embargoes to live behind and then told the rest of the country the wonders of the treaties. The New Deal erected more trade barriers in the form of embargoes than any administration in the history of our country.

THE WAGE PER HOUR FOR AGRICULTURE

The hourly wages of all the workers in the United States have been receiving much consideration of late. The 16-year study made by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics under Dr. Wiley Goodsell, reveals undisputed facts as to the hourly returns for farm labor in different States and different sections of some States. The records were kept for selected farms and are of course, above the average hourly labor returns for a State. What are some of the facts revealed by this study?

First. From 1930 to 1940, the hourly returns for labor expended on selected family-operated dairy farms in central New York State varied from 10 cents per hour in 1932 to 33 cents per hour in 1940, with an average of 22 cents per hour.

Second. From 1930 to 1940 on selected southern Wisconsin dairy farms, the hourly returns varied from 4 cents per hour to 20 cents per hour, with an average of 19 cents per hour.

Third. In 1939, the hourly labor return was 20 cents per hour for southern Wisconsin farms and the average hourly return for all the selected farms in the various sections of Wisconsin was 14 cents per hour.

Fourth. In the cash grain farms, on the hog-beef fattening farms, on the hog-beef-raising farms, on the hog-dairy farms of the Midwest, the hourly gross labor returns were from a minimum of 4 cents per hour to a maximum of 37 cents per hour. In 1939 when a Georgia cotton farmer went to town on Saturday night, he had 3 cents per hour in his pocket for the labor he had performed during the week. Out of this 3 cents, 2 cents came out of Government checks.

Fifth. During the war, the hourly returns increased rapidly and with the subsidies, made the hourly labor return very comparable to the hourly returns of labor in industry in some sections.

Eighth. I mention the hourly labor return of the farmer because this, no doubt, accounted for the drift of 5,000,000 rural people to the cities during the war period.

The correlation and the close relationship between the factory pay rolls and the national farm income again presents itself and their interdependence is ever apparent. This also brings out again the fact that the national income is 7 times the amount of the national farm income.

A high national income is supposed to be maintained in order to provide funds for the seven- to eight-billion-dollar service charge on the two hundred and seventy-five- to three hundred-billion-dollar public debt. If this is to be accomplished, forward thinking will be required. The American workmen in certain industries are in danger of losing jobs. Because of the encouragement by the Administration of the importation of competitive material, the paper and pulp workmen, the glass makers, and the pottery makers will most assuredly be faced with a job problem. Auto workers, machinery workers, and so forth, may not be in such jeopardy so far as their jobs are concerned. This same situation applies so far as agriculture is concerned. It should be apparent that if desirable domestic industrial jobs are not available, the city man will not be in a position to buy the farmers' product. Then again, when and if we do not make foreign food shipments and shipments of industrial products through UNRRA and lend-lease, what will be the effect on our domestic prices of industrial goods and of agricultural products?

Please keep in mind that even in 1944 we imported more food than we exported. What if imports continue and increase because the United States has the highest market in the world? I do not wish to be pessimistic, but it is evident that if this should happen, certain agricultural products, including nonlivestock products, might quickly face lower price markets.

The time has come when we should be doing something constructive about the machinery to operate the Steagall amendment, which provides the 90 percent parity floor.

WHAT TO DO ABOUT IT?

We are faced by two problems—the immediate one and the long-range one.

The immediate problem is to see that the Steagall amendment is adhered to. Let there be a common-sense approach. A reading of the Steagall amendment will show any man what the responsibilities are and what the approach should be. I have tried since November 23, 1945, to find out what the floor price of milk is to be for the 2 years after the January 1 following the declared end of the war. It must be a secret. Is it to be $1.47 per hundredweight based on butterfat used for butter? Or $2.70 per hundredweight for milk based on whole milk? The answer affects every business of many communities and the economic life of thousands of villages and cities in our land.

The long-range problem is a tough one to face. Think of the various interests which will try to block a fair, sensible, and just arrangement. The world's International Institute of Agriculture at Rome has been replaced by the FAO. This world Food and Agricultural Organization has been set up to acquire facts and statistics and act as a clearing house for information. It was and can be a forward step. It no doubt is dominated by consumer interest. The FAO was a result of the World Food Conference held at White Sulphur Springs.

Right here and now let us pause long enough to again consider the fact that 80 percent of the people of the world are rural people, while less than 25 percent of the United States is classed as rural. Can you not see the temptation to give still more of the American market for farm products away? Are not American jobs also given away as well? Why should the farmers of one country allow their products to be used to depress the farmers of another country? Could this be avoided by a world agricultural pool?

I dislike Britain's announced nationalization of the land. The British land policy may produce soil tillers that are not too far ahead of economic slaves. I talked many times with many people about this British land policy. The more I hear of it, the more I feel that it is most contrary to the modern conception of American farm ideals and aspirations. My life-long experience with American farmers long ago convinced me that the American farmer does not demand nor expect to obtain consideration out of line with the other groups of our United States society. They do not, however, want to be saddled and required to compete with an economic system of some other country whose farmers are exploited by a few people. It does not make any difference whether the big governments are exploiting these people or whether a few individuals are doing the job—the American farmer does not want his Government to make him accept this competition.

THE WORLD POOL FOR AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

There are two approaches to a world pool for agricultural products, wherein the surplus agricultural products of the world can be funneled to the spots of the world which need that particular agricultural product.

The first approach is the one now being used by England, wherein the government takes over and becomes the distributor. Certain administration leaders of the present administration are advocating the same program here and now for the United States. Russia is evidently operating on a somewhat similar basis.

How this project can be handled by governments without getting into power politics is difficult to understand.

The second approach is the one whereby the farm organizations of the world form a pool to work with the commodities of producer groups of each country. Such a preliminary conference has already been held in London, and the Farmers Union, the Farm Bureau, the National Council of Cooperatives, and the National Grange represented the United States. Such an organization which would necessitate the cooperation of these farm organizations may at this moment appear visionary. It should not be much of a problem for the United States to dispose of its agricultural surpluses because, in the first place, we have been a food-deficit country since 1925 and could be again soon. If there are any agricultural shortages or surpluses in the future they will be man-made and there is no economic need for either. The 1946 cotton acreage indicates a change of attitude on the part of the cotton people. It would be necessary to eliminate the sectional and crop favoritism which is so dear to the political heart of the present administration. Once more please allow me to mention that this is a national problem and not necessarily one that affects the rural people. In fact, all people are affected and millions of jobs at American wage scales are involved.

I believe that the Farm Bureau, the National Grange, the National Association of Cooperatives, and the Farmers Union should be encouraged in their attempt to meet the problem. I congratulate these forward-looking organizations and wish them well. I not only wish them well so far as their own groups are concerned, but for the beneficial effects of their efforts on the peace, happiness, and well-being of every citizen in the world.

THE EXPORTS AND IMPORTS OF FOODSTUFFS

For anyone who wishes to be doubly assured of the food imports—both competitive and noncompetitive—and of the food export situation, I include a table made up from page 400 of the Journal of Farm Economics, volume 26. This table and article in the Journal of Farm Economics is by G. L. Shores, of the BAE of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Food products: Volume of production for sale and for use in the farm home, and volume of exports and imports, 1909–45

This table gives in general the same facts as the Department of Commerce. The Commerce Department figures and chart include fish which is not included in the United States Department of Agriculture chart. From this table you have conclusive evidence as to both competing and not competing food imports. You can see for yourself how much of the imports is represented by noncompeting foods like coffee, bananas, spices, and so forth. You can see for yourself that all these imports of bananas, coffee, spices, cocoa, and so forth are not of the importance that many would have you believe, and would prefer to have you believe.

What does this table indicate?

It shows:

First. That every year from 1922 to 1942 the food imports exceeded the food exports.

Second. That every year from 1925 to 1942 we imported more competitive agricultural foods—the kind grown in our own country—than we exported.

Third. The gradual loss of agricultural exports during the present administration and the marked increase in imports of foodstuffs.

Fourth. That during a 5-year period of the prewar New Deal years the imports of competing foodstuff products were between two and three times as great as were our exports of all agricultural products.

Fifth. That the food produced in the United States has in 1943, 1944, and 1945 reached a point where it is one-third greater than it was in the drought and low-prevailing food price years in the 1935–39 base period.

This table should also bring out the fact that the United States food production has been stepped up. The increase in population must have consideration however. There have been many causes and reasons for this step-up in production. There has been the patriotic desire to produce; there has been the natural desire on the part of the farmer to produce; there has been the above average favorable weather conditions that are apparently to continue into 1946; and there has been a satisfactory price and an export outlet for any surpluses.

What will be the economic picture when UNRRA and lend-lease are discontinued? What will be the economic and price picture if and when food imports should be continued at the present level or increased? These are serious questions. The answer means jobs in both field and factory.

I wish to repeat that I have not undertaken to make a partisan or political speech. I do, however, want to bring out what to me is one of the most important problems that faces our country today and will continue to face it tomorrow.

I wish to read from the first page of the July 8 report of small businessmen's committee in which this statement appears:

> Despite all efforts, the competitive position of small business deteriorated during the war. Present policies are not reversing that trend.
> An economy without small business as its backbone is no more competitive than the cartels of Germany and the large industrial trusts of Russia.

I say this for the reason that it might appear that I was just trying to present this from the farmer's standpoint. That is not my intention, because having been born and raised in a rural section, I realize that not only is it the farmer, but it is every man in business in all the small towns that make our food-producing machine operate. In many of our districts there are very fine industries that are not dependent upon the agriculture of the community.

I have hesitated to present the results of this study, if you please, that I have made because it reveals the facts that are so revolutionary and so contrary to the propaganda disseminated by the present administration.

First I wish to call your attention to the fact that the figures on the charts which I utilized in my study were obtained from official Government agencies.

At this point I wish to quote a statement from G. L. Shores, Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the Department of Agriculture:

> Meaning the United States—
> Were constantly a net exporting Nation in these products—
> Meaning food products—
> During the period from 1912 through 1924, and a net importer during the period of 1925 to 1941—
> When this article was written.
> The best comparisons point to the significant but not too widely recognized fact that the United States foreign trade in foodstuffs during the past three decades has been small relative to production—
> In the United States—
> And that except for the two war periods the country—
> Meaning the United States—
> has been a net importer of foodstuffs.

The Commerce Department has prepared these two charts to which I call your attention, one showing total agricultural production and the other the total food. You can see beginning with total agricultural production for the year 1925 just exactly what the situation was. You will find that year the imports and the exports and you can follow it down through the series of years. I may say that during the early period of the present administration when they were going to cure all our agricultural ills as well as the rest of our ills we had the greatest importation of agricultural products we had ever had in the history of the country. We had a program of scarcity in our own country but we were still importing ever greater quantities from other lands.

I want to make it clear at this time that it is far beyond me to say whether it is a good thing or a bad thing to make the United States of America still more and more an industrial country and less and less an agricultural country. The only point I wish to make and I do not want to be deceived myself nor for anyone else to be deceived—if it is for the best welfare of the United States I think everyone would subscribe to it. History has recorded that in any country in which the rural population gets much below the urban population there is not a stable economy as there is in countries where they are more nearly balanced. As you all know, in our country the rural people are not over 25 percent of all the people of the United States. That is one of the reasons we are faced with the situation we have today.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIPS. The gentleman from Wisconsin is making a very important contribution, but do I understand this correctly? Does the gentleman say that during the period of 1933 to 1942 we were plowing under the third row and supposed to have a surplus, we were actually importing food into the United States?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Yes; I said that, and I also call attention to the fact that we had large imports in the years 1928, also 1929 and 1930. You may see for yourselves what the imports are that came in during the late twenties and just exactly what effect they had on the farm economy and the business economy of this country. You can be your own judge.

Let me again call attention to chart No. I. This shows food and also other agricultural imports regardless of duty which happened to be in operation in the late twenties did not stop the imports from coming into this country.

Is history going to repeat itself? That is the question I want answered.

The result was, as you know, we went through 10 years of pretty severe conditions in all our rural sections. It did not make much difference whether on the farm or in the village, or in the factory. The only people who were able to improve their condition during that time were the people who were able to get special legislation for their benefit.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I would like to add my commendation to what has been said by the gentleman from California and to call the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin to an episode reported to me recently about some butter purchases by the United States Army from New Zealand. It seems that the New Zealand butter producers agreed to sell all of their butter to the British Government at 32 cents a pound. There is a contract in existence which provides for that. The United States Army, not being able to buy butter on the American market due to the administration of certain agencies which is too familiar to require any comment, the United States Army sought to buy butter for the armed forces in the far Pacific from New Zealand. They were quoted a price, not of 32 cents, which the British Government had to pay for the butter from New Zealand, but were quoted a price by the British Government of 55 cents a pound to furnish the armed forces of the United States with butter that cost the British Government only 32 cents a pound. They wanted 55 cents a pound from us for that same butter.

I wonder if the gentleman has any comment to make on that or knows anything about the episode and as to its factual veracity. I may add that through the very good bargaining powers of our armed forces, specifically the Quartermaster General, a million pounds of butter were actually bought at 44 cents a pound.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I answer the gentleman by saying that I heard the same thing. I checked the figures presented by the gentleman from Iowa. He comes from the leading butter State of the Nation, so one can realize why he has such a direct interest in it.

The figures are correct and his conclusion is correct. When I did check the matter the thought came to my mind that it must be from now on we are going to have a world OPA and that Johnnie Bull is going to be administrator of the world OPA the same as Chester Bowles was Administrator of the domestic OPA.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Does the gentleman see any significance in that situation as connected with the $25,000,000,000 of lend-lease and the $4,500,000,000 recently lent to Great Britain?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Well, I could answer the gentleman but I would rather confine this discussion to the situation we are in at the present time. We might become engaged in another discussion.

On both of these charts it shows that the United States can feed itself any time it wants to, and that has been demonstrated very clearly here in 1942, 1943, and also over here in 1945, when our exports were more than our imports. It is going to be a problem. I do not care whether it is in the factory or on the farm, the people of the United States must face that situation, and it is a serious one to face.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa, before he leaves the room, if the incident he refers to was before the loan to Britain.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Yes; it was.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Would the gentleman say that the situation would be any different since we made the loan to Britain?

Mr. DOLLIVER. I cannot answer that. I do not know.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, it seems to me that the gentleman from Wisconsin whose analysis and whose figures have always been found accurate with respect to our food problem, is making one of the most important speeches that I have ever heard. If it is a fact that we were importing foodstuffs during the time when we were destroying food in this country, then I would like to ask the gentleman if further along in his speech he is going to tell what commodities they were. We were plowing under rows of field crops; we were drowning little pigs; we were letting deciduous fruits fall on the ground and rot because they could not be sold. During this period what foodstuffs were we importing?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I have it all broken down, and anybody can see it. We were importing wheat, pork, beef, and other competing agricultural products in large amounts. As far as these charts are concerned, they are plentifully favorable to the export situation. I will give you an example. Right here in 1942 and 1943 it shows that our exports were more than our imports. While most all of these imports were lend-lease or UNRRA, which I am not criticizing, reverse lend-lease and the direct purchases like the gentleman from Iowa just pointed out in the case of butter are not reflected as imports because they may never have come into this country. There was not an attempt to deceive anybody. The direct purchases and reverse lend-lease foods never reached our shores and were never imports. With 500,000,000 acres of land in this country and with 350,000,000 acres of the most fertile land in the world, we could easily be an agricultural-export nation. I am not contending that we should be one, but I do say that food is a strategic material; and if we are going to have this ever-normal granary for the chickens and the pigs, it might be a pretty good idea to have an ever-normal granary for the people of the United States. They are entitled to this protection, and we should be at least an agriculturally sufficient country. That is my own personal opinion.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I was not referring to the time during the war when lend-lease was in existence but to the time before that when the gentleman said we were also importing foods.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I will answer the gentleman from California by reading the statement here. "In 1925 the United States changed from a food-export country to a food-import country; from a self-sustaining agricultural country to a non-self-sustaining agricultural country."

During most of the New Deal prewar years more competitive products were imported than were our total agricultural exports. In other words, not bananas, coffee, or tea, because these are classed as noncompetitive, but wheat, beef, and other competitive products.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. A good example of those competitive imports, I believe, were the huge amounts of starches brought in to compete with our corn production, and at the very same time we were told that we had to limit our corn production in the great Midwest of these United States; in fact, we were paid for doing it.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I presume the gentleman refers to the big tapioca imports.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. That is right.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Minnesota is correct, as tapioca imports were very large in volume.

We have to face the fact that we have an American agricultural economy that has speeded up, with more production.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. May I say this in reference to the gentleman from Wisconsin who is now addressing the House. I believe it is a fact that there is not a Member of the House who is considered to be more of an expert as to the agricultural problem, generally speaking, than the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I thank the gentleman. This present problem challenges every Member of Congress.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I feel that you have done a wonderful service to the Nation by bringing out all these various phases of agriculture in this series of speeches you have made to the House.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I again thank the gentleman.

Since November 1944, we have been paying $20 a bale, or 4 cents a pound, to export cotton in order to place cotton on the world market. If we have to pay 4 cents a pound in order to get on the world market with our cotton it should be evident what price situation we must face as to other agricultural products. In other words, if we are not very careful in our operation, we will soon find ourselves not subsidizing exports but subsidizing imports. Someone must do some forward thinking. We should avoid mixing politics and economics together. I do not want to mix them, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. The gentleman mentioned these statistics of imports from 1925 to 1942, inclusive. Of course, in 1941 and 1942 our imports of foods rose. Prior to that, however, our imports were larger than our exports. Is that not true?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Yes; we were on an import basis from 1925 to 1942 and in 1944. I may say that I have obtained from the Commerce Department a break-down for the crude and the processed foods also.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I yield to my colleague, who lives only a few counties away from me out in Michigan. You would think he and I were a long way apart, but there are only a few counties between us.

Mr. HOOK. During this period we are talking about we have had a war. I wonder how we account for the fact that the farm income of this Nation has risen from about $11,000,000,000 to somewhere around twenty-six or twenty-seven billion.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I have not approached the problem from that standpoint. In order to get a decent farm price, I do not like to think that this country has to get into a war. If anyone wants to take credit for the war in order to pay their debts, they are welcome to, but I do not want to have any part of that as far as I am concerned, because that has nothing to do with the facts in connection with this problem.

You remember in 1939, which was the seventh year of the more abundant life, we had settled back to just about where we were in 1932. The only difference in the prices was that in 1932 they put them out of their misery a little quicker, but prices were so low they were in misery and the misery just dragged along that long. I do not believe the consideration of the dollar farm income of 1932, 1934, 1928, 1936, or 1944 is any approach to what we have to face.

If we can maintain our own present agricultural production, I would like to have someone tell me what we are going to do with our imports if and when UNRRA and lend-lease shipments are discontinued. I would like to have them tell me what we are going to do if we maintain a price structure in this country of 90 percent of parity. When are we going to start building the granaries and warehouses to store our imports? The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLANNAGAN], pointed out in the RECORD last year, that the world price, plus the proposed duty on all major agricultural products, is less than the 90 percent parity, guaranteed under the Steagall amendment. I am not going to take up very much more time, except to say that there are two approaches to it. Most of us here, I know, voted for the FAO, the Food and Agricultural Organization. This organization is probably a little partial to the consumer. We have supported these measures with the hope that some plan could be worked out where the rural people in one country are not pitted against the rural people of another country. So far as free trade is concerned, I do not think anyone can say that just because you have free trade with another country you are benefitting that country. All you may be doing is to provide a small group of people in our country or in the other country with a chance of exploiting the people of that country and perhaps further impoverishing the people of our own country. So, there are two approaches: One is the approach through Government control. That, of course, is the way the British are approaching it. They control a couple of billion pounds of wool. Evidently, they are going to control the dairy products in their different countries so that any time they want to they can put butter in San Francisco at 32 cents, plus whatever the duty is after the World Economic Conference is held. I understand the World Economic Conference will not be held in Washington before election.

I believe in the approach made by our farm organization within the last couple of months is constructive. The Farm Bureau, the Grange, the Farmers Union, and the National Council of Cooperatives, met with the farm organizations of many countries in London. The purpose of that conference will probably be to protect the interests of the producer. It may be a visionary approach but at least it is a constructive approach. An effort could be made to keep the agricultural products of one nation from being shifted from one country to another to impoverish the rural people of the other country. When you realize that only 25 percent of our people and 75 to 80 percent of the people of the world are rural people, you can actually see what the tendency is going to be to funnel agricultural products to the United States. As long as we maintain as high a price level as has been maintained, not only during the war, but for 2 or 3 years after the war, because of the Steagall amendment, we can expect more and more imports.

I now yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES of Kansas. I, too, want to join my other colleague in extending my appreciation to the gentleman for his splendid statement. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY], is an authority on agricultural matters. But before he buries all the dead, may I remind him that along with this matter of killing pigs and plowing corn under and things like that, just prior to the war our Government saw fit to penalize our farmers for raising what they said was too much wheat, so they took away some twenty-two or twenty-three million dollars from our farmers on the ground that they were raising more wheat than a certain program allowed.

A little later on, of course, they were glad to have the use of that wheat.

The gentleman has discussed many times the question of subsidizing the wheat farmers of the Middle West and has told us many times about how they had benefited by reason of premiums. I appreciate his views with regard to that question, but I take this opportunity to have him also observe that there was a time when they went so far as to penalize our farmers because they appeared to raise too much. That is, under the Government program.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. The gentleman is correct. As nearly as I can figure out, we have shifted the top-notchers in the Department of Agriculture over to the political field. They are more interested in the vote crop than any other crop in the United States.

We had a scarcity program carried on for years and years. They did not or could not turn around from a scarcity program to a production program without much pressure. They did not want to give up their control. It was not until August of 1943 that they took the straitjacket off the wheat farmers. Then they fined them for cutting volunteer wheat. These little things crop up in any country that is not run by an iron hand. I am willing to try to correct them and just hope that they do not happen again.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. As a solution to this thing, what would the gentleman say about a war price? All products of agriculture and manufacture, and it should be guaranteed that the foreign imports shall not be sold at less than cost of production, plus a reasonable profit, to the American producer.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. The answer to that, of course, is that we have full employment in agriculture. We hear criticism about the full-employment bill, but the farm people of this country have full employment. You can go out tomorrow and raise all you want. So you have full employment so far as agriculture is concerned. The pay per hour would be or will be based on the 90-percent parity floor provided by the Steagall amendment.

Mr. LEWIS. Well, why not do it with manufactured products?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I will leave that to you people in the big manufacturing centers. I want to see your government and my government live up to every commitment it has made in the Steagall amendment. I do want to see a little forward thinking. There may not be as much flour in the bottom of the old flour barrel as there is now, and there is no use wasting money even in supporting the Steagall amendment. It should require some common sense and a practical approach.

Now, I want to again call attention to this chart No. III to show you the relationship that exists between factory pay rolls and the national farm income. The 1932 depression is shown here. You can see the effect on the pay rolls the same as you see it on the farm income. The 1938 recession is shown here. It shows on the factory pay rolls as well. Then in 1940 you know what happened. The pay roll increased a little faster than agricultural prices. That is the reason why 5,000,000 men left the rural areas and went to the cities and got jobs in war plants. Mr. Carl Wilken has used this chart ever since I have been in Washington, and it has not been questioned in any way.

I put it up there to show the absolute interdependence between the business interests and the farm interests, yes; between the farm interests and the factory pay rolls.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. For the record at that point, is it not a fact that for every billion dollars that is taken off the agricultural income there is also a billion dollars taken away from the factory workers of America?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. The gentleman is correct; that is shown in this chart No. III. Mr. Wilken further contends that the national income for any year is always seven times the national farm income. That fact is significant.

I think that the relationship that exists between farm income and total national income should be thrown into the picture at this time.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. In further reference to the gentleman's statement about the national income always being seven times the agricultural income, that has been proven, has it not, by statistics gathered since 1900, if I remember?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I thank the gentleman from Minnesota, though I do not remember the exact period.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS. That is a remarkable chart that shows the relationship between farm income and factory pay rolls.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. This line represents the factory pay rolls and the other national farm income. They always run together.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Over how long a period were those statistics gathered?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. This particular chart runs back to 1925.

Mr. PHILLIPS. In other words, for about 21 years they have been almost identical.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Yes; and it shows the absolute interdependence of the two. You will notice how closely the lines run together in both the periods of recession and in the periods of peak prosperity.

It should be remembered too that 40 percent of the manufactured products of this country are purchased by the rural people of America. These relationships cannot be separated. We can listen to all the bedtime stories we want to and to all the campaign promises but these are facts that cannot be changed and they present a challenge to every Member of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] is recognized for 45 minutes.

CONSERVATION OF OUR FOREST RESOURCES

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I was very much interested in the discussion of the farm situation by the estimable gentleman from Wisconsin. He always makes a very brilliant speech.

There is one thing that we must remember and that is that agriculture in this country is in a very healthy condition today. I believe we have established a farm and agricultural program that has brought about that healthy condition. The farm program tackled and I think solved most farm problems. I think our soil conservation program in particular has been a wonderful one. Under that program farm income increased from $11,000,000,000 to $29,000,000,000. I think that speaks very well for the program. From my observation I believe that the only way to approach the forestry problem is to apply to forestry the program that was applied to agriculture. Trees are a crop the same as any other agricultural crop. The forestry program should be approached by the same scientific methods that are applied to agriculture through the AAA program. For that reason I have introduced H. R. 6221.

I can go into statistics as to what happened to our timber and forests, especially in the last 35 years.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. In your proposal does the gentleman make any effort to coordinate organizations like trees of tomorrow, farm forestry and all the different possibilities that are in trees, or does the gentleman apply it to national forests only?

Mr. HOOK. Oh, no. It is applied to the whole forestry industry, to the lumber industry as a whole. One of the main things, in my opinion, in the forest conservation program is the farm wood lot, the small logger and operator. The farm wood lot, especially in our section in a great many instances, and I believe in the prevailing number of instances, is that it is as large if not larger than the farmer's land crop and from the combined working of both he makes his living.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. As the gentleman expands that idea he will find other units of Government. I know I have observed that in my own State where the other units, like counties as well as individual farms, will take an active interest in promoting these smaller lots which, added together, make a pretty large total for a State like Michigan or Wisconsin.

Mr. HOOK. That is right. From the studies I have made I have found that about 60 percent of all the timbered land is on the farm wood lots and the small logging operators. The large operator owns about 40 percent.

The thing that surprised me is that the large operator is not cutting. He is holding his 40 percent and they are going into the small wood lots and the small jobbers, having them clear-cut the land, working out the small wood lots, slashing the timber clean without regard for the future so that in the end you will have one monopoly. Big industry will control all of the timber in the United States unless we set up a program to assist the small logging operator and the farmer who works his own wood lot.

Under the present logging methods it is surprising to find that two-thirds of the timber cut is wasted and only one-third of the tree is actually utilized.

This bill provides for the utilization of the whole tree, every bit of it, not the one-third.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. The other day we passed the agricultural resources bill. If it passes the other body and becomes law, I am sure the gentleman from Michigan could present a good case showing where some of these research funds could be used to get the most benefit out of some of the wood materials that up to the present time have been waste materials.

Mr. HOOK. That is right.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. And I think the gentleman from Michigan can well afford to contact the Secretary of Agriculture and insist that a certain amount of those funds be used especially in the different wood territories in an effort to try to make the best use of these byproducts.

Mr. HOOK. I certainly will. Up in my area, at least, it is said that it is a very simple problem; that they have done it in Europe. A good many of the people in my area came from the Scandinavian countries, Finland, Norway, and Sweden, democratic nations which we all admire. Many of those people know the value of the practical kind of governmental regulation of forest cutting that has been in effect there for many years, and it is common to hear remarks like these from those people: "We ought to have a plan like they have in Sweden, where a forester has to go into the woods ahead of the logging crew and mark the trees that may be cut or those which must be left to grow."

Then there are the outdoor-loving people that look to the forest not only for wood production but for a place to go for outings and to hunt and fish. I believe that many of our privately owned forests would be developed and opened up far more if there was a healthful forest program for recreation through a practical plan of cooperation between forest owners and the Government.

This bill is quite extensive. It covers practically every problem that we have to face in forestry. It contains some 93 pages. We have given it very thorough and complete study, and I trust that we will be able to put into operation something that will save our forests, our trees if you please, for ourselves and for our posterity. What surprises me is that our forests are dwindling away while in Europe they are exporting timber to the United States. Sweden and Finland are exporting timber to the United States.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I noticed an account in the Washington Star a week ago Sunday where the Secretary of Commerce sent a commission to Russia to procure lumber and pulp.

I presume the reason is that they feel we are not able to supply those to ourselves. I do not think the gentleman would want to include paper and paper products in that field at this time, but I think it shows the interest there is in the northern countries in the paper and pulp and lumber business.

Mr. HOOK. That is right. I have not been acquainted with any commission that has gone to Russia. I know nothing of such a commission. I do not believe that such a commission has anything to do with a forest conservation program. Of course, Russia is a vastly different country than Sweden or Finland or any of those democratic nations. Russia's vast territory covers practically half the continent. In certain sections of Russia, as I understand, it is cold and the trees take longer to mature and thus have a finer grain. It may be that certain woods factories and furniture factories may be interested in Russian timber from the cold sections of Siberia.

What I want to emphasize is that in Sweden and Finland over the centuries they have had the lumber industry as one of their chief industries. They are cutting each year as much as they did a century ago, and they continue through good logging practices. There is no reason why this Nation could not follow along the same practices and preserve our forests as they have preserved them over there.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. The gentleman is right.

Mr. HOOK. Of all our great natural resources, I suppose, none is closer to the hearts of most Americans than our forests. But despite our love of the forests, and despite our knowledge of how important forests are to our security and life we have permitted clear-cutting, high-grading and fires, insects and tree diseases to gradually wear out this rich heritage.

I hear talk, "Yes, that has been true, but times have changed. The lumber industry is interested in forestry today. It has a program of 'tree farms' and its spokesmen support State legislation and State appropriations to promote forestry. With the lumber industry taking so much initiative on the forestry problem, do ordinary citizens have any need to do more than support the efforts of the lumber industry itself?"

I wish I could honestly make the easy and reassuring answer to that question, "Just follow the lead of lumber-industry lobbyists and everything will be O. K. with our forests, our national lumber supply, and with all the other benefits which properly managed forests can yield."

But, I have observed what is happening to the forests, the forest industries and the communities which depend upon forest industries in my own district. I have also studied official reports which indicate the conditions of forests and forest industries throughout the Nation, and accounts of what is being done about the problem.

In these studies, I have found much that is encouraging. In fact, it is precisely because I have found heartening and encouraging developments in forestry and in industry, labor, and public attitudes toward forestry, that I introduced the forestry conservation and development bill, H. R. 6221. Those developments in forestry, and the active interest in it make it possible, perhaps for the first time in our history, to chart a long-term national forest policy and program which will build on all these fine developments and on the healthy attitudes toward the problem, to actually increase lumber production for today and at the same time build up our forests for the future. But I am convinced that cannot be accomplished without a national forestry program along the lines of H. R. 6221.

Therefore, I want to tell you what I found in my studies, what H. R. 6221 would do and give you my observations concerning the opposition which is being voiced against that bill.

In brief, the most pertinent facts about the condition of our forests and forest industries are these:

As a general trend the quality and quantity of lumber production has declined over the past 35 years, a period in which our other basic industries have increased both the quality and the volume of their production.

The poorer quality of lumber today, as compared with earlier years, is well known to people who have long been users of lumber in construction. Unfortunately, it is not something that can be measured and reported by statistics.

The declining volume of lumber production, however, is a matter of record in official Government surveys. The figures speak for themselves. All-time record was in 1909 when production was 44,000,000,000 feet. Best years since that period were 1923 and 1925. In each of those years production was 41,000,000,000 feet.

Next best year was 1941, with 37,800,000,000 feet. From that year on through the war, despite being almost continuously on the Government's urgent and critical lists—and hence favored in obtaining equipment and other production aids—output declined each year to only 32,600,000,000 feet in 1944, the last full year of the war. The 1945 production was only 27,400,000,000 feet, and CPA officials are now hopeful that between 30,000,000,000 and 32,000,000,000 feet will be produced this year. Say 32,000,000,000 against CPA's official estimate that 36,000,000,000 feet are needed.

There has been talk in the past that lumber production went down because demand declined and substitutes took the place of lumber. But if that were true lumber production would have been up while the demand was up during the war and since the war. The reduced quality of lumber on the market today, as compared with earlier years, likewise cannot be explained by a shrinking market.

While lumber production declined, lumber prices have zoomed upward out of all reason in relation to the general trend of prices. I find no official figure on prices in the peak production year of 1909. But in 1925, when production was 41,000,000,000 feet, the average wholesale price of lumber stood at 100.6 percent of the 1926 average. In 1941, when production was 7.8 percent less than in 1925, the average wholesale price of lumber was 21.8 percent higher than in 1925. Last year, 1945, when production was a third less than in 1925, lumber prices were 54 percent higher than in 1925.

To clearly see the symptoms of something having gone wrong with our national lumber situation, however, we must compare lumber prices with the general trend of prices. In brief, the story is told by these figures which, again, are computed from the official reports of the Bureau of Labor Statistics: Average wholesale price of all commodities in 1945 was only 5.8 percent higher than the 1926 average, compared to lumber's 55.1 percent. And even that is not the whole of the story, because lumber prices began their scarcity trend before 1926 and were already out of line at that time. In 1945 lumber prices were more than 200 percent higher—more than three times as much—as in the period just prior to World War I. All commodities, in contrast, were up in 1945 only 55 percent above the prices prevailing before World War I.

Lumber prices are still increasing faster than the general price trend. By May, latest month for which figures are available, lumber prices had risen to 172.5 percent of the 1926 average.

Despite the fantastic increase in lumber prices, the wages of lumber workers are next to the bottom of the ladder. Of our 17 principal manufacturing industries in June 1945, lumber was second only to tobacco in the proportion of workers receiving less than 65 cents an hour as compared with 19.5 percent for the 17 industries as a group. From these figures, it is obvious that the high price of lumber is not caused by high wages in the industry.

What then is the cause of high prices, short supplies, and reduced quality of lumber? One of the hard facts that we have to face is that misuse and neglect has been gradually wearing out our forests. I have yet to see an official report of any Government agency analyzing the current lumber problem which does not mention scarcity of suitable trees as one of the reasons for inadequate production.

The same sort of thing has been happening to our timber as was happening to the precious layer of topsoil on our farm and range lands before the present national farm program got started.

We were wearing out our soil partly because soil conservation is a technical job, and many of our farmers had not had a chance to learn the techniques of contour farming, nor the best use of soil-building and soil-saving crops and fertilizers. There was another reason, too. Many farms were so small, so poorly financed, or so heavily burdened with debt and other costs that "mining" the land with soil-depleting crops seemed to be the only way that the farmer could keep ahead of the sheriff.

The farm program tackled those problems, by providing both technical and financial assistance to the farmer.

As a result of farmers and Government working together, under the national farm program, we have gone a long way toward nailing our soil down for the future. At the same time, we have learned that good soil-conservation practices mean increased production for today as well as good soil conditions for next year's crops. During the war our farm production smashed all previous records and we achieved that record without a dangerous plow-up of grasslands and excessive soil waste such as occurred during and immediately after World War I.

Many people very naturally might ask, "But, why bring that up? What has that to do with the lumber and forestry problem?" That is a very natural question to ask, because we have been accustomed to think of lumber production and forestry in terms of large companies owning huge tracts of timberland, and of forestry operations on big areas of Government-owned lands, like the national forests. I confess that was my impression, too, when the national lumber shortage and the wearing out of forest resources in my own district first impelled me to have a closer look at the conditions of our forests and forest industries.

The facts which I found—and which anyone can find who takes time to look—show a striking similarity between forestry and farming. Both are made up chiefly of small owners and operators. We have roughly 6,000,000 farms in the United States. We have almost as many forest owners, about 5,000,000. In the neighborhood of four-fifths of our timber is privately owned. Around 70 percent of this is held in tracts of 5,000 acres or less. Five thousand acres is a big farm, but it is only a modest size forest. Most of these small owners cannot be expected to go in for tree farming unless they get help.

But it is not merely in widespread forest land ownership that forestry is similar to farming. While no specific figures have come to my attention, it is commonly admitted by every authority with whom I have discussed the matter, that by far the greater part of the logging—taking the Nation as a whole—is done by small operators. Their operations are on a scale quite similar to typical farm operations. Father and son combinations, and small operators employing from 5 to 15 or 20 men are extremely common. Taking all of commercial logging—for pulpwood, veneer logs, railway ties, mine timbers, poles, chemical wood and specialty bolts as well as logs for ordinary lumber—these small logging operations cut by far the greater part of the trees that go into commerce.

These small logging operators are hard-working Americans, endeavoring to make a living under conditions which frequently are difficult and hazardous. Most of them buy timber on the stump, actually own and manage very little forest land. Unlike the larger companies, who own extensive timber tracts, and who can hire staffs of experts, such as logging engineers, marketing specialists, cost analysts, timber appraisers, and foresters, the typical small logging operator, like a farmer, has to be a jack-of-all-trades. His operation simply cannot support an overhead of specialists. He is in the same position as the farmer, unless government provides technical assistance, he gets little of it.

Well, with farming, the Government does provide technical assistance, and financial aid as well. It has done so for years, helping the farmer to learn the most modern production methods, helping him to understand the market, helping him with low-interest loans, and sharing with him the expense of conserving our valuable soil resources.

In contrast, there is very little assistance available to the logging operator or to the small forest owner, except is widely scattered forestry demonstration areas.

Without the benefit of technical assistance it is inevitable that the small logging operators should do just what they are doing. And what is that? They are clear-cutting and high-grading forests for the material which they know how to sell. Many of their practices are extremely inefficient when measured by the efficiency of operations which can afford to employ staffs of experts and to obtain good modern equipment. Most of them waste far more wood than they use, because they have not had the opportunity to learn what all the different parts of a tree can be used for, or to solve the complex problem of marketing all the usable parts of the tree. Most of them get logs or bolts for only one, or at most two or three, of the specialized industries which require wood as a raw material.

What all this amounts to is a series of uncoordinated raids on our timber lands. The woods are combed over and over again that will yield the particular kind of log or bolt needed for a certain use. When such trees are found, it is very common practice to leave a great deal of usable material to rot or burn in the forest, merely because the particular operator either does not know its value, or if he does he lacks any working contact with its market.

Thus logging is over-specialized. To illustrate how wasteful it is, just imagine a specialized meat packing industry. One plant would buy hogs for pork chops, throwing all other parts of its hog away. Another would do the same in producing bacon, another for ham, and so on. It would be ridiculous. But that is just about how wasteful we are in a huge part of our logging.

Waste of wood in the trees which are harvested is only part of the story of waste, however, in our forest industries. Our forests themselves are being wasted away by failure to observe sound practices of forest conservation in most logging operations. That is because cutting is done—in a great majority of cases—with an eye only to the present and usually without knowledge of scientific forestry, which means, primarily, wise selection of which treees to cut and which to leave for future growth.

There is still more to the story of waste in the woods. While some of our timber stands are being over-cut with no thought of the future, other areas of forest are left too long with no cutting. Unless a forest is selectively logged every few years many valuable trees die and rot in the woods, because of old age or overcrowding.

Many small forest owners hesitate to permit any cutting in their woods because they do not understand scientific forestry, or because they have no means of seeing to it that a good selective cutting job is done, rather than clear-cutting or high-grading by the logger to whom they might sell a cutting right. So they simply hold their timber as a "savings account" or for sentimental reasons, oftentimes not realizing that scientific forestry would enable them to save their forest and at the same time get some income from it.

In other cases valuable trees die or rot in the woods because roads have not been built for logging. To prevent this waste, we should develop a permanent logging road system comparable to our farm-to-market roads.

If we can substantially reduce the three kinds of woods waste which I have just described—and also provide better protection against fire, insects, and disease—we should be able to produce more woods products for today's needs than we are doing, and at the same time build up our timber stands for the future, instead of further tearing them down. That means, first, fuller utilization of the trees that are cut. Second, it means spreading the cut to cover all of our commercial timberlands with selective logging every few years, instead of overcutting in some places and permitting valuable trees to die and rot in others.

In this way a practical program to increase production of wood products for today and at the same time build up our forests for the future is possible. There is no serious conflict between short-term and long-term goals if we tackle the problem in this way.

I believe our millions of small forest owners and operators need and deserve financial as well as technical aid to do that kind of a job, just as the farmer gets financial help in doing the soil-conservation job. It will cost money, but it will pay rich dividends as the soil program has.

The lumber trade associations, however, and the lumber lobby in Washington are not asking for such help for the industry. I believe the reason is that they do not represent the millions of small owners and operators who own most of the forest land and who do most of the logging. Instead, they seem to be controlled by the big land-owning timber companies, those who own less than 30 percent of the private timberland. Imagine the situation we would have in the farm lobby if the small and medium farmers were unorganized and the few big farm land-owning corporations—like Del Monte, Bank of America, Schenley's, and so forth—made up the farm lobby. That seems to be just about the situation we have in lumber and forestry. But is not it just good common sense, once we understand that our forests and our basic wood industry—logging—are in the main the property of many millions of individual American citizens, that we go about the lumber production and forest conservation problem in the same way that we have already learned to deal with the farm problem, regardless of whether the millions of small owners and operators have a lobby of their own or not? Obviously, they must have help if our lumber production is to be increased and our forests built up instead of further torn down.

In recommending action similar to the farm program I do not mean to imply that I consider that program perfect. It can stand much improvement. But results have proved that it is basically sound, at least when measured by the yardsticks of increased production and the rapid extension of scientific soil conservation during the past 12 years.

There are just two respects in which, I believe, the forestry problem really differs from the farm problem, when you are thinking in terms of what the Government's policy should be.

One is the temptation to clear-cut and high-grade forests for private profit. That is a matter of common knowledge. If a poll could be taken of American citizens, I venture, it would show a majority of them not only aware of the problem, but firmly convinced that the only solution to it is Government regulation. Many doubtless would oversimplify the problem by saying the lumbermen should be required to plant one or two trees for every one he cuts down. Many probably would add "like they do in Europe."

In the district which I represent, many of the people or their parents came from the Scandinavian countries; Finland, Norway, and Sweden, democratic nations which we all admire. Many of those people know the practical kinds of government regulation of forest cutting that has been in effect there for many years. It is common to hear remarks like this from those people, "We ought to have a plan like they have in Sweden where a forester has to go into the woods ahead of the logging crew and mark the trees which may be cut, or those which must be left to grow."

Second, is that as outdoor-loving people, we look to forests not only for wood production but as a place to go for outings, and to hunt and fish. I believe many of our privately owned forests could be developed and opened up for more of that kind of healthful recreation, through a practical plan of cooperation between forest owners and Government.

Well, after studying these problems—and talking them over with some of the Nation's outstanding experts on the problem—H. R. 6221, "a bill to further the conservation and proper use of publicly and privately owned forest lands and for other purposes," was the result. It amounts to a national forestry program. It combines pertinent features of the national farm program with a plan of Government forest regulation similar to the Swedish plan, and a new basis for financing and for making payments in lieu of taxes on forest land purchases for the national forests.

Specifically, the several parts of the bill provide as follows:

Title I declares forestry to be a national problem and an integral part of our national agricultural problem.

Title II provides for Government regulation of commercial logging under a plan similar to that long used in Finland and Sweden—does not apply to cutting of trees for farm and home use.

Title III provides for payments to forest owners and operators for forest conservation practices, such as tree planting, thinning young stands, selective logging, planting game food and cover plants, and developing recreation areas for public use—patterned after and in effect amounts to broadening the Agricultural Conservation Act to make it apply to forests; contains same limitation on payments to large operators and for higher proportionate payments to small operators.

Title IV provides technical assistance in management of woodlands and in marketing and utilizing forest products, and expanded research in wood utilization.

Title V broadens the Federal farm-credit program to include forest owners and operators.

Title VI extends the coverage of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act to finance small operators in the purchase of forest tracts for timber production.

Title VII to provide forest seeds and planting stock at cost for forest conservation planting.

Title VIII strengthens present system of protection against forest insects and tree diseases.

Title IX amends Federal Crop Insurance Act to include forest crops.

Title X provides for research and education to reduce the excessive accident rates in the forest industries.

Title XI provides a permanent basis for planning and carrying out public works on forest lands, including the development of permanent logging roads.

Title XII provides assistance to forest cooperative asscciations.

Title XIII provides for cooperation of farm organizations, forest operators, labor in forest and farm industries, sportsmen and Government agencies in each community in deciding which lands shall be considered forest land and in deciding how the various land use and related parts of the National Agricultural program shall be carried out in the local community.

Title XIV provides a long-term basis for purchasing forest lands to block in existing national forests and establish new ones where agreed to by the States concerned.

Title XV provides regular payments to counties in lieu of taxes on national forest lands, in place of the present plan of sharing national forest receipts, which is unsatisfactory to local governments because it is not a dependable source of revenue.

Title XVI requires that Government timber lands be managed for sustained yield and that mature and overcrowded trees on such lands be harvested, wherever feasible.

Title XVII routine clauses governing administration of the program.

Having introduced this practical, constructive legislation in Congress on April 30, I have been amazed to receive a number of vigorous protests against it, and to see editorial denunciations of it in certain lumber trade journals. It is being charged that the bill is communistic, socialistic, and fascistic. It is said, among other things, that regulation of commercial logging is the first step toward nationalization. To me that is as ridiculous as say that auto traffic regulation is the first step toward nationalizing the ownership of all automobiles. History has proved, in nations like Finland and Sweden, that sensible forestry regulation in commercial logging is the way to preserve private enterprise in forestry, because it prevents overeager individuals from destroying the forests.

Others have said subsidies—which H. R. 6221 proposes—are the first step toward nationalization. To see how silly that is, let us look again at the industry which is more subsidized than any other. I refer, of course, to farming. Government assistance, including subsidy payments for soil-conservation work, has strengthened rather than weakened private farm ownership. Our farming industry today is less subject to either monopoly control by huge corporations or to threats of nationalization than any other major industry.

Those are silly charges that are being made against H. R. 6221. I am sure that some who have voiced opposition to the bill have not read it, or even seen a factual summary of it. I say this because I am sure some of those same people will be in favor of it, once they get a clear picture of what it is, and the actual facts which make such a program desirable. That is why I have gone into so much detail explaining our forestry situation, and summarizing the provisions of the bill.

Yet another kind of argument has been raised against H. R. 6221. That is the States' rights argument. Some people say, yes, I agree more needs to be done about our forests, but it should be left to each State to work out a program to meet its own needs. That makes no more sense than to say we should abandon our national farm program, and leave it to the States to develop 48 separate farm programs. Forestry, like farming, is a national problem. Leaving it to the 48 States simply means that the job will not be done. Lumber would grow scarcer and scarcer. Our forests would dwindle and dwindle, as each State hesitated for fear of imposing stricter regulation than a neighboring State, or as it wrestled with the problem of financing a suitable program.

I want to point out, right here, that many of the areas most in need of a forestry program are least able to pay for it. Many of those areas are impoverished because their forests have been so badly misused in the past.

That is true of the Lake States cut-over region in which my district is located. There is much young second-growth timber up there, but it will take scientific forestry to build it up into good commercial forests again. The same is true through much of New England, the Appalachians, the Ozarks, and the southern coastal plain regions. In the far West they have a problem of building back forests on cut-over lands and also saving virgin forests from destruction by placing them under scientific forest management.

Gentlemen, if anyone thinks the States are going to solve those problems without the aid of a national-forestry program, their heads should be examined.

Frankly, the arguments thus far offered against H. R. 6221 make it appear that a deliberate campaign of misrepresentation is being carried on to stir up opposition. If it were confined to my own district, I would suspect that it was purely personal politics, carried on by some group interested in discrediting me with my constituents. But the opposition is more widespread than that.

Therefore, I can only conclude that some group—or groups—are interested in letting timber get scarcer and scarcer, so that those fortunate enough to own some timber, will be able to ask and get their own price for it.

One thing is clear. The opposition to H. R. 6221 cannot possibly represent the producer who wants a dependable supply of reasonably priced raw material, nor the communities who want to escape the curse of cut-out and get-out logging which dooms them to become ghost towns, nor the public which wants an abundance of reasonably priced wood products, nor the many who want forests properly managed for all the benefits which forests can yield. I point no finger of blame. Each individual can judge for himself who the opposition is and the kind of people they are. Shall we permit them to dictate our public forest policy?

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. ROGERS of New York, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 1151. An act for the relief of the legal guardian of James Lemuel Muzzall, a minor;

H. R. 1754. An act for the relief of Edwin Doyle Parrish;

H. R. 4590. An act to authorize the use by industry of silver held or owned by the United States, and for other purposes;

H. R. 4616. An act for the relief of the Maryland Sanitary Manufacturing Corp., of Baltimore, Md.;

H. R. 5025. An act for the relief of Mrs. Opal Riley and Robert R. Riley;

H. R. 5053. An act for the relief of the estate of Jasper A Mealer;

H. R. 5508. An act to authorize the return of the Grand River Dam project to the Grand River Dam Authority and the adjustment and settlement of accounts between the Authority and the United States, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6371. An act to amend certain provisions of the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6372. An act to amend the Federal Credit Union Act;

H. R. 6532. An act to provide a method for payment in certain Government establishments of overtime, leave, and holiday compensation on the basis of night rates pursuant to certain decisions of the Comptroller General, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6739. An act making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6885. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1946, and for prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1946, to provide appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6983. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment in any and all claims which the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes of Indians of the Flathead Reservation in Montana, or any tribe or band thereof, may have against the United States, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 7052. An act to amend the Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 346. An act to amend section 21 of the act of May 28, 1896 (29 Stat. 184; 28 U. S. C., sec. 597) prescribing fees of United States commissioners;

S. 920. An act to fix the salaries of certain judges of the United States;

S. 1801. An act authorizing the appointment of an additional judge for the district of Delaware;

S. 2372. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct the Lewiston Orchards project, Idaho, in accordance with the Federal reclamation laws; and

S. J. Res. 4. Joint resolution authorizing the erection on public grounds in Springville, Ariz., of a memorial to Gustav Becker.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. ROGERS of New York, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 247. An act for the relief of E. D. Williams;

H. R. 271. An act for the relief of Eleanor McCloskey, also known as Evelyn Mary Mikalauskas;

H. R. 844. An act for the relief of John P. Hayes, postmaster, and the estate of Edward P. McCormack, former postmaster, at Albany, N. Y.;

H. R. 1322. An act for the relief of the Marine Engine Works & Shipbuilding Corp., of Tarpon Springs, Fla.;

H. R. 1331. An act for the relief of the Hatheway Patterson Corp.;

H. R. 1345. An act for the relief of David M. Matteson;

H. R. 1469. An act for the relief of Cox Bros.;

H. R. 1480. An act for the relief of the S. G. Leoffler Operating Co., of Washington, D. C., and for other purposes;

H. R. 1498. An act to correct the naval record of former members of the crews of the revenue cutters Algonquin and Onondaga;

H. R. 1673. An act for the relief of the Superior Coach Corp.;

H. R. 1797. An act for the relief of Arcadio Saldaña Agosto;

H. R. 1850. An act for the relief of Louise Zerweck;

H. R. 1957. An act for the relief of the Ohio Valley General Hospital, Wheeling Clinic, Rosetta Snyder, Virginia Barron, Dr. Paul H. Cope, and D. J. E. Ricketts;

H. R. 2130. An act for the relief of Daniel S. Bagley, Jr., and Daniel S. Bagley, Sr.;

H. R. 2243. An act for the relief of Arthur A. Guarino;

SENATE

TUESDAY, JULY 23, 1946

(Legislative day of Friday, July 5, 1946)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Dr. Horace E. Cromer, superintendent of the Washington East District of the Methodist Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who are eternal God and Father of us all, whose quality is always to have mercy, whose delight is ever to grant wisdom, have mercy on us and unto us here grant wisdom. Forgive us our sins, our errors, our faults, and grant unto us wisdom that through Thine overruling providence we shall do that which is good in Thy sight, that which shall best serve all men.

Grant unto us strength—strength to resist, strength to achieve. Grant a perfection of purpose that shall be proved in the destinies of all men and nations. And now, O Lord, we Thy servants humbly seek the knowledge of Thy will and guidance to do Thy work. Let the words of our mouths and the meditations of our hearts be acceptable in Thy sight.

Through Jesus Christ our Lord. May the Lord bless you and keep you. Amen.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. BREWSTER members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

DECONTROL OF LIVESTOCK AND MEAT

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I have received a telegram from Robert M. Owthwaite, vice president of John Morrell & Co., packers, Topeka, Kans., relative to the decontrol of livestock and meat. I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TOPEKA, KANS., July 17, 1946.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

In view of the possibility that House conferees may ask for specific instruction in reference to pending OPA bill I am wiring you as I believe the decontrol of livestock and meat is most important to the well-being of this country.

No doubt you have been concerned over the increase in livestock and meat prices during the past 2 weeks. I, too, am concerned, but there are factors which have effected this which I believe you are interested in knowing.

1. Prior to the expiration of price control it was an admitted fact that a great percentage of cattle and a smaller percentage of hogs were going to black-market operators. This group is interested in reimposing price control as it needs their continued existence. This group has in the first instance been responsible for the upsurge in livestock prices. They will continue to bid prices so as to bring about recontrol of livestock.

2. Elimination of subsidies has also contributed to the increase in wholesale and retail prices but this is a wholesome effect as it brings into the open the hidden taxes that have heretofore been paid.

3. Under OPA legitimate packers have been unable to purchase livestock with the result that there has been an unequal and poor distribution of meat. There exists a pent-up demand by the American people for meat and with the elimination of price control people are determined to have this demand satisfied. With the return of livestock to legitimate channels it means a return to normal distribution of meat in relatively short time. The law of supply and demand will force prices to a lower level. Buyers' resistance, as is now developing in the country, will greatly aid in the restoration of lower prices for livestock. This is clearly illustrated in the pattern set following the close of World War I when in July 1919 hog prices reached a then all-time high of $21.85. By October there occurred a substantial decline and this can be attributed to buyers' resistance, satisfaction of the American public for meat, and the operation of the law of supply and demand.

The reimposition of price control will make certain not only the continuation of black-market operations but their enlargement.

I am confident that if livestock and meat are permitted to remain free of price control that within a relatively short time the legitimate packers of this country will drive the so-called black-market operators out of business and the pattern set following the First World War will again operate. During all of these months you have been most cooperative and I am deeply appreciative. I again urge that if the conference committee ask for instructions with reference to the decontrol of livestock and meat you vote for decontrol, and when the conference bill finally reaches the floor you likewise insist on the decontrol of livestock and meat.

JOHN MORRELL & CO.,
ROBERT M. OWTHWAITE,
Vice President.

PETITION

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Redfield and Phillipsburg, Kans., praying for the enactment of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 325) to prevent the use of grain for the manufacture of liquor or for any other nonessential purposes during the period of shortage, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

H. R. 2161. A bill to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of Algernon Blair, his heirs, or personal representatives, against the United States; without amendment (Rept. No. 1819).

By Mr. McMAHON, from the Committee on Claims:

H. R. 1088. A bill for the relief of the Eastern Contracting Co., Inc.; without amendment (Rept. No. 1820).

By Mr. ANDREWS, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

S 2419. A bill relating to the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange sites at Fort Lauderdale, Broward County, Fla., for Coast Guard purposes; with amendments (Rept. No. 1821).

By Mr. GUFFEY, from the Committee on Mines and Mining:

H. R. 4562. A bill to insure the preservation of technical and economic records of domestic sources of ores of metals and minerals; without amendment (Rept. No. 1822).

By Mr. WAGNER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency:

H. R. 6528. A bill to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces to commemorate the life and perpetuate the ideals and teachings of Booker T. Washington; without amendment (Rept. No. 1823).

RELIEF FROM LIABILITY FOR ACTS DONE OR OMITTED UNDER SELECTIVE SERVICE REGULATIONS—REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. GURNEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6035) to provide that there shall be no liability for acts done or omitted in accordance with regulations of the Director of Selective Service, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1810) thereon, together with the individual views of Mr. MURRAY and the views of the minority, which were ordered to be printed.

BILLS AND A JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MEAD:

S. 2468. A bill to establish the Castle Clinton National Monument, in the city of New York, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. MYERS:

S. 2469. A bill authorizing the construction of flood-control work on the Lackawaxen River, Pa.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. WAGNER:

S. J. Res. 181. Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to render financial aid to the Republic of the Philippines, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PRINTING OF ADDITIONAL COPIES OF SENATE DOCUMENT NO. 244, REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON INVESTIGATION OF PEARL HARBOR ATTACK

Mr. BARKLEY submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 74), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 8,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 244, being the report of the Joint Committee on the Investigation of the Pearl Harbor Attack pursuant to Senate Concurrent Resolution 27, a concurrent resolution to investigate the attack on Pearl Harbor on December 7, 1941, and events and circumstances relating thereto, including the additional views of Mr. KEEFE and the minority views of Mr. FERGUSON and Mr. BREWSTER, of which 6,000 copies shall be for the use of the said joint committee, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate document room, and 1,000 copies for the use of the House document room.

INVESTIGATION OF MILITARY DISCIPLINE AND JUSTICE

Mr. KILGORE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 305), which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation of military discipline and military justice, with particular attention to the Lichfield trials.

The committee shall report to the Senate, as soon as practicable, the results of its investigation, together with its recommendations, if any, for legislation.

For the purpose of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-ninth Congress, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $5,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

ADDITIONAL COMMISSIONED OFFICERS IN THE REGULAR ARMY—AMENDMENT

Mr. WILSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6817) to provide for the appointment of additional commissioned officers in the Regular Army, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

TERMINAL LEAVE FOR ENLISTED PERSONNEL OF THE ARMED FORCES—AMENDMENTS

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 4501) to grant to enlisted personnel of the armed forces certain benefits in lieu of accumulated leave, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

PRINTING OF REVIEW OF REPORTS ON YAQUINA BAY, RIVER, AND HARBOR, OREG. (S. DOC. NO. 246)

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I present a letter from the Secretary of War transmitting a report dated June 13, 1946, from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, together with accompanying papers and an illustration, on a review of reports on Yaquina Bay, River, and Harbor, Oreg., and I ask unanimous consent that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce and be printed as a Senate document, with an illustration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PRINTING OF REVIEW OF REPORT TO DETERMINE NEED FOR FLOOD CONTROL AT OLEAN, N. Y. (S. DOC. NO. 245)

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I present a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report dated April 12, 1946, from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, together with accompanying papers and illustrations, on a review of report submitted in House Document No. 306, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, with a view to determining the need for flood control at and in the vicinity of Olean, N. Y., and I ask unanimous consent that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce and be printed as a Senate document, with illustrations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred, as indicated:

H. R. 3944. An act authorizing the President of the United States to award a special medal to General of the Armies of the United States John J. Pershing; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. R. 5047. An act for the relief of Edna Rita Saffron Fidone; to the Committee on Immigration.

H. R. 5756. An act for the retirement of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

RAILROAD RETIREMENT AND INSURANCE BENEFITS—EDITORIAL FROM THE INDIANAPOLIS STAR

[Mr. WILLIS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "For the Favored Few," published in the Indianapolis Star of July 22, 1946, which appears in the Appendix.]

COTTON—A WORLD FORCE—ADDRESS BY BURRIS C. JACKSON

[Mr. MAYBANK asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address entitled "Cotton—a World Force," delivered by Burris C. Jackson, chairman, State-wide Cotton Committee of Texas, at the seventh annual cotton congress, Dallas, Tex., on July 8, 1946, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE LICHFIELD TRIALS—EDITORIAL FROM HUNTINGTON (W. VA.) ADVERTISER

[Mr. KILGORE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "The Lichfield Trials," published in the Huntington (W. Va.) Advertiser of July 10, 1946, which appears in the Appendix.]

ACTIONS SPEAK LOUDER THAN WORDS

[Mr. HAWKES asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a story entitled "Actions Speak Louder Than Words," which appears in the Appendix.]

NATIONAL HEALTH INSURANCE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, is the Senator about to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. BARKLEY. I was, but I withhold it.

Mr. DONNELL. I should like to have the floor immediately after the quorum call, or I can make my remarks now, whichever is preferable to the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. It does not matter to me, but we have an unfinished business before the Senate which I should like to have considered.

Mr. DONNELL. If agreeable, I ask unanimous consent that immediately after the quorum call I may have the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is agreeable to me that the Senator proceed now.

Mr. DONNELL. Very well. Mr. President, I rise to express a protest against the issuance of a certain publicity release which is reported in yesterday's newspapers. I read the following excerpt from the release:

SENATOR PEPPER REPORTS ON STUDY OF HEALTH INSURANCE

A 2-year health insurance study issued today by the Senate Subcommittee on Health and Education (Senator CLAUDE PEPPER, Democrat, Florida, chairman) finds national compulsory health insurance the most economical and efficient way to assure complete medical care to all. It urges support of a national health program. The report states that financing through "required contributions to the social-security fund by payments from general tax revenues" can accomplish what private medical insurance plans have not been able to accomplish in their 100 years of existence, namely, provision of high-quality medical care for all. The Senate report also shows that tax-assisted private plans are not the answer to the problem. The subcommittee finds that only 3 percent of the population gets complete prepaid medical and three-quarters of the population have no medical-care insurance at all.

The report represents the substantial approval of President Truman's health message of November 1945 and the Wagner-Murray-Dingell national health bill by a bipartisan group of Senators, but neither are specifically endorsed. These Senators are members of the full Committee on Education and Labor, before which hearings on S. 1606, the Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill started on April 2 and have continued until July of this year.

In releasing the report Senator CLAUDE PEPPER (chairman) stated that the false accusations of "socialized medicine" and "restriction of free choice" against the President's health program are "red herrings" and called for a constructive attitude toward its adoption. Stressing the importance of health to national defense and welfare, he asked full support of the recommendations in the report.

The subcommittee report calls for immediate action because of the urgency of our health needs as shown by selective service and Army data, and substantial evidence that we are not the healthiest country in the world.

There then follow a number of paragraphs upon the general subject. The final paragraph reads:

Signers of the report are: CLAUDE PEPPER, Democrat, Florida, chairman; GEORGE D. AIKEN, Republican, Vermont; ELBERT D. THOMAS, Democrat, Utah; JAMES E. MURRAY, Democrat, Montana; Senators ROBERT A. TAFT, Republican, Ohio; H. ALEXANDER SMITH, Republican, New Jersey, dissent from some of the findings and conclusions of the report. Senators LISTER HILL, Democrat, Alabama; JAMES M. TUNNELL, Democrat, Delaware; and WAYNE MORSE, Republican, Oregon; because of the pressure of other business, have not completed their study of the subject of this report.

Mr. President, this release was obviously given very wide publicity at least in the city of Washington. There appeared yesterday on page 7 of the Washington Post an article which is headlined in three different lines as follows:

Report favors United States health-insurance law.

The first paragraph of the article reads:

Enactment of a national compulsory health-insurance plan would be "the most economical and efficient way to assure complete medical care to all," a majority report of a Senate Education and Labor Subcommittee said yesterday.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that the entire article which appears in the Washington Post be incorporated in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

REPORT FAVORS UNITED STATES HEALTH INSURANCE LAW

Enactment of a national compulsory health-insurance plan would be "the most economical and efficient way to assure complete medical care to all," majority report of a Senate Education and Labor Subcommittee said yesterday.

"Health insurance is often erroneously called socialized medicine or State medicine," the report said, and added:

"As President Truman pointed out in his health message, such a system is one in which the doctors are employed by the Government. We do not advocate this.

"National health insurance—which we do advocate—is simply a logical extension of private group health insurance plans to cover all the people.

"It will guarantee free choice of doctor or group of doctors and free choice of hospital by the patient, and free choice of patient by the doctor."

The report was signed by Chairman PEPPER, Democrat, Florida, and Senator THOMAS, Democrat, Utah; MURRAY, Democrat, Montana, and AIKEN, Republican, Vermont.

It said Senators TAFT, Republican, Ohio, and SMITH, Republican, New Jersey, dissent from "some of the findings and conclusions of the report" but these were not specified and no minority report was filed.

PEPPER said in a statement that the report represents "substantial approval" of President Truman's health message of November 1945.

Mr. DONNELL. In addition, Mr. President, in the Times-Herald of yesterday there appears an article on page 13 headed as follows:

Senate group backs health insurance.

The opening paragraph of the article reads:

Results of a 2-year survey which heartily indorses expansion of national health insurance were made public yesterday by Senator PEPPER, Democrat, of Florida, chairman of the Subcommittee on Health and Education.

Mr. President, I ask that this entire article be set forth at this point in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

SENATE GROUP BACKS HEALTH INSURANCE

Results of a 2-year survey which heartily endorses expansion of national health insurance were made public yesterday by Senator PEPPER, Democrat, of Florida, chairman of the Subcommittee on Health and Education.

The report details the needs and shortcomings of medical insurance throughout the country.

CHARGES "RED HERRINGS"

Required contributions to the social-security fund by payments from general tax revenues can accomplish what private medical insurance plans have been unable to achieve in 100 years, PEPPER's statement said.

The report, while failing to endorse them specifically, represents approval of President Truman's health message last November and of the Wagner-Murray-Dingell national health bill.

Chairman PEPPER said false accusations of socialized medicine and restriction of free choice against the President's health program are "red herrings." He called for a constructive attitude toward its adoption.

ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS YEARLY FOR MEDICAL CARE

High medical costs is the greatest single reason why people seek charity, and why people borrow from small loan companies, the report stated. Average families, even those with large incomes, now spend approximately $100 yearly for medical care, but most families are unable to purchase adequate care, the Senator added.

About 5,000,000 persons are now members of prepayment plans for medical care, nearly half of them patronizing group clinics, the report disclosed. Medical society plans, which usually cover only surgical and obstetrical aid without home or business care, benefited less than 2 percent of our population in 1945, the report revealed.

Membership in the Blue Cross hospitalization plan was estimated at 18,000,000 persons in October 1945, said PEPPER's report which commended this plan. It pointed out, however, that the plan covers only one-sixth of the average family's medical outlay.

HEALTH STUDY INCOMPLETE

The report estimated that commercial group insurance offers cash payments to another 9,000,000 persons for prolonged illness or hospitalization, but fails to provide preventive or day-to-day medical care.

Senator PEPPER's report stated that the health study has not been completed yet. Other signers of the report are: Senators AIKEN, Republican, of Vermont; THOMAS, Democrat, of Utah; MURRAY, Democrat, of Montana; TAFT, Republican, of Ohio; SMITH, Republican, of New Jersey; HILL, Democrat, of Alabama; TUNNELL, Democrat, of Delaware; and MORSE, Republican, of Oregon.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, in yesterday's Washington Evening Star there appeared in section B an article headlined as follows:

National health insurance urged by Senate unit—committee supports compulsory plan to cover medical fees.

The first paragraph of the article reads:

A Senate Subcommittee on Health and Education today issued a report urging a national health program to be carried out through compulsory health insurance to provide complete medical care at reasonable cost.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that this entire article may be printed at this point in my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

NATIONAL HEALTH INSURANCE URGED BY SENATE UNIT—COMMITTEE SUPPORTS COMPULSORY PLAN TO COVER MEDICAL FEES

A Senate Subcommittee on Health and Education today issued a report urging a national health program to be carried out through compulsory health insurance to provide complete medical care at reasonable cost.

The report of the subcommittee which is headed by Senator PEPPER, Democrat, of Florida, said:

"* * * To cover everyone, the adverse as well as the good risks, the young and the old, the sick and the well, the rural and the city dwellers, the low- and the high-income groups, the poor and the rich areas, all this takes a mechanism as representative and all-inclusive as a national health program, built around a system of prepaid medical care.

SEES EQUAL HEALTH FOR ALL

"It must be financed by required contributions to the social-security fund and by payments from general tax revenues. Such a program will * * * make possible the achievement in the foreseeable future of our goal of high quality health care for all."

The report represents substantial approval of President Truman's health message of November 1945, and of the Wagner-Murray-Dingell health bill, but neither is endorsed specifically. The Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill is based on the President's proposal but makes no provision as to the manner in which the health-insurance program would be financed.

The subcommittee's report is signed by Senator PEPPER and Senators AIKEN, Republican, of Vermont; THOMAS, Democrat, of Utah, and MURRAY, Democrat, of Montana. Senators TAFT, Republican, of Ohio, and SMITH, Republican, of New Jersey, dissent from some of the findings and conclusions. It was announced that Senators HILL, Democrat, of Delaware, and MORSE, Republican, of Oregon, have not completed their study of the subject of the report.

STUDY LASTED 2 YEARS

Issued after a 2-year study of health insurance, the report found that only 3 percent of the population gets complete prepaid medical care and three-quarters of the population have no medical-care insurance at all.

Senator PEPPER said that the "false accusations of socialized medicine and restriction of free choice against the President's health program are red herrings" and called for a constructive attitude toward adoption of Mr. Truman's national health plan.

The report called for immediate action because of the "urgency of our health needs as shown by selective service and Army data and substantial evidence that we are not the healthiest country in the world."

CALLED AMERICAN METHODS

The report called insurance "the well-tried American way of meeting the hazards of life." It declared that the plan would represent "primarily an increase in existing tax-supported health services," adding that "no one need be horrified since more than 20 percent of our medical expenditures are already tax supported.

"Free care does not fill the gap," the report contends, "because little public money is spent for such care for rural, small town, and urban areas."

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, the document which is described in the press release from which I have read as a 2-year health-insurance study, and is stated in the release to be issued today, namely, July 22, 1946, is in fact a reprint dated July 1946, of Subcommittee Report No. 5, which was printed and dated March 1946, a copy of which I hold in my hand.

I have not read every word of both these reports—they are quite extensive, some 30 printed pages in each—but as I have made spot checks, apparently the report issued under date of July 1946, is the same as that of March 1946, with only some very minor changes, the changes observed, and the only changes thus far observed, being in the insertion of titles above certain pictorial illustrations.

I call attention to the fact that it is my understanding and belief that no meeting of the Subcommittee on Health and Education has been held to authorize the issuance in July of said March report, which, in fact, was made in March 1946.

I see upon the floor of the Senate at least one member of the subcommittee, namely, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], and I should like to ask him, if he does not mind, to state whether my understanding is correct.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I am very much interested in the comments of the distinguished Senator from Missouri, and I regret very much to have to say that no meeting was ever held of the subcommittee, of which I have been a member for some time, to consider this report, and pass on it, either one way or the other. What happened was that back in March, before the hearings began on S. 1606—I think it was prior to the beginning of the hearings—the draft of this report was circulated in the subcommittee, and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] and I both told the chairman that we regretted very much that we were unable to concur in the conclusions.

The issue presented by the conclusion was that the report endorsed compulsory health insurance. All the hearings we have had on S. 1606 have raised the issue whether this country should embark upon a national compulsory health insurance plan or should seek an alternative such as a plan of grants-in-aid to States.

What troubles me with the report now is that is appears as though the subcommittee of which I am a member had endorsed this report and had released it just now to the press, when back last March, when it first came out, we said we could not concur in the conclusion, and we hoped that the matter would be thoroughly aired in the hearings on S. 1606.

I, therefore, concur in the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri without question that it was inappropriate for a subcommittee, without knowledge of either all of the members of the subcommittee, or without knowledge of the whole Committee on Education and Labor, to publish such a report as this in the press. I can confirm what the distinguished Senator from Missouri has said. It appeared in the New York Herald Tribune, in the New York Times, and in the New Jersey newspapers. I have been called up about it. It gave the impression that I was opposed to a national health program, and all I have been opposed to is the particular approach to the program. It puts us in an embarrassing position with our constituents and with the country. What the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] and I tried to do was merely to seek to offer the alternative of a program of grants-in-aid to the States. The release to the press of this report treats the case as though the committee had already decided on the compulsory insurance plan.

I thank the Senator for having brought the matter to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. DONNELL. The Senator from New Jersey referred to the fact that he stated last March, I believe to the chairman, that he and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] were not able to concur. To whom does the Senator refer when he uses the term "chairman"?

Mr. SMITH. To the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the chairman of the subcommittee. This report shows that the Subcommittee on Health and Education consists of Senator CLAUDE PEPPER, chairman; and the Senators THOMAS of Utah, MURRAY, HILL, TUNNELL, TAFT, AIKEN, and SMITH. When this report was submitted to us in draft form, I think I stated that I felt that the conclusions drawn from the statistics were unwarranted, and that we had had no hearings. About that time the hearings began. Now it appears that the committee had approved a compulsory health insurance plan.

Mr. DONNELL. I should like to ask the Senator one or two other questions. He has mentioned the personnel of the subcommittee. Does he know whether or not the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] is also a member of the subcommittee?

Mr. SMITH. The name of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] does not appear here on the report which I hold, but I think at a later date than the early printed report the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] was put on the subcommittee.

Mr. DONNELL. I find that in the release which was put out in July 1946, just yesterday, I think, the name of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] is placed thereon in typewriting in one copy, and in pen and ink in other copies I have.

Let me ask the Senator also, Is the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] also a member of the subcommittee?

Mr. SMITH. He is chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. DONNELL. And also a member of it, as well as chairman?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. DONNELL. Let me ask the Senator also how long he, the Senator from New Jersey, has been upon this particular subcommittee.

Mr. SMITH. I think I was appointed on the subcommittee in February or March a year ago, 1945.

Mr. DONNELL. Let me ask the Senator further whether at any time since his appointment as a member of the subcommittee to which reference has been made, so far as he knows, a meeting of the subcommittee has ever been held.

Mr. SMITH. I think there was one meeting, but this subject was not brought up at all. There has been only one meeting which I have been invited to attend since I have been on the subcommittee.

Mr. DONNELL. Does the Senator recall approximately when that one meeting occurred?

Mr. SMITH. I think it was early this year.

Mr. DONNELL. But it did not have reference to the subject matter of this particular legislation?

Mr. SMITH. It did not. It considered some other legislation at the time.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I understand the fact to be, therefore, that not only was there no meeting of the subcommittee to authorize the present issuance of the health insurance study, but, so far as the recollection of the distinguished Senator from New Jersey goes, it would appear that there has been no meeting of the said subcommittee since approximately February or March, 1945, except on another subject matter, and therefore there has been no authority, as I see it, for a subcommittee report to be issued other than by the Committee on Education and Labor itself.

I call attention to the fact that in the volume which is on the desk, I presume of all Senators, a copy of the Senate Manual, there appears Jefferson's Manual, which, though doubtless not legally a portion of the Rules of the Senate, nevertheless sets forth very wholesome and well-recognized principles. I call to the attention of the Senate on page 277 of the Senate Manual, the edition of 1944, this language from Jefferson's Manual:

> A committee meet when and where they please, if the House has not ordered time and place for them (6 Grey 370), but they can only act when together, and not by separate consultation and consent—nothing being the report of the committee but what has been agreed to in committee actually assembled.

Mr. President, as I see it, in the case which we now have before us we have a very striking illustration of a 30-page printed report having been issued and given out to the press, with a lengthy press release. By the way, I ask that the entire release be printed at this point as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the release was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SENATOR PEPPER REPORTS ON STUDY OF HEALTH INSURANCE

A 2-year health insurance study issued today by the Senate Subcommittee on Health and Education (Senator CLAUDE PEPPER, Democrat, Florida, chairman) finds national compulsory health insurance the most economical and efficient way to assure complete medical care to all. It urges support of a national health program. The report states that financing through "required contributions to the social-security fund by payments from general tax revenues" can accomplish what private medical insurance plans have not been able to accomplish in their 100 years of existence, namely, provision of high-quality medical care for all. The Senate report also shows that tax-assisted private plans are not the answer to the problem. The subcommittee finds that only 3 percent of the population gets complete prepaid medical and three-quarters of the population have no medical-care insurance at all.

The report represents the substantial approval of President Truman's health message of November 1945 and the Wagner-Murray-Dingell national health bill by a bipartisan group of Senators; but neither are specifically endorsed. These Senators are members of the full Committee on Education and Labor, before which hearings on S. 1606, the Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill, started on April 2 and have continued until July of this year.

In releasing the report, Senator CLAUDE PEPPER (chairman) stated that the false accusations of socialized medicine and restriction of free choice against the President's health program are "red herrings" and called for a constructive attitude toward its adoption. Stressing the importance of health to national defense and welfare, he asked full support of the recommendations in the report.

The subcommittee report calls for immediate action because of the urgency of our health needs as shown by Selective Service and Army data, and substantial evidence that we are not the healthiest country in the world. Citing the opposition of the "standpatters who 15 years ago were attempting to block" the growth of voluntary medical care prepayment plans, the signers say that leaders who built the voluntary plans now want to go on to something more comprehensive. The report emphasizes the strengthening of voluntary group practice plans which would occur within the framework of a national health insurance system.

The report points out that no foreign country has abolished, or is considering abolishing, a compulsory health insurance system once adopted. It calls attention to the fact that the United States Public Health Service started administering a national compulsory health insurance program for merchant seamen in 1798. The Senators call insurance against risk the "well tried American way." They come out for the application of this principle now on a nation-wide scale. In their opinion the plan would represent primarily an increase in existing tax-supported health services. No one need be horrified, they say, since over 20 percent of our medical expenditures are already tax-supported.

Only half of all families have serious sickness in the course of a year, the subcommittee finds, but many of these are hit so catastrophically that they are bankrupted. The study shows that sickness and medical costs are the largest single cause for people to seek charity, and the greatest single reason for borrowing from small loan companies. The average family (including those with large incomes) spends about $100 a year now for medical care, but most are adjudged unable to purchase adequate care. Free care does not fill the gap, the report holds, because little public money is spent for such care for rural, small-town, and urban areas as indicated in recent Government studies. Concluding that a prepayment system is necessary to break down existing financial barriers to medical care, the report goes on to summarize the status of the existing private voluntary plans.

Some 5,000,000 people are now members of medical care prepayment plans, almost half of them obtaining their medical care through group practice clinics, the report states. While increasing in number, such clinics are still only very spottily available, and usually only to employed groups, it states. Medical society plans, which usually cover only surgical and obstetrical care, but not the hospital bill or home and office care, had about 2,200,000 members, or less than 2 percent of the population, in 1945.

The membership of Blue Cross hospitalization plans is estimated at 18,000,000 people as of October 1945. While commending these plans for their accomplishments, the subcommittee calls attention to the fact that they cover only the hospital bill and such bills comprise only a sixth of the average family's medical costs. Thus, they hold, these plans do not meet anywhere near fully the medical care needs of even those enrolled.

It is estimated that commercial group medical-insurance plans offer cash payments to another 9,000,000 people to cover the costs of hospitalized or prolonged illness, but not preventive or day-to-day medical care. Individual commercial health and accident insurance policies are cited as having high administrative and overhead costs.

Many people are not eligible for any plans. Many others cannot afford to join. Still others feel they do not need medical insurance, many drop out after a year or so because they "didn't use the plan last year and don't think it worth while to stay in." Other defects of private medical insurance are: Tendency to adverse selection of risk, overlapping and duplication of plans, high promotional and administrative costs, and unsuitability to the needs of an increasingly migrant population.

Assistance to voluntary plans through public funds would not overcome these defects, the subcommittee states, citing its study of the United States Department of Agriculture's experimental health plans as supporting evidence. These plans were open to all farm families in selected rural counties and subsidized by the Government, so the cost to the individual family was reduced to $20 a year for relatively complete medical care. They still attracted less than half those eligible to join, and turn-over was considerable. The subcommittee concludes that tax-assisted plans represent an improvement over the present, but they have the key drawbacks of voluntary medical insurance and cannot be recommended as the pattern for a nation health program.

Signers of the report are: CLAUDE PEPPER, Democrat, Florida, chairman; GEORGE D. AIKEN, Republican, Vermont; ELBERT D. THOMAS, Democrat, Utah; JAMES E. MURRAY, Democrat, Montana; Senators ROBERT A. TAFT, Republican, Ohio; ALEXANDER H. SMITH, Republican, New Jersey, dissent from some of the findings and conclusions of the report. Senators LISTER HILL, Democrat, Alabama; JAMES M. TUNNELL, Democrat, Delaware, and WAYNE MORSE, Republican, Oregon, because of the pressure of other business, have not completed their study of the subject of this report.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that in the instant case we have an illustration of a subcommittee report presented to the press, widely publicized, containing, as I shall undertake to show in a moment, certain implications which I do not think are justified by the facts. Yet, the fact is that this subcommittee has never met since at least February or March, and then not with respect to the subject matter at hand, so far as the recollection of the distinguished Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] is concerned.

Let me say, Mr. President, that this is but an illustration of a practice which it seems to me the Senate should not countenance in the future. It would seem to me that committees should meet, that they should have, as Jefferson points out, meetings of the committee, and as he himself states, "nothing being the report of the committee but what has been agreed to in committee actually assembled."

The practice of the circulation of reports or documents among Members of the Senate as action of the committee, outside the legally called and held meetings of the committee, is most unfortunate.

I appreciate, however, the very practical situation we have had in the Senate, the fact that we have had so many committees, so many conflicting engagements, that it has frequently been impossible for Senators to attend upon the meetings of the committees.

To my mind, one of the very salutary provisions of the so-called La Follette legislation, which I trust will be enacted ere long, is the provision which looks to the lessening of the number of committees, and looks with disfavor, generally speaking, as I understand, with respect to the matter of proxies at meetings, and also has in mind holding meetings, so far as possible, at which to effectuate the business of the committee.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to add a little bit to what the Senator from Missouri is saying. I was somewhat surprised and disturbed at reading the newspaper reports to which the Senator from Missouri has referred, because those reports give the impression that the so-called Murray-Wagner-Dingell bill is approved by the committee. As I recall the situation, some 4 or 5 months ago a clerk of the committee came to me with a report which, I presume, is the report the Senator speaks of, which I now hold in my hand, and asked if I would approve having it placed before the Senate or giving it out. As I looked it over it appeared to me to contain a good deal of valuable information, as the Senator from Missouri probably will agree it does contain.

Mr. DONNELL. I have no doubt that it does.

Mr. AIKEN. But I wish to say that I did not realize that it contained a recommendation for compulsory health insurance at this time. I do not want to blame anyone except myself and I presume it was my own carelessness that caused me to overlook that recommendation. But I did call up the committee and say that it was all right with me to issue this report, because it contained a great deal of valuable information which I thought probably the public ought to have, and I think the public should have it.

This report was issued before the hearings began on the so-called compulsory health bill. I do not want it understood that I am at this time endorsing that bill or voting in favor of it, because, as the Senator from Missouri well knows, there have been volumes and volumes of testimony taken on that measure. I do not want to have anyone gain the impression that I committed myself on a bill of that kind before having an opportunity to study the testimony.

The Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] have been very diligent in attending those committee meetings. But it has been impossible for myself and the other members of the committee to attend many of the hearings. When the time comes to act on that bill, if it comes this year—I do not expect it will come very soon, from all appearances—then I should try to vote for or against approving it according to the evidence of the testimony which has been presented.

I should like to say further, if the Senator from Missouri will permit me, that I feel that this over-all bill, or omnibus bill, covering all features of national health, has done a great deal of good, because it has made the public conscious of the need for better health programs than we have had up to this time. It has brought out a great mass of worth-while information, and without this bill being before the committee, and without the hearings, I dare say we would have been unable to effect passage of other health bills which have been vitally necessary to the public welfare. So I think the bill has done a great deal of good already, merely by calling public attention to the need for better health programs. But I do not want it understood that I am approving the Murray-Wagner-Dingell bill or any particular bill until the time comes when the committee meets in regular order and we vote on the bill according to the testimony which has been given, and which, as I have said, comprises so many hundred thousand words that it simply has been impossible to digest it up to this time.

Mr. DONNELL. I thank the Senator for his remarks. I desire to take this opportunity, as I have before the Committee on Education and Labor, to concur in the view which the Senator has suggested to the effect that the presentation of the bill, S. 1606, has had a very wholesome effect in centering the attention of the people of this Nation upon this problem, and I think doubtless the predecessor bill, S. 1050, served a similar good purpose. I do not mean, however, to imply by a concurrence in this respect that I am approving either of those bills, but I think that they have centered the attention of the medical profession and of the general public upon the importance of health problems, and personally I feel that a wholesome purpose has been subserved already by the presentation of those bills.

As to whether or not either of them should be enacted into law, however, is quite another question, as to which—and, as I understand this is also the attitude of the distinguished Senator from Vermont—I do not care to place myself in the position of endorsing either bill until after full and complete consideration shall have been given by the entire Committee on Education and Labor in the light of the testimony which has been taken so voluminously.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I think the enactment of the hospital-construction bill, the passage of the dental-research bill, the passage of the psychiatric bill, so-called, and other bills, are steps which have been taken toward the objective of the omnibus bill, which was introduced by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and Representative DINGELL. I think this Congress has made great progress toward promoting better health conditions in the United States. I want to give credit in a large measure to this omnibus bill, which we might say has been held as a threat over those who are opposed to it, and has perhaps prompted them to work harder to take steps toward the main objective than they otherwise would have done. I think the report, although it was not adopted by a vote at a formal meeting of the committee itself, contains information which everyone should read. I simply rose to state that I do not intend to vote for or against the omnibus health bill until I have had a chance to study and digest the testimony more than I have had up to this time.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a comment?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. SMITH. I want, of course, to identify myself with the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Vermont in the over-all feeling that this discussion of the health of our people has been most valuable. I have welcomed the fact that we have had these hearings on this health bill. What I object to, and I am joining with the Senator from Missouri in objecting, is that a report of the subcommittee, which should have gone, if it went anywhere, to the whole committee, and never did, should have been given to the press as though it were the conclusion of the committee; and the impression was created that those who favor this particular program of compulsory health insurance are the ones advocating the general health program, and the rest of us who questioned that particular item and who appeared as questioners, are against it. That is the unfairness of this method of treatment. I do not think any reports of this sort should go out which seems to prejudge the case which is now pending after hearings, and on which we will all have to act as to whether we believe the omnibus bill is desirable or whether we will be satisfied with the bills as they have come out step by step, as the Senator from Vermont has suggested.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I wish to reiterate the statement which I made a few minutes ago, that this report was submitted to me. I was given an opportunity by the clerk of the committee to read it. I cannot say that I had time to study it thoroughly. But it did have my approval; that is, in placing it before the full committee, or before the Senate, and if I inadvertently and prematurely passed judgment on a compulsory health bill, that is purely my own fault and not the fault of anyone else.

Mr. DONNELL. May I ask the Senator when the report was presented to him for his word as to whether or not he approved it,

Mr. AIKEN. I should say in the late winter or early spring.

Mr. DONNELL. Was it presented to the Senator during the month of July 1946?

Mr. AIKEN. No; I have not seen it since. I have not read it since it has been printed.

Mr. DONNELL. As I understand, the Senator has not seen it since late winter or 1945 or early spring of 1946?

Mr. AIKEN. That is correct.

Mr. DONNELL. Hearings on Senate bill 1606 began on April 2, 1946.

Mr. AIKEN. That is correct.

Mr. DONNELL. Has the Senator ever seen the report which was given out on July 22, 1946, on or after April 2, 1946?

Mr. AIKEN. No. So far as I can recall, no one has spoken to me about a reprint, or reissue, or a new release of the report since the hearings started in April on the Murray-Wagner-Dingell bill.

Mr. DONNELL. The distinguished Senator from Vermont referred to the fact that in his judgment the inference to be drawn from newspaper articles which were published pursuant to this release is that those who had agreed to the report were approving the Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill. I take it that the inference so drawn by the newspapers was perhaps based upon some contents of the report, but certainly upon this sentence from the report:

> The report represents the substantial approval of President Truman's health message of November 1945 and the Wagner-Murray-Dingell national health bill by a bipartisan group of Senators, but neither are specifically endorsed.

The report continues:

> These Senators—

I may say again that the only Republican member is the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN]— > are members of the full Committee on Education and Labor, before which hearings on S. 1606, the Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill, started on April 7, and have continued until July of this year.

So this report, redated and republished in July 1946, and given out to the press on July 22, 1946, is substantially the same, so far as I have been able to observe, as the one which I hold in my hand, bearing date of March 1946. The report was issued in March 1946, before a single solitary syllable of testimony had been taken in the hearings on Senate bill 1606, beginning April 2, 1946.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I wish to associate myself with the Senator in protest against the way in which the report of the subcommittee has been handled. My attention has been called to a report in the Washington Post of Sunday, in which it was stated that the report, signed by four Senators, favors a National Health Insurance Act. There is some statement of a general conclusion to that effect. The article continues:

It said Senators TAFT, Republican, Ohio, and SMITH, Republican, New Jersey, dissent from "some of the findings and conclusions of the report," but these were not specified, and no minority report was filed.

PEPPER said in a statement that the report represents "substantial approval" of President Truman's health message of November 1945.

Strictly speaking, the statement that I dissented from some of the findings and conclusions of the report is true; but all I dissented from was the main conclusion of the report. I think that fact is not sufficiently brought out.

Furthermore, it is stated that no minority report was filed, as though there had been no substantial dissent, whereas, of course, there was no opportunity to file a minority report. We did not even know that the subcommittee's report of last March was to be revived and published. It is not usual to make a minority report from a subcommittee when the committee itself is considering the entire measure. So the general impression given by the newspaper report is wholly and completely erroneous.

I wish to invite the Senator's attention to the fact that the Committee on Education and Labor is issuing a good many reports, not exactly from the committee, but under the sponsorship of the committee, all of which are propaganda in favor of national health insurance—notably Senate committee print No. 5, entitled "Medical Care Insurance; Social Insurance Program for Personal Health Services." When we read further, we find that it is a report from the Bureau of Research and Statistics of the Social Security Board to the Committee on Education and Labor, United States Senate, but it is published under the sponsorship of the committee. I do not know how many thousands are being distributed throughout the United States.

Mr. DONNELL. That is a 185-page document, is it not?

Mr. TAFT. Yes. It consists of 185 pages. So what the committee is doing, before the committee has acted, is in effect conducting a national propaganda for national health insurance. I do not think that is the proper function of the committee, certainly until it has reached a final decision.

Mr. DONNELL. I thank the Senator.

I read from the Times-Herald of yesterday, in the article which has already been offered for the RECORD, as bearing on the construction which the press has placed—and I think very properly—upon the release which was issued, from which I have read:

The report, while failing to endorse them specifically, represents approval of President Truman's health message last November and of the Wagner-Murray-Dingell national health bill.

Chairman PEPPER said, "False accusations of socialized medicine and restriction of free choice against the President's health program are red herrings." He called for a constructive attitude toward its adoption.

It will be recalled that I read the expression "red herring" earlier from the release which is now incorporated in the RECORD.

Mr. President, I wish to mention a few further facts about this release. In the first place, I invite attention to the fact that according to the document itself, which has been released by the distinguished Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the names of only four of the members of the subcommittee appear below it as approving it—CLAUDE PEPPER, ELBERT D. THOMAS, JAMES E. MURRAY, and GEORGE D. AIKEN. The total number of members of the subcommittee, as given in the copies which I have before me, is nine, consisting of those whose names I have read, and in addition the names of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TUNNELL], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the name of the Senator from Oregon being appended in typewriting on one copy, and in pen and ink on others.

I invite attention to the fact that according to this very document itself, which was handed out in the press release of July 22, the membership of the subcommittee consists of nine members, of whom only four are represented as approving it. According to my arithmetic, four is less than a majority. How can it be said that the action of four of nine members of the subcommittee amounts to approval by the subcommittee itself?

I call attention to the fact that among the rules of the Senate is a very wholesome one referring to the matter of submission of reports by committees to the Senate. Rule XXV provides in part as follows:

Nor shall any report be made to the Senate that is not authorized by the concurrence of more than one-half of a majority of such entire membership.

Emphasizing what the Senator from Ohio has stated, let me say that the committee which has issued the document referred to in the press release is not the Committee on Education and Labor. It is a subcommittee of the Committee on Education and Labor. As I see it, it is but an arm of the Committee on Education and Labor. Its duty is to report back to the Committee on Education and Labor. There are 18 members of the Committee on Education and Labor; and under the rules of the Senate before the opinion of the Committee on Education and Labor can be submitted to the Senate, at least 10 of those 18 must concur in the expression of opinion.

I do not see the distinguished Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] in the Chamber. Yesterday I notified him in person that I intended to make a protest in this matter. I do not recall whether I used the term "protest," but I informed him that I intended to bring this matter up on the floor of the Senate immediately following the vote on the measure which was before us yesterday. That proved to be impracticable, whereupon, being unable to locate the Senator this morning, I personally gave word over the telephone to his secretary, Mr. Fokes, at about a quarter before eleven, that I expected to bring this matter up on the floor of the Senate.

The release to which I have referred states that the report represents the substantial approval of the Wagner-Murray-Dingell national health bill by a bipartisan group of Senators. I take it that technically, inasmuch as there is one Republican in that list, perhaps had the group constituted a majority of the subcommittee, the statement might be correct. But since there is only one Republican Senator in the group, and since the report itself was signed by less than a majority of the subcommittee, I take it that it is somewhat extravagant to indicate that it is an expression of approval by a bipartisan group of Senators of the Wagner-Murray-Dingell national health bill.

Mr. President, reference has been made to the fact that the report which has now been given out under the release which has been issued, as I have indicated, under the headline "Senator PEPPER reports on study of health insurance," indicates that it is a substantial approval of the Wagner-Murray-Dingell health bill, and further indicates that the hearings began on April 2, which was before the issuance of the report. But I should like to call attention to one or two facts about the hearings.

In the first place, the Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill hearings have not been held by the subcommittee which has undertaken to issue this literature, and the chairman of which has issued the release. The Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill hearings have been held, not by the subcommittee, but by the entire committee. I call attention to the further fact that 35 hearings have been held on the Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill, and the first hearing was held on April 2. In respect to the four Senators, members of the subcommittee, whose report is referred to in the release given out by the Senator from Florida; namely, the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the fact is that the Senator from Montana attended all the hearings. I realize that the other members of the committee are extremely busy, just as the Senator from Montana is, of course; and I do not mean this comment in the slightest as a criticism of them. But the fact is that one member of that group of four attended but two of the 35 hearings, and the two remaining members of that group attended nine of the 35 hearings. Yet, here comes this report, backed up by a press release, indicating that it represents approval of the Wagner-Murray-Dingell health bill by a bipartisan group of Senators, although the group by which the report is issued in the first place is not the group which is considering the bill, for the group which is considering it is the entire committee.

In the second place, as I have said, not even a majority of the subcommittee approved the report.

In the third place, two of the four members of the group referred to have attended but nine of the 35 hearings held by the committee, and one member of that group has attended but two of the hearings, although the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] has, as I have indicated, attended all the hearings.

As a matter of fact, Mr. President, it would require a great deal of industry for any man to acquaint himself up to this time with the contents of the record of those 35 hearings, without giving extensive study and time to the task. Actually, only eight of the hearings have been printed, although it is true that mechanically reproduced copies of the stenographic transcript have been prepared. I do not know whether they have been distributed. I have in my office, pursuant to request, received all or substantially all of them, I think.

But I call attention to the fact that the eight hearings which have been printed involve 549 pages of printed matter, and there yet remain 27 of the 35 hearings to be printed.

Aside from these matters, Mr. President, it seems to me there is a further fundamental matter at issue here, namely, the conception of what is a subcommittee. In the first place, I submit that this subcommittee has the distinction of having been distinctly authorized by a Senate resolution. I hold in my hand Senate Resolution 74, of the Seventy-eighth Congress, first session, which provides—

That the Committee on Education and Labor, or a subcommittee thereof, to be appointed by the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, be authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation, in cooperation with such public and private agencies and such persons as it might see fit to consult regarding the distribution and utilization of medical personnel, facilities, and related health facilities.

I call attention to the fact, too, that by the terms of Senate Resolution 62, of the Seventy-ninth Congress, first session, the authority granted by Senate Resolution 74, to which I have just referred, was continued in full force and effect during the Seventy-ninth Congress. I also call attention to the fact that while Senate Resolution 74 contains authority for the appointment by the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor of a subcommittee, nevertheless the provision with respect to the report to the Senate says that—

The committee shall report to the Senate, as soon as practicable, the results of its study and investigation, together with its recommendations.

It will be noted that at various places in Senate Resolution 74 mention is made either of the committee or of the subcommittee. For instance, in the paragraph from which I have read, which contains provision for the committee to report to the Senate, the opening sentence reads as follows:

Resolved, That the said committee or subcommittee be authorized and directed to study and investigate—

And so forth. But the obligation of making the report rests, not upon the subcommittee but upon the entire committee. It would seem to me that a subcommittee is an agent of the entire committee and is appointed to report back to the committee, for its information and advice, rather than to issue, either as the entire subcommittee, or, as in this case, apparently only as the chairman thereof, statements and reports. I say that if it is advisable to issue the valuable information which is contained in this report, and I assume it is of value, as the Senator from Vermont has indicated, nevertheless, certainly the subcommittee is going far beyond its scope in issuing this report without authority first having been derived from the Committee on Education and Labor, by means of the chairman, by whom the subcommittee was appointed.

So, Mr. President, I submit that in this case we have a situation in which an improper procedure has been adopted, a procedure which permits a body which was not considering the hearings upon Senate bill 1606, through its chairman to give out to the public a statement as a result of which a misapprehension would readily occur, and, in fact, must directly flow from the language used in the release to which I have referred, namely, that—

The report represents the substantial approval of * * * the Wagner-Murray-Dingell National Health bill by a bypartisan group of Senators.

Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] has just handed me a copy of the report. Upon its very face and subsequently in the opening sentence of the report, it is shown that it is a report to the Senate Committee on Education and Labor from the Subcommittee on Health and Education: I quote:

Interim report from the Subcommittee on Health and Education to the Committee on Education and Labor, United States Senate, pursuant to Senate Resolution 62 (extending S. Res. 74, 78th Cong.)

Then at the outset of the report itself the further language appears:

Report to the Senate Committee on Education and Labor from the Subcommittee on Health and Education.

Mr. President, I take it that this practice should not be indulged in. I take it that the practice of subcommittees should be to report to the full committees, and that the full committees then can make up their own minds as to what should be the expression of the committees, and that in accordance with the rules of the Senate the committees themselves, not subcommittees, unless authorized by the committees, can then make adequate and proper report to the Senate itself.

Mr. HUFFMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hart	O'Daniel
Andrews	Hawkes	Overton

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOSSETT] are absent because of illness.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] is attending the meeting of the Maryland Democratic State Convention, and is, therefore, necessarily absent.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND], and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART] are detained on public business.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are absent on official business, having been appointed to the commission on the part of the Senate to participate in the Philippine independence ceremonies.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] is absent on official business, being a member of the commission appointed to attend the Philippine Independence ceremonies.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business as a member of the Special Committee on Atomic Energy.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

TERMINAL LEAVE FOR ENLISTED PERSONNEL OF THE ARMED FORCES

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 4051) to grant to enlisted personnel of the armed forces certain benefits in lieu of accumlated leave.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I wish to address myself to House bill 4051, which provides for terminal leave pay for enlisted men of the armed forces. The purpose of the measure is to correct inequalities between enlisted men and officers.

As the Senate well knows, an enlisted man and an officer serving during the war, let us say in the southern Pacific, might have been on the same ship, in the same land forces, or in the same marine establishment. They served together during the war, undertook the same objectives, and underwent the same hardships. When they returned home the officer was given terminal leave and the enlisted man was given nothing. That inequality has caused considerable dissatisfaction among the enlisted men and has had much to do with the controversy which has taken place over the caste system. Not only do officers receive terminal leave, but civil-service employees receive terminal leave. During the war civil-service employees were attached to the armed forces throughout the world, and when they returned to the United States they received accumulated leave amounting to 90 days. The officers received accumulated leave amounting to 120 days. That left only the enlisted men without any terminal leave.

Many bills have been introduced on this subject. I have sent to the Military Affairs Committee for a list of bills which I will receive in a moment, and after receiving it I shall wish to have it placed in the RECORD together with the names of the introducers of the bills. Many bills on this subject have been introduced also in the House. The subject is one which calls for correction. I am in hope that House bill 4051, which is now before the Senate, will be enacted into law.

I recall that I introduced Senate bill 721 on March 12, 1945. While it was discussed on several occasions by the Military Affairs Committee, it was not approved immediately by the committee. It did not come forth from that committee with a favorable report until the House bill was sent to the Senate. When that was done we were able to get the bill out of the committee.

First, we discovered that the Bureau of the Budget was opposed to the measure. I undertook the problem of reconciling the War Department, the Navy Department, the Bureau of the Budget, and the Treasury Department in an effort to get them to support the bill and not disapprove it.

A great many conferences were held, and finally a bill was agreed upon. The most radical change made in the House bill is that the payments to be made to both men and officers will be in bonds instead of in cash. The Treasury and the Bureau of the Budget deem that matter of extreme importance, because, as they said, it lessened the inflationary effect of the measure. This bill is estimated by its sponsors in the House of Representatives to cost $2,000,000,000; the War and Navy Departments estimate that it will cost the Treasury $2,750,000,000; and the subcommittee of which I was chairman estimated that the cost might very well be $3,000,000,000. So it is quite a sum of money, and, distributed as it would be under the terms of the bill it would immediately move into the economy of the country; it would immediately become spending money, and its inflationary effect would be extreme. That is the reason why the Army and the Navy and the Treasury and the Budget Bureau advocated the bond-payment system.

The bonds draw interest at 2½ percent; they will run for 5 years and are nonnegotiable, so that the person receiving the bonds cannot spend them until the end of the 5-year period. That acts as a great advantage to the men receiving the bonds, because it is well understood at the present time that we are in an inflationary cycle. In the 5 years perhaps we will not be in that inflationary cycle; at least it is hoped that we will not be; so a dollar will be worth more, and it will not be difficult for the Treasury to finance the proposal.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SWIFT in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I thought it might be well at this time to point out that the able Senator from Colorado, who now has the floor, was the chairman of the subcommittee on this bill. I served with him on that subcommittee. The action with reference to the bond feature of the bill was taken by the full committeee after the bill had been reported by the subcommittee favorable to allowing the terminal leave pay for the enlisted men.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct.

Mr. REVERCOMB. After discussion in the full committee, with the recommendations before it from the President, the War Department, the Navy Department, and, as I recall, from the Bureau of the Budget, the bill, which, when reported by the subcommittee, provided for payment in cash, was changed in the full committee to the form in which the bill was reported to the floor and as it now appears on the calendar. I believe that is correct, is it not?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes; that is correct. The subcommittee, in other words, did not recommend payment in bonds, but that change in the bill was agreed to by the full committee at the insistence of the departments mentioned.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to ask the Senator if I am correct in my understanding of the bill that the enlisted men who will get this pay will be in the same category as officers.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. They will be in exactly the same category after September 1. There will be a slight difference between the time the bill is enacted and September 1, in that during that period the officer can still take terminal leave; but after September 1 they are put exactly in the same category.

Mr. LUCAS. That was my understanding. In other words, after September 1 of this year, the officers and enlisted men, so far as terminal-leave pay are concerned, are on exactly the same basis.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. They are on the same basis.

Mr. LUCAS. As I understand, there are approximately 11,000,000 claims to be paid under this measure.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. It is anticipated that 11,000,000 claims will be paid under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Let us keep the record straight. The bill does not give pay to the enlisted man, but the officers were given pay. Is not that true?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. It does not give them cash, but pays them in bonds. Under the old law an officer actually took his terminal leave. After he was discharged from the Army and went home he wore his uniform and remained on the pay roll for the amount of his terminal leave and got cash.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. So, to be fair with the enlisted man, we should pay him in cash, as we paid the officer. Is not that true?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Of course, we have to be fair to the enlisted man and we want to be as fair to him as we can; but, as I see it, it is a great advantage to the enlisted man to be paid in bonds, and they are not objecting to that. The American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Disabled American Veterans, and other veterans' organizations have no objection to the bond proposal.

Mr. HUFFMAN. If the amount involved is less than $50, they can be paid in cash under this plan, can they not?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. If the amount is less than $50 it is to be paid in cash under this provision; and if the veteran dies after he is discharged from the Army it is paid in cash; or if he were discharged prior to January 1, 1943, it is paid in cash. Take the man who was discharged early in 1943. His bond will be payable in 1948, and he will get 2½ percent interest during that 5-year period; so it is quite an advantage to him.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further for one more question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. As I understand the situation, a law at present on the statute books gives to officers terminal leave pay, but there is no comparable law so far as enlisted men are concerned.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. The law as originally passed gave to the officers cash pay. Now the Congress proposes to pass a bill which gives to the enlisted men bonds. The point I want to have made clear is this: Will the officers who are now coming out of the Army be in the same category with the enlisted men so far as the bonds are concerned, or will officers continue to get cash?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. For the time being they can take their terminal leave as they have been doing, but after September 1, 1946, they will be on exactly the same basis. Officers are coming out of the service all the time; some of them are half way through their terminal leave vacation, and it is very difficult to make a retroactive law taking away something from someone who has had it; and that is not the object of the law.

Mr. LUCAS. I agree with the Senator on that point.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. But after September 1, 1946, the enlisted man and the officer will be on precisely the same basis. The difficulty, I may say to the Senator, is that we are making this bill retroactive until September 8, 1939. We are paying for something that occurred in the past and of course we are making it apply to all the armed forces. As a matter of fact, we refer to the armed forces from now on. After September 1 it is the armed forces terminal leave pay bill, and that is its title.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I believe a question was addressed to the Senator from Colorado a moment ago as to whether heretofore there was any law dealing with the enlisted men similar to the law providing terminal-leave pay for officers. I wish to recall to memory that when the mustering-out pay bill came to the floor of the Senate it applied only to enlisted men and was so reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, but after it got on the floor it was amended on motion of a Member of the Senate to apply to three grades of officers. Therefore we had the situation of those three grades of officers receiving not only terminal-leave pay, but mustering-out pay. That, as much as anything else, created a situation which made it almost necessary to pass a bill giving terminal-leave pay to the enlisted man.

Had that bill applied only to the enlisted man as originally intended, so far as mustering-out pay was concerned, there would be far less reason to apply terminal-leave pay to the enlisted man today, but, as I have said, it was amended on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Senator is correct about that. The first three pay grades of the commissioned officers receive mustering-out pay and receive terminal-leave pay.

Mr. REVERCOMB. That is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The whole purpose of the pending bill is to establish equality in the armed forces, and, of course, we could not do it in any other way.

I wish to be certain that the Senator from Illinois understands the following point, which I do not think my answers cleared up entirely: After September 1, 1946, no one will get bonds or payments of any kind. The men are going to take their vacations, they are going to take their terminal leave. Everyone is going to do that. The bond issues are to apply only up until September 1, 1946, but they are made necessary because of this accumulated amount of money, this $3,000,000,000, which the Treasury felt they could not stand at this time, and that the economy of the country could not stand. So payments in bonds were advocated by them.

The sole theory of granting a man a vacation is that he will render better service. For too long a time terminal leave has been used as a vehicle for increasing salaries. It was not intended to work that way. A man was supposed to take his vacation and come back from his vacation refreshed, with perhaps a new viewpoint, so that he could get out of the rut and render better service because of the vacation that was provided. But it has not been working that way. The men accumulated the terminal leave instead of taking a vacation, and what it has really amounted to was an increase in their pay.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield first to the Senator from Illinois to see whether I have cleared up the point he raised.

Mr. LUCAS. I think I clearly understood my distinguished colleague in his statement, but I am not sure I know what happens in the way of payments after September 1. Are the payments then to be made in cash to all officers and enlisted men, or in bonds? How do they get it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. They are all to have vacations with pay after September 1. No bonds are to be issued after September 1.

Mr. LUCAS. I desire to make one further observation. I doubt if there is any piece of veterans' legislation which has had more attention on the part of the men in the armed services, the enlisted men, at least, than this terminal pay bill. I think Congress is justified in doing what it is doing. It will eliminate any thought of discrimination between the enlisted man and the officer. Of course, anyone who knows what the officer is getting under the old law would have to say that the enlisted man is being discriminated against, unless the Congress of the United States takes such action as that it is about to take today.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Of course, that is the only basis for the enactment of the proposed legislation.

I now yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, officers above the rank of captain did not receive the terminal leave pay and the mustering-out pay. It went only to three grades originally, that is, warrant officers, first and second lieutenants, and captains.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Three grades in the Army and corresponding grades in the other services.

Mr. MAYBANK. As the Senator is well aware, for many months we labored diligently in the committee on this matter. What the Senator has said about the bonds is eminently correct. We had the testimony not only of the Treasury Department, but also of the Army, the Navy, and the Budget Bureau as to the shock to our economy this terminal leave pay might cause. I think it is unfortunate we held the bill up so long, and it is unfortunate we could not have adjusted the matter before, but I think the Senator will agree with me that for months we have tried to do something. Even with the provision for bonds, if the veteran dies, then the family is paid in cash immediately.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes; and if the amount is under $50, it is also paid in cash. The men will be paid in multiples of $25. For instance, if a man had coming to him $224, we will say, he would be paid $200 in bonds and $24 in cash. If he had coming to him $62, he would be paid a $50 bond and $12 in cash. If $49 were coming to him, he would be paid $49 in cash.

Mr. MAYBANK. In addition to that, where death overtakes a veteran, his family will be paid immediately the total amount in cash. That seemed to me to be very important, that in the event of a soldier dying, from this time on—I do not speak of those who have already passed on—the widow facing the strain of hardship of such a tragedy would be paid immediately in cash, whether it be $100, $200, $500, or a thousand dollars. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Whatever the amount may be, it would be paid in cash on the death of the person in the service.

Mr. MAYBANK. The survivors merely would have to apply to the Treasury for the cash?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct. In addition, there is one more category, that is, so-called incompetents for whom guardians are appointed. In such cases payment is made in cash.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mental cases?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. MAYBANK. Therefore the Senator, in this bill, tried in every way possible to get away from the bond payments when there was a tragedy making a cash payment necessary?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes; we tried to get as far away from the bond payment as possible, and yet provide sufficient payments in bonds so that the inflationary tendency would be reduced to the lowest possible minimum.

Mr. MAYBANK. I thank the Senator.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I believe the Senator stated a few moments ago, in reply to a question, that after September 1, 1946, all vacation pay would be in cash.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. It would be in vacations. I think that is a better way to put it. The men would be on vacation on full pay.

Mr. REVERCOMB. On full pay?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. REVERCOMB. In other words, as the officer gets his terminal leave pay today?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I think it well to point out that a limit of 90 days is placed upon it after September 1, 1946, to induce men actually to take their vacations, both officers and men, so that there would be no accumulation. The limitation of 90 days is made for the benefit of men who serve abroad. Often in the service men are out of continental United States for as long a period as 3 years, and the 30-day accumulation each year for leave with pay over a 3-year period being 90 days, a 90-day accumulation can be permitted, but no longer than 90 days for those in the armed services. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct. We changed it from 120 days. The total accumulation of 120 days is now reduced to 90 days.

As the Senator knows, we put this language in the bill on page 10, line 21:

> And shall provide that leave shall be taken annually as accruing to the extent consistent with military requirements and other exigencies.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. It was the contention of some members of the committee, as I remember, that perhaps there should not be more than a 30-day leave, taken each year while in actual service, so that the soldiers would be physically more fit and better prepared to carry on their work. However, as the Senator from West Virginia said, a great deal of testimony was heard, which showed that in the armies of occupation, in foreign service, in the Navy, and so forth, it was customary to keep the men in foreign service for 2 or 3 years, and if they were on foreign duty for 2 or 3 years, with the situation as it now exists in Europe, and if they should take a 30-day period of leave, and would have to convert their dollars in which we would pay them, into francs or liras or marks to use on their vacation, the money would be practically worthless, because there is so little to buy in Europe, and the law provides that our men must use the money of the country. Therefore the funds which would be available to them during their vacations would be extremely limited. That was also one reason why we extended the period from 30 days to 90 days.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes. The subcommittee recommended that the men take their vacations each year, but the whole committee overruled that when the Army and Navy came forward and made such a good case for accumulated pay in instances where the men had to serve abroad. The Army, however, assured us that they would endeavor—and we put language in the bill to encourage that all we could—to give the men current vacations so that they would receive benefits from their vacations.

Mr. MAYBANK. They assured us that they would do that, except in the case of men in foreign service.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I want to bring up a point so that there may be no misunderstanding in the RECORD about it, and that is that even when men are serving abroad outside continental United States, they are still entitled each year to the 30 days of leave, and they can elect whether or not they will take it. But it does permit them when they are abroad, and have not been back to their homeland, to accumulate leave over a period of 3 years, up to 90 days, if they themselves choose to do so. In other words, we encourage their taking the leave period if they will do it, but we do not compel them to do so. Is not that the situation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes; that is correct. If they want to take their vacation abroad, they are encouraged to do it, but if they do not want to do it, they can wait and accumulate it until they get home, and take 90 days.

The law is changed in that particular. As the Senator recalls, the law of 1874—it went back that far—provided for an accumulation of 120 days. We have cut it down to 90 days, however, for both officers and men, because we want to encourage vacations to the fullest extent possible.

A moment ago I mentioned that a good many bills on this subject were introduced in the Senate. I have a list of them now which I just received from the Senate Committee on Military Affairs. They are Senate bill 721, by Senator JOHNSON of Colorado; Senate bill 827, by Senator MCFARLAND; Senate bill 904, by Senator MCCARRAN; Senate bill 1552, by Senator FULBRIGHT; Senate bill 1624, by Senator SHIPSTEAD; Senate bill 1693, by Senator PEPPER; Senate bill 2091, another bill by Senator MCFARLAND and other Senators, which seeks to work out a compromise satisfactory to everyone; and finally Senate bill 2193, by Senator WHEELER. There were more than that number of bills introduced in the House, and as I already stated, the subject is one of considerable interest in both Houses of Congress.

That completes my general statement on the bill. I shall be very glad to answer any questions so far as I can. I have some amendments of a clarifying nature that I desire to offer to the bill.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, before the Senator submits his amendment will he yield to me to ask a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes, gladly.

Mr. OVERTON. What is the estimated cost of the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Representative ROGERS who sponsored the bill in the House, said it would not cost more than $2,000,000,000. The Navy Department made a test on 2,000 men, and estimated that the cost would be around $2,000,000,000 for the Army and $750,000,000 for the Navy, making a total of $2,750,000,000. The estimate of the subcommittee—and of course that is largely speculative—was that it might cost as much as $3,000,000,000.

Mr. OVERTON. Has there been a more recent estimate of the cost by the Bureau of the Budget?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. No. The most recent estimate by the Bureau of the Budget is $2,750,000,000. Because of the fact that we do not have the experience of each man, it is difficult to estimate the amount of vacation he has already had. We do not have that information. Under the bill he is to make his application. He has a year in which to do so. He makes a sworn statement of the terminal leave he has coming to him. We do not know, of course, just the amount of leave that is due to the 11,000,000 men who are entitled to some terminal leave. We know they are entitled to some terminal leave, but we do not know how much.

Mr. OVERTON. I understand estimates have been made of the total cost varying from $3,000,000,000 to $8,000,000,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Bills have been introduced which are more liberal than the pending bill, and the estimates were as high as $8,000,000,000 under the provisions of one of the bills introduced in the House. I am sure that the total limit of $3,000,000,000 is a very conservative estimate, and I am almost certain—as nearly certain as a person can be after a long study of the matter—that the cost will not exceed $3,000,000,000.

Mr. OVERTON. I wish to say to the Senator that I received information from what I consider the best authority I could obtain it from today, that it is now estimated the bill will cost $4,000,000,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Of course I cannot dispute that statement. I do not think anyone can. As I said, it is a matter which is speculative in the extreme. But whatever the amount, it seems to me that it is justified, since an inequality exists which must be corrected. We give civil-service employees a vacation with pay. We gave civil-service employees the right to accumulate their leave during wartime. It seems to me that when we single out the enlisted man, and the enlisted man only, and deny to him terminal leave, we are not doing right by him.

Mr. OVERTON. Of course, it is to be noted, however, that we do give to veterans many advantages, pecuniary and otherwise, that the civil-service employees do not obtain.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. We give civil-service employees advantages, too, and I do not think we are through giving civil-service employees advantages. I do not think we give the civil-service employees all the advantages that we should, but those things are being corrected from time to time. At least we give terminal leave to officers serving with the men, undergoing no greater hardships; we give them terminal leave, and it is pretty hard for an enlisted man to understand why it should be denied him and given to another man who served with him simply because the other man happens to be an officer.

Mr. OVERTON. I do not suppose that it occurred to any member of the committee that they might rectify that by abrogating terminal leave in favor of officers.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The committee did undertake a study of that kind, but the difficulty with that is that officers have received their pay, and it is pretty hard to go out and tap them on the shoulder and say, "Mister, you owe the Treasury $1,000. We want that money paid back." He has already spent the money, and it is impossible to adjust the matter in that way. So about the only way we could correct the inequality was in the way in which we have attempted to correct it in this bill.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, if the Senator will further yield to me, I should like to have printed in the RECORD, either at the conclusion of the Senator's remarks or at this point, a brief summary of the major benefits extended to veterans of World War II by Federal legislation. The summary was prepared for me by the Library of Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I shall be very glad to have it printed in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. OVERTON. I ask unanimous consent to have the summary printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BRIEF SUMMARY OF MAJOR BENEFITS EXTENDED TO VETERANS OF WORLD WAR II BY FEDERAL LEGISLATION

MONETARY

Mustering-out payments from $100 to $300 are automatically made to tide over the period immediately following discharge (58 Stat. 8-10, Feb. 3, 1944).

Government insurance, which is provided during service, may be converted into ordinary life, 20-payment life, or 30-payment life (54 Stat. 1008-14, Oct. 8, 1940).

The Government guarantees 50 percent of loans up to $2,000 for the purchase, construction, or improvement of homes, farms, and business property (58 Stat. 291, sec. 500; June 22, 1944).

An additional exemption up to $1,500 is allowed for income-tax purposes in the case of compensation received by commissioned officers for active military service; all compensation received for active service by persons below the grade of commissioned officer is exempt from tax (59 Stat. 571-572, Public Law 214, 79th Cong., sec. 141, Nov. 8, 1945).

(See also unemployment allowance under Employment and subsistence allowances under Education.)

EMPLOYMENT

Former jobs whether with the Federal Government or in private employ must be held for the veteran, if applied for within 90 days after discharge or after release from hospitalization (if such release occurs not more than 1 year from date of discharge) (54 Stat. 886, sec. 8 (b), Sept. 16, 1940, as amended by 58 Stat. 798-799, Dec. 8, 1944).

An unemployment allowance of $20 a week is provided up to 52 weeks depending on length of service (58 Stat. 205, title V, June 22, 1944).

A Veterans' Placement Service Board is created to assist the United States Employment Service so as to provide veterans the maximum opportunty in the field of gainful employment (58 Stat. 293-295, title IV, June 23, 1944).

Preference is given to veterans in employment in the Federal civil service (58 Stat. 387-391, June 27, 1944).

EDUCATION

Education or training is available for 1 year plus the period of active service to all persons discharged or released under conditions other than dishonorable. This benefit covers tuition, library fee, etc., books and other necessary expenses, up to a total of $500 for an ordinary school year.

A subsistence allowance of $65 per month if without a dependent, and $90 per month if he has a dependent, is paid to a person while pursuing a course of training hereunder (58 Stat. 287-291, June 22, 1944, as amended by 59 Stat. 624-625, Public Law 268, 79th Cong., Dec. 28, 1945).

Vocational rehabilitation is provided for disabled veterans, and during such training and for 2 months after his employability is determined the veteran is paid a subsistence allowance of $105 if without dependents, $115 with a dependent, plus $10 for one child, $7 for each additional child and $15 for a dependent parent (57 Stat. 43-45, Mar. 24, 1943, as amended by 59 Stat. 626, Public Law 268, 79th Cong., Dec. 28, 1945).

HOSPITALIZATION

Domiciliary or hospital care, including medical treatment, is furnished to all honorably discharged veterans (48 Stat. 8-12, Mar. 20, 1933, and Veterans Regulations thereunder).

Any person entitled to prosthetic appliances shall be given the necessary fitting and training in the use of such appliance, including necessary travel expenses to and from their homes to a hospital or training institution. (58 Stat. 285, sec. 104, June 22, 1944, as amended by 59 Stat. 623, Public Law 268, 79th Cong., sec. 2, Dec. 28, 1945.)

PENSIONS

Disability pensions ranging from $11.50 a month to $115 a month, depending upon the degree of disability, are allowed. (48 Stat. 8-12, Mar. 20, 1933 and Veterans Regulations as modified or amended.)

MISCELLANEOUS

Seeing-eye dogs trained to aid blind persons are furnished to blind veterans (58 Stat. 226 ch. 203, May 24, 1944).

The period of service up to 2 years is allowed to be deducted from the 3 years' residence required under the homestead laws. (58 Stat. 747-748, Sept. 27, 1944.)

An additional appropriation of $160,000,000 is authorized under the Lanham Act for reuse of existing structures and facilities so as to provide temporary housing for distressed families of servicemen, for veterans and their families or for single veterans attending educational institutions. (59 Stat. 674, Public Law 657, 79th Cong., Dec. 31, 1945.)

By a joint resolution approved April 12, 1946 (Public Law 341, 79th Cong.) Congress appropriated an additional $253,727,000 for veterans' housing and related expenses.

In order to enable veterans to establish and maintain their own business, professional or agricultural enterprises, priority is given them in disposals of surplus property over all other disposals under the Surplus Property Act except to Government agencies. (Public Law 375, 79th Cong., May 3, 1946.)

The Veterans' Emergency Housing Act approved May 22, 1946 (Public Law 388, 79th Cong.) has for its purposes the making available of housing for veterans by expediting production and allocation of materials and by curbing excessive prices of new housing.

Mr. OVERTON. I should be very glad if necessary, to read the summary for the information of the Senate. I simply wish to make the observation that it shows very wide and extensive benefits extended to veterans of World War II. When I say that, I do not mean to say that I am going to vote against the bill. The probability is that I shall vote for it. But the United States is doing more for its veterans than any other nation in the world is doing for its soldiers. It is doing more for its veterans now than ever before in the history of the United States. I think we take care of our veterans in a very magnificent way.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I think we can all concur in what the Senator has said. However, we have the best veterans on earth, and the best soldiers.

Mr. OVERTON. That is true; but we do not want to convert them into mercenary or Hessian troops.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Of course not. However, we wish to reward them generously because they have performed magnificently for us. They have done a wonderful job.

In connection with the statement inserted in the RECORD by the Senator, I wish to thank him for offering that information for the RECORD. The Senate Committee on Finance has instructed its staff to prepare such a report for the Senate. We wished to have such a report prepared for this reason: Senators and Representatives constantly receive letters—I know I receive such letters, and I am sure that other Senators receive them—from veterans telling us that they are the forgotten men, that Congress has neglected them. Of course Congress has not done anything of the kind. Congress has been very generous with the veteran, but the veteran may not understand the cost of the provisions which we are making in his behalf. We thought that we would issue a report showing the total of all the benefits, so that the information could be furnished to veterans when they complain about the ungenerous treatment of the Congress, and so that the country may know that Congress has been very generous with the veteran, as it should be. The figures which the Senator has provided for the RECORD will be very helpful to the Finance Committee, the committee which handles veterans' problems. On behalf of that committee I thank the Senator for his efforts to make the facts known.

Mr. OVERTON. I thank the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. I have not been able to give this subject the study which I should have liked to give it. On page 15 of the bill this language appears:

> Such bonds shall be nonnegotiable and shall not be transferrable by sale, exchange, assignment, pledge, hypothecation, or otherwise.

Can the bonds be exchanged for cash, in the same way that bonds in existence today may be exchanged?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. They cannot. They must be held. The purpose behind that provision is to take the immediate burden off the Treasury. That is the whole purpose of the bonds. We cannot pour $3,000,000,000 into the economy of the country without upsetting it. It is badly upset at the present time. Inflation exists today. But by issuing these bonds and having them mature a few at a time we shall lessen the burden on the Treasury. The Senator understands that a man discharged, we will say, in March, 1943, would receive bonds predated to April 1, 1943, maturing after 5 years, and bearing interest at 2½ percent. So his bonds would become payable in 1948. The bonds would be staggered through the whole experience up to the present time. They would not all be payable at once. They would not all enter the economy of the country at once and cause inflation, which would be the result if we made payments in cash.

Mr. MURDOCK. What is meant by this provision:

Interest on each bond issued under this act shall accrue at the rate of 2½ percent per annum from the date of such bond to the date of maturity or payment of the principal of the bond, whichever is earlier, and shall be paid with such principal.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The bond would be paid earlier only if the man should die. If the man who holds the bond dies, the bond is paid in cash, together with accrued interest up to the time of his death. If he does not die, the interest is not paid currently. The interest which the bond earns is not paid each year. The interest is held with the bond, and the interest and the bond are paid at the same time.

Mr. MURDOCK. So this provision would be applicable only in case of the death of a veteran. Otherwise, if I have followed the distingushed Senator, the bonds must be held to maturity.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct.

Mr. MURDOCK. Unless death occurs prior to maturity, in which case the principal of the bond plus accrued interest to the date of death would be paid?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct. The bonds would be paid also to guardians of incompetents.

Mr. MURDOCK. Was there any objection on the part of veterans to this type of compensation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. There was no objection from the veterans' organizations. They were all consulted before this provision was approved by the committee, and they approved it. They argued that this was an advantage to the veteran himself, because today a dollar is not worth as much as it is hoped it will be worth in 5 years. If the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] were present he could tell us what a dollar is worth today and what it is likely to be worth 5 years from now. I am unable to do so. At any rate, it is likely—at least we hope so—that 5 years from now a dollar will be worth more than it is today.

Mr. MURDOCK. I assume that it was pointed out to the veterans that if we were to dump into the volume of money which is now in circulation and held in our banks an amount between $2,000,000,000 and $4,000,000,000, which are the amounts which have been mentioned as the total, the result certainly would be inflationary. As I look at the picture, such a course would certainly contribute to devaluing the dollar which we paid to the veteran.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is true. What we gave him would be decreased in value, because the goods are not here for him to buy. We would increase the buying power of the country tremendously, but we would not increase the supply of goods. It would be better for the veteran to get his money when there was a supply of goods available to purchase. If we were to turn over the money in small amounts to 11,000,000 men, we know that it would move into the economy of the country almost overnight. There would be nothing to stop it. It would become an immediate buying power. But under the bond provision the money would come in month by month over a long period, beginning in 1948.

Mr. MURDOCK. I am inclined to think that the action taken is a wise one. I am rather comforted by the statement made by the distinguished Senator that there was no objection on the part of the veteran himself.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I would not say that there is no objection on the part of veterans, because some veterans may object.

Mr. MURDOCK. I mean from the veterans' organizations.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The veterans' organizations wholeheartedly endorsed the provision.

Mr. MURDOCK. It occurs to me that it probably would not be inflationary to allow the veteran who is entitled to bonds under the terms of this bill to exchange such bonds with the present holder of bonds which may be cashed at once. Was that plan given any consideration?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. No; we did not given it any consideration, because we wanted to keep these bonds out of the buying power of the country.

Mr. MURDOCK. I know that; but I was just wondering if consideration had been given to such a suggestion. As I view the question, the present law under which bonds are issued would have to be amended. But if the veterans were in a position to arrange with someone who wished to hold them for 5 years, to exchange the bonds for bonds which are now in existence and can be cashed, some of the veterans might prefer to do that and to obtain the cash. By such an exchange the amount of money in circulation would not in any way be increased, and of course that would afford a veteran who needed the money immediately an opportunity to get it in that way.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. If an exchange of that sort were made I think the money would be spent immediately, and thereby the good effects of the bond issue would be lost. Of course, we could pay cash to the men, and we could sell bonds in order to get the cash with which to pay them. But if we did that we would be placing a terrific burden not only upon the Treasury but upon the economy of the country, and we would be increasing the buying power without increasing the supply of available goods.

Mr. MURDOCK. I thank the Senator.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURCH in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I have received several protests from ex-servicemen in regard to the provision that they shall accept bonds for their terminal leave pay and that they must wait 5 years to get the money. Of course, I understand the purpose for which that provision was made.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. It was to overcome a very serious objection on the part of the Treasury, the Bureau of the Budget, the War Department, the Navy Department, and the President of the United States. They seriously objected to paying cash to the veterans for that purpose. The only way we could obtain their approval at all was by including the provision in regard to bonds.

Mr. AIKEN. I am not objecting to that provision.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Of course. I know that some veterans have objected.

Mr. AIKEN. I should say that 15 or 20 who have written to me have protested about that provision.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. But the veterans' organizations have approved it.

Mr. AIKEN. I understand.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I wish to read one paragraph from a letter sent to me by Paul H. Appleby, Acting Director of the Bureau of the Budget. It shows the position of the administration in regard to this matter. He says:

I have discussed with the President the provisions of H. R. 4051 and the amendatory provisions thereof as projected in the committee print of the bill. While such provisions would not be considered as being in accord with the program of the President, he would find acceptable a measure along the lines of the draft attached hereto.

Sincerely yours,

PAUL H. APPLEBY,
Acting Director.

In other words, as the bill came from the House, it was not acceptable to the administration or to the Bureau of the Budget or to the Treasury.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, let me quote from the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. At what page is the Senator about to quote, please?

Mr. AIKEN. At page 10:

Enlisted members or former enlisted members of the armed forces shall be considered to be entitled to such leave from and after September 8, 1939.

They will be entitled to such leave "from and after September 8, 1939," until what time?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. It will be from now on. This bill is permanent legislation. The law of 1874 was amended in 1876, and it is now to be amended by this measure.

Mr. AIKEN. I understand that the officers who have been separated up to this time have been paid their terminal leave. They have not had to accept bonds. Does this bill provide that officers, as well as enlisted men, who are separated from now on shall receive their terminal leave pay in the form of bonds?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. No bonds will be issued to anyone after September 1, 1946, for terminal leave after September 1946. We have not included in the bill a provision relative to the time between the date of enactment of the bill and September 1, insofar as officers would be affected, inasmuch as the period of time is too short and the complications are too great. So the answer to the Senator's question is "No."

Mr. AIKEN. But after the 1st of September all will be treated alike; will they?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. After the 1st of September everyone will be treated alike. All will receive terminal leave, and will take it currently, so far as possible.

Mr. AIKEN. The provisions of this bill may mean that 5 years later the enlisted men will have money in their pockets, whereas some of the officers will not have anything left.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I hope the enlisted men will have money in their pockets. As a matter of fact, during the war the enlisted men have made a most surprising record in regard to the amount of bonds they have held. I saw an estimate the other day—I think it came from the Navy—that the ratio was 500 to 1, as compared with the situation in regard to World War I; that is to say, 500 veterans of World War II are holding Federal bonds now, as compared to 1 veteran who held them following World War I.

Mr. AIKEN. I wholly agree with the Senator, because I know that a great many of the enlisted men have saved their money. I think an unusually large percentage of them have saved money. They have been thrifty during the war, and now they have some money with which to help get started.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. I fully agree with what has been done here, and I believe we are actually protecting the value of the veteran's dollar by making this compensation payable in bonds.

I wish to call one matter to the Senator's attention, namely, that today we have, to all intents and purposes, full employment. There is already plenty of money in existence, so that most veterans readily find employment at good wages. But during the course of years, during the time when these bonds will be outstanding, if any appreciable unemployment develops among veterans or if a depression overtakes us, then at that time Congress in its wisdom can make the bonds payable at any time it sees fit to have them payable.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct.

Mr. MURDOCK. Let me make a further observation: Although a large amount of money is involved in this measure—regardless of whether it is $2,000,000,000 or $3,000,000,000 or $4,000,000,000, it is a tremendous amount of money—nevertheless, I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that if the war were still going on, if the veterans to whom this will be paid were on the battlefields, and if some of them were being killed in the service of their country, we in the Congress would not hesitate for 30 minutes to appropriate $2,000,000,000 or $3,000,000,000 or $4,000,000,000 or even $10,000,000,000 to keep the war going until a final victory for us was at hand.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. As I recall, the war expenditures reached a figure of about $8,000,000,000 a month.

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes.

So in my opinion we can very well afford to take that matter into consideration in arriving at the proper decision in respect to this measure. I am hopeful that the bill will pass.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I thank the Senator for his contribution.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to say a word to congratulate the committee and the Senator upon the promptness with which this legislation has been brought to the floor of the Senate. I recall that after World War I, in both Houses of Congress we fought around for years and years for the bonus. We passed several bills providing for bonuses for veterans of the war, and they were vetoed by various Presidents. But we finally succeeded in enacting bonus legislation in 1932 or 1934, I think—approximately 15 years after the war had ended.

The present measure is not a bonus bill, and I am not confusing the two. We provided for the payment of $60 to every soldier who was discharged after World War I, and then of course we provided for compensation under the jurisdiction of the Veterans Administration, which then was known as the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. However, it required a long time to obtain legislation which approached doing justice to the soldiers in regard to any compensation for their services, compensation beyond their pay and the benefits to which they might be entitled under the War Risk Insurance Act.

Therefore, Mr. President, I feel that we are indebted to the committee and to the Senator from Colorado, especially, for the promptness and diligence with which he and the other members of the committee have brought this legislation before the Senate. Of course, it could not be claimed that the legislation is perfect. No legislation is perfect. All legislation is a matter of give and take. I feel, however, that we have attempted, insofar as information was available to us, and as promptly as possible, to do justice to our brave servicemen in all branches of the armed forces who served during the late war. I am happy to support the bill, and I feel that the committee has worked out as wise a solution as is humanly possible to accomplish.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I thank the distinguished majority leader for what he has said.

I may say, Mr. President, that the committee consulted the executive departments in regard to the matter. As the Senator from Kentucky has said, following World War I Congress passed several bonus laws which were vetoed by the President. I do not say this law will or will not be vetoed by the President if it is passed by the Congress in its present form. I know that the Treasury Department and the Bureau of the Budget are satisfied with the bill in the form in which it is now before the Senate, and that they were not satisfied with the bill in the form in which it came from the House.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I may say that I can confirm his last statement. I introduced a bill last fall which provided for cash payments. The reports of both the Army and the Navy, as well as the Bureau of the Budget, were against the bill in the form in which I had prepared it. No action was taken at that time because of their opposition, based on what the Senator has said.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for verifying what I have said. Our committee felt that it would be wise to work out the problem with the executive departments so that we would not walk into stormy weather.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I personally thought that there should be a provision for a cash payment. I still believe so, but I recognize the difficulty which the committee has experienced. I have never been able to see why the same treatment should not be accorded to enlisted men as that which is accorded to officers. Possibly, a mistake was made in the first instance by granting terminal leave to officers, but I believe there should be no discrimination.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I am glad to hear the Senator say that. Under the pending bill the members of the armed forces, whether in the Coast Guard, in the Marines, in the Navy, or in the Army, would be treated on an exact basis of equality.

Mr. President, I have several amendments which I wish to call up at this time. They are clarifying amendments. They do not affect the operation of the bill. I send forward to the desk an amendment which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 14, after line 4, it is proposed to insert the following new subsection:

(c) No member or former member of the armed forces shall be entitled to settlement and compensation under section 6 of this act for leave aggregating in excess of 120 calendar days, and no member of the armed forces on active duty on September 1, 1946, shall be entitled to settlement and compensation under section 6 of this act for leave aggregating in excess of 30 calendar days, No member or former member who, as a commissioned or warrant officer, has received or is, on the date of enactment of this act, receiving terminal leave shall be entitled to settlement and compensation under section 6 of this act for leave aggregating in excess of the difference between 120 calendar days and the number of calendar days of such terminal leave.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, this amendment was proposed yesterday by the Navy, and it is designed to prevent double payments where more than one period of service is involved, thus making certain that no person will receive pay for more than 120 days. The amendment makes certain a period of 120 days.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Would the amendment in any way change that part of the bill which now affords terminal pay of 90 days?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. No; the amendment merely limits the amount of terminal pay to not more than 120 days of service.

Mr. REVERCOMB. After September 1 terminal leave pay is limited to 90 days?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Senator is correct, and the amendment does not affect that provision of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURCH in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I send forward another amendment which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, in lieu of lines 4 to 11, inclusive, it is proposed to insert the following:

(b) The term "discharge" means (1), in the case of enlisted personnel, separation or release from active duty under honorable conditions or appointment as a commissioned officer; and (2), in the case of commissioned or warrant officers, separation or release from active duty under honorable conditions.

On page 10, line 24, strike out the words "who reenlist or."

On page 11, line 2, strike out the words "reenlistment or."

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, the amendment would prevent the necessity of separate computations for separate periods of enlistment. It would also eliminate language in the bill which would require the War Department to reverse its present practice of not granting terminal leave to officers who are permitted to resign in lieu of being reclassified. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I send forward another amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 12, line 2, after the word "or", it is proposed to insert "on the basis of the base and longevity pay and allowances applicable."

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, the amendment is merely to provide for a correction. It does not change anything in the bill except to improve the grammar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a memorandum received from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, Mr. John L. Sullivan, in regard to certain amendments to House bill 4051.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Washington.

Memorandum for: Senator JOHNSON, on H. R. 4051.

I have three changes in H. R. 4051, as reported, which I would like to commend to your consideration. Two are clarifying changes considered necessary partly as a result of efforts on the part of the Army, Navy, Coast Guard, and Marine Corps to draft regulations. The third change eliminates a distinction between commissioned and warrant officers, on the one hand, and enlisted personnel, on the other, which I consider impossible to justify. The first clarifying change takes the form of the addition of a new subsection (c) to section 5, reading as follows:

"(c) No member or former member of the armed forces shall be entitled to settlement and compensation under section 6 of this act for leave aggregating in excess of 120 calendar days, and no member of the armed forces on active duty on September 1, 1946, shall be entitled to settlement and compensation under section 6 of this act for leave aggregating in excess of 30 calendar days. No member or former member who, as a commissioned or warrant officer, has received or is, on the date of enactment of this act, receiving terminal leave shall be entitled to settlement and compensation under section 6 of this act for leave aggregating in excess of the difference between 120 calendar days and the number of calendar days of such terminal leave."

In substance, the above language guarantees equal treatment for members of the armed forces who have served the same number of years. Under H. R. 4051, as reported, a possibility exists that two members who have served the same number of years, one entirely in one service and in one status (i. e., commissioned or warrant, on the one hand, and enlisted, on the other) and the other in two services or in one service partly in an enlisted status and partly in a commissioned or warrant status may receive different treatment. To illustrate:

Case I. Each of two members of the armed forces served 6 years between September 8, 1939, and their return to civilian life, without taking any leave, terminal or otherwise: Member A served 3 years in an enlisted status in the Army, was honorably discharged from the Army, and then served 3 years in an enlisted status in the Navy; Member B served 6 years in an enlisted status in the Army. On this state of facts Member A would arguably be entitled to compensation for 180 days leave; whereas, Member B would be entitled to compensation for 120 days only.

Case II. Member A served 2 years in an enlisted status in the Army and received no leave. He was then commissioned in the Army as an officer and served 4 years, and upon his release from active duty he received 120 days terminal leave. He would arguably be entitled, in addition, to compensation for 60 days leave on account of his service in an enlisted status. Member B served the same aggregate period of time in either an enlisted or an officer status, becoming thereby entitled only to 120 days of leave.

The above change also simplifies the administrative problem. As will be seen, it precludes the possibility of a member's receiving compensation for more than 120 days leave.

The second clarifying change takes the form of revising subsection (b) of section 2 (the definition of the term "discharge") to read: "The term 'discharge' means (1) in the case of enlisted personnel, separation or release from active duty under honorable conditions or appointment as a commissioned officer or warrant officer; and (2) in the case of commissioned or warrant officers, separation or release from active duty under honorable conditions"; and the deletion of the words "who reenlist or", in line 24, on page 10, and the words "reenlistment or" in line 2 of page 11. The second clarifying change has two effects.

The Navy, as you know, unlike the Army, accepted enlistments and reenlistments during the war. The existing definition of "discharge," which expressly includes the expiration of an enlistment or reenlistment, would require the Navy to settle with a given enlisted member who served more than one enlistment on the basis of each separate enlistment. This would mean, moreover, that if such enlisted member advanced in rating during his second enlistment, he would not be entitled to the benefit thereof for purposes of determining his compensation for the leave applicable to his first enlistment. This unfairly discriminates against Navy enlisted personnel and increases the administrative burden of the Navy.

Second, the existing definition in the case of Army officers would require a reversal by the Army of its previous policy of not granting terminal leave where an officer is permitted to resign in lieu of reclassification. An Army officer so resigning, the resignation not being "for the good of the service," would become entitled to terminal leave, which would further operate as a discrimination against enlisted personnel who must be separated under honorable conditions.

The third change, eliminating a distinction between officers and enlisted personnel, consists of the deletion of the word "enlisted", in line 9, on page 13, and the addition of the following after "1946" in line 10, on page 13: "(other than commissioned or warrant officers on terminal leave as a result of processing for separation prior to the date of enactment of this act)"; and the addition of a new sentence at the end of subsection (a) of section 5, reading as follows:

"No member (other than a member on terminal leave on the date of enactment of this act) shall receive terminal leave between the date of enactment of this act and September 1, 1946."

I feel very strongly that from the date of enactment of the act distinctions between officers and enlisted personnel should be entirely eliminated. Under H. R. 4051, as reported, the possibility existed that members processed for separation after the date of enactment and before September 1, 1946, could claim terminal leave, rather than payment as provided in section 6. To repel this possibility the committee report had the following language inserted in it:

"Although the provisions of section 3 (a) will be in effect and will govern the taking of leave by enlisted men from and after the date of enactment of the bill, it is the intent of the committee that the dates of separation of enlisted men who would otherwise be discharged between the date of enactment and September 1, 1946, are not to be deferred for the purpose of circumventing the method of payment prescribed under section 6."

This would have the effect of entitling officers processed for separation during the period in question to receive terminal leave while enlisted personnel processed for separation during the same period would receive payment as provided in section 6. I recognize that the period in question may be only a month. Nevertheless, in the case of the Navy alone, it is estimated that approximately 35,000 officers and 265,000 enlisted personnel will be processed for separation during the period in question. These figures include the Marine Corps. Similar estimates furnished me by the Army indicate that 25,000 officers and 140,000 enlisted personnel will be involved.

JOHN L. SULLIVAN.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I do not see the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN] present, but he has an amendment on the desk which I wish to call up. I ask that it be stated.

Mr. WALSH. Is the Senator going to present the amendment for the Senator from Arkansas, or accept it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I am calling it up for the Senator from Arkansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

Nothing in sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code (U. S. C., title 18, secs. 198 and 203) or in section 190 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 99) shall be deemed to prevent any person (other than a member of the regular component of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard) on terminal leave from the armed forces from acting as counsel, agent, or attorney (1) in any matter or thing in which the United States is a party or directly or indirectly interested or (2) for prosecuting any claim against the United States: Provided, That such person shall not prosecute any claim against the United States, or act as counsel, agent, or attorney in any matter in which the United States is a party or has an interest, involving any subject matter with which such person was directly connected during the period of his service and prior to entering upon terminal leave.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, this amendment would exempt members of the armed forces on terminal leave, other than regulars—it is important to remember that—from the prohibition against acting as attorneys, and so forth, in prosecuting claims against the United States except claims "involving any subject matter with which such person was directly connected during the period of his service." The committee has no objection to the amendment, and we are glad to accept it.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, a question arises in my mind in connection with the amendment. The purpose of the section is to exempt from the operation of the criminal statutes certain classes of persons. The proviso is merely a prohibition against any such person prosecuting certain claims, but it does not in itself carry any penalty. The purpose of the proviso is to leave persons in the class mentioned subject to the provisions of the criminal law. I am wondering whether the language does that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I am glad to see the Senator from Arkansas now present in the Chamber. I am sure the language does exactly what the Senator has stated.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Did the Senator from Oregon inquire about the proviso?

Mr. CORDON. Yes.

Mr. McCLELLAN. As to repealing any penalty which now exists under the law, the amendment would not repeal any penalty with respect to what is contained in the proviso. An exception is made to the authority granted by the amendment. With this exception made, any act which would violate this exception would come under the existing law, and if there is a penalty, the person affected would be penalized.

Mr. CORDON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. As a suggestion to the Senator, would it clarify the amendment if that portion of it beginning with the word "Provided", in line 1, on page 2, and going down to and including all of line 4, were deleted, and instead of that the amendment were to read—and I am beginning with line 1 on page 2—"prosecuting any claim against the United States, except claims involving subject matter with which such person was directly connected?"

Mr. McCLELLAN. How does the Senator think that would improve the amendment? I do not think it would improve it. The purpose of the proviso is to not permit such persons to participate, during their terminal leave, in any activity, in which the Federal Government is interested, with which they were concerned while on duty in the service.

Mr. CORDON. I understand.

Mr. McCLELLAN. In other words, they could take no advantage of the fact that they had been in the service, or were still in the service, to engage in any activity in which the Government's interest was involved. I do not believe this language could be greatly improved upon. The purpose of it is to make an exception.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. I always have a very profound respect for any opinion of the Senator from Oregon, but it seems to me that the exception here provided for has nothing whatever to do with any penalty clause now in existence. In other words, if a claim were prosecuted by someone on terminal leave, and came within this proviso, certainly the person prosecuting it would be subject to whatever penalty he would incur if the bill were not passed at all.

Mr. McCLELLAN. If the amendment were not agreed to at all. That is why I wanted to leave that way.

I appreciate the action of the Senator from Colorado in calling up the amendment. I happened to be absent from the Chamber at lunch, and am very grateful to him.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The committee has no objection to the amendment, and is glad to accept it.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am very grateful to the Senator, and I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, before the Senator from Colorado accepts the amendment I am wondering if it would not be well to ask a question or two, so that we will be clear about the matter.

I am assuming that sections 109 and 113 are those sections of the criminal code which require that persons who have served the Government of the United States shall not leave the Government service and take part in suits against the United States.

Mr. McCLELLAN. That is a part of the provision, but is not all of it.

Mr. MURDOCK. Within a limited time.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Within a limited time of course. They are not barred forever, but they might be barred forever, if they acted in collusion in some way, and that does not happen very often in the Government service. When we remove the requirement from any person who has served in the armed forces, and permit any such person to prosecute cases, do we not make it so broad that probably the whole effect of the restraining influence of sections 109 and 113 is taken away from the persons on terminal leave? I am sure the Senator does not want it to go that far.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I see the point the Senator has raised. There may be some merit in the suggestion. Of course, it is not the purpose of the amendment to make it so broad. We are dealing with men in the military service, and of course I did not have in mind repealing the statutes, but only to make this exception.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. The men referred to are lawyers.

Mr. McCLELLAN. And accountants.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. If they have served in the Navy Department, under sections 109 and 113 they cannot immediately begin to bring suits in some action involving the Navy.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Not only that, but they cannot work on a Government account or anything else in which the Government has an interest. If a man is an accountant, he cannot work for a firm, cannot take a position and work on accounts in which the Government is interested, without violating these sections of the law.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. No one wants those provisions of law to extend to the little fellows, such as accountants and the like, but surely we do not want to waive this requirement.

Mr. McCLELLAN. No; we do not.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. For instance, a man, although in uniform, and therefore entitled to terminal leave, may have been responsible for millions of dollars of contracts, on which there might be some contract settlement, which might be the basis of a suit.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Under the proviso they cannot engage in such activity if they have had any connection with the matter in their Government service.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I am asking these questions because this amendment did not come before our committee.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I did not have the amendment ready when the bill was in the committee. I have had some complaints about this matter from men on terminal leave.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. It has not had the scrutiny of as many persons as the bill itself has had.

Mr. McCLELLAN. The Senator can certainly take it to conference, and if any modification is actually needed, of course the conference can make it. I should appreciate their doing that.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I am not criticizing anyone. I am trying to make it clear to the Senate that in this proposed terminal leave legislation our committee has been as careful as any group of men in the history of the Congress could have been to see that no injustice should be done. The money involved is an immense sum, and it has had due consideration. Perhaps I am taking myself too seriously, but I feel personally responsible to see that no loopholes are afforded by amendments which might be offered from the floor, which might open up to a person who is not too scrupulous—we will not call him unscrupulous, but to a person who is not too careful—opportunity to take advantage of the knowledge which he has gained while in the service to make himself valuable to a litigant after he leaves the service.

We know Mr. President, that after the last war persons who, for example, were engaged in contract adjustments for the Government, left the service and immediately became active in litigation against the Government, and in favor of the very persons whose contracts they were reviewing when they were in the Government service. Such a thing must not happen again.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. I think the distinguished Senator from Utah has called to our attention a very important matter, especially in connection with the proviso. If I correctly understand the senior Senator from Utah he takes the position that if an Army or a Navy official who has been very intimately connected with some contract during the course of his service leaves the service and is on the terminal leave, he should not serve in connection with a suit involving the contract, notwithstanding the fact that he has no private financial interest whatever in the outcome of the suit, because the fact that he was intimately connected with the matter while he was in the service would place him in a position to take advantage of that connection while he was in the service of his country. The Senator wants to avoid such a contingency. It seems to me the proviso as now drawn fails to take care of that situation, and the exception limits it to the person being a party or having an interest in the matter.

In my opinion the proviso can very well be extended to prohibit persons from acting as attorneys or agents, and so forth, against the Government, if they were intimately and directly connected with the subject matter of the suit. If the amendment is taken to conference, Mr. President, I hope the suggestion of the senior Senator from Utah will be taken into consideration. I am in agreement with the position he takes.

Mr. McCLELLAN. As I have said, I have no objection to having the matter worked out if it is felt that the proviso is not adequate. We are not seeking to do anything here except to do justice, as I see it, so as not to leave certain individuals in the position where, by law, they would be somewhat penalized.

Mr. MURDOCK. I am sure the Senator's intention is just as he has stated it, but I believe that the point raised by the Senator from Utah is well taken and should be given most serious consideration.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I thought the proviso was adequate. I did not have the matter in mind in time to submit it to the committee. I conferred with the chairman of the committee about the amendment before I submitted it. I discussed the matter with him. I did not have an opportunity to discuss it with each member of the committee. I hope the amendment may be taken to conference and let the conferees and the able Senator from Utah study the proviso and make any corrections in it or modifications in it necessary fully to protect the Government's interests.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. The Senator from Utah makes his point primarily on the theory of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code, which are based on very homely notions.

Mr. McCLELLAN. They are based on very sound policy, which ought to be observed.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. They are based on the very sound policy that a man cannot serve two masters. That is the basis of it.

Mr. McCLELLAN. That is correct.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. And we do not want to invite anyone to get himself into such a position that discredit may be brought on what we are doing at this time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for one observation?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. In the closing hours of the session there is always the danger that we may not have a conference. The House may agree to the amendments and accept them. The House may insert the amendment which the Senator now proposes. So we want to be very careful that we are not accepting an amendment which needs further clarification or perfecting language. We want to be very certain that whatever we put in the bill is what we want to have in it, and in the way we want it.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I should like to have Senators point out to me the exact objection to the proviso, and wherein it fails to cover the situation. I think it does cover the situation. If it does not, I should like to modify it so as to protect the Government. I certainly do not want to open the doors to anything they should not be opened to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. We are going to have a quorum call in a few minutes, and then the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BALL] will take probably 10 or 15 minutes on some amendments, and during that time the Senators can perhaps get together and see if they can agree on language which would accomplish what the Senator from Arkansas wants to accomplish. I hope, therefore, the amendment will not be agreed to at this time. I hope it can be passed over for the time being, and perhaps the language may be changed.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I will be very happy to have the amendment passed over for the present.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. MEAD. The able chairman of the Military Affairs Committee a few moments ago spoke of the thought and study that was given by the Military Affairs Committee, to the pending subject matter and to other matters related to military pay and personnel. I heartily concur in his observations. But it occurred to me that this was an injustice which was discovered after the war was over, when we found that terminal pay was being given to officers while no similar pay was given to enlisted personnel. Upon the discovery of that obvious injustice, the committee proceeded to provide correctional legislation, and that is the bill we have before us.

I was wondering if the committee, in view of the fact that this apparent injustice was the result of the many changes that had been made in military pay matters over a long period of years, was going to go into the matter again in the very near future to be sure that there were no further injustices which had to do with pay, with allowances, with expense money, or anything of that sort.

The reason I ask that question is this: We have discovered in the current hearings which are now being conducted by our committee that a number of men in high responsible military positions have left the service in the midst of the war or in the midst of the emergency and immediately found employment with the war contractors who were doing business with the particular branch of the service with which the officers were connected, and their civilian pay was usually 3 or 4 times as much as it was when they were in the military service. It occurs to me that in going over this matter legislation could be enacted which would prevent such practices, which would punish that sort of thing and make it impossible for men to profit as the result of an emergency. I am sure our committee will be very happy to turn over the testimony on that subject which is now being presented to us, to the end that it will be studied by the Military Affairs Committee, and such corrective legislation as the committee deems proper may be considered and reported to the Senate, I think the whole matter should be reviewed. I know that our committee does not have the power to do it, but we will make our report to the Senate and submit such information as we have to the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. McCLELLAN. The Senator from New York is speaking of the special committee headed by him?

Mr. MEAD. I am speaking of the special committee and of its investigation into the affairs of men in the military service who have acted in violation, I believe, of the law, if not of the army regulations.

Mr. McCLELLAN. In violation of the basic law.

Mr. MEAD. Yes. A study should be made of their actions, and preventive legislation eliminating all possible loopholes should be enacted.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I think that is desirable, and I hope the Senator and his committee are successful in correcting the evils which exist. My proposal will not affect a large number of individuals. It affects those whose profession is the practice of the law, or men who are accountants, and certain others. They go on their terminal leave. They cannot take any business in which the Government has any interest or to which the Government is a party. They cannot work on any job, even in a clerical capacity, in which there is an interest on the part of the Government. It seems unfair to make them forego such employment, when they are given the opportunity, when they can take employment anywhere else in the world. My purpose is to relieve them from that handicap and restriction, but at the same time to provide that they cannot give to a private employer the benefit of anything with which they have had a direct connection during the time they were in the service. Of course, after their terminal leave expires, they can take such employment as we have discussed. The provision only helps some of the veterans who are in certain categories to get started, instead of having to sit around and wait 2 or 3 months, as the case may be.

Mr. MEAD. Of course, we must be reasonable in all matters, and I think that with the ample safeguards which the Senator has suggested, an amendment of that kind may be worked out.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Is the Senator from Minnesota ready to proceed with another amendment?

Mr. BALL. Yes.

Mr. McCLELLAN. If so, I withdraw my amendment temporarily in an effort to discuss the proviso with some Senators who have expressed an interest in it and who want to clarify the language, and then I will reoffer it when the Senator from Minnesota has concluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is temporarily withdrawn.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator in charge of the bill a question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY. Do I correctly understand that the veterans' organizations, after a study of the bill and a full understanding of it, are supporting the bill, and the issuance of the bonds in the form in which they are proposed to be issued?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct. They have studied that point specifically, and after studying it they have even stated that they believe that that is a great advantage to the veteran himself.

Mr. MURRAY. I suppose every Senator has received letters and telegrams from veterans. I have received a great many from veterans in my State urging that they be paid in cash, or that the bonds be negotiable. Does the Senator believe that if the veterans were well informed as to the economic factors involved, which have been discussed here today, they too would be likely to agree with the veterans' organizations, that the bonds should be issued in this form?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I think they would be overwhelmingly of that opinion. Of course there may be exceptions. Possibly some of the veterans will be dissatisfied. If one were to walk down Pennsylvania Avenue and hand out $5 bills to everyone he met on his way, some would be dissatisfied because they were not $10 bills. We have that sort of thing to contend with. But I believe that veterans would overwhelmingly approve the proposed policy if they understood the necessity for it.

Mr. MURRAY. I am sure that many of the veterans from whom I have received letters are intelligent and patriotic men. But not having attended the hearings or given careful study to the economic consequences of the issuance of bonds which would be negotiable in such tremendous amounts, it may be possible that if they had a correct understanding of the situation they would agree with the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Bureau of the Budget and the Treasury Department are bitterly opposed to making a cash payment. It does not seem to me that the Senate would be using very good judgment in going against the administration in this matter. What we want to get through is a bill which is satisfactory to everyone. The committee has framed a bill which is satisfactory to the departments, and I hope it may be enacted without any change in the manner of making payments.

Mr. MURRAY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Was the American Legion or any other service organization consulted when the change was made from a cash payment to payment in bonds?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The veterans' organizations were all consulted. The American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and the Disabled American Veterans were consulted. I do not know whether the American Veterans were consulted or not, but all the organizations which were consulted agreed to the plan. They were entirely satisfied with it. In some instances they said that they thought it was much better for the veterans.

As a matter of fact, at the present time we are in an inflationary cycle. When these bonds are payable there may be goods on the shelves in which the veterans can invest their money. At the present time we are troubled by too much buying power and too few goods. In a few years, as these bonds become payable, perhaps the reverse will be the situation. Perhaps goods will be plentiful and buying power will be somewhat reduced. That is the reason, as I understand, why the veterans' organizations are supporting the present bond plan. The plan is necessary also for a very practical reason. As the Senator knows, even though the Congress may pass the bill, it will not become law until signed by the President. The President, the Bureau of the Budget, and the Treasury Department are all very much opposed to the bill as it came from the House, with the cash payment provision.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield,

Mr. MEAD. While I favor the cash payment plan rather than payment by bonds, I appreciate the fact that there is no better friend of the veteran and serviceman than the able Senator in charge of the bill. I am sure that everyone realizes that throughout the emergency he has advocated the rights of the veteran and the serviceman. We know that the Senator from Colorado is the staunch friend of the veteran. I appreciate the fact that the Senator has one desire, and that is to obtain the enactment of legislation. He realizes, as a result of his studies, that passage of the bill and approval by the President would be jeopardized if the bill provided for cash payment. In that connection, I am anxious to go along with the Senator. A great many servicemen in my State would like the cash. The distinguished Senator from Montana has explained that situation. Is it not true that collectively, so far as the organizations are concerned, the veterans favor the bond proposal contained in the pending measure?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct.

Mr. MEAD. There may be some individuals who are in need of cash, and who are seeking to secure the cash payment rather than the payment provided for in the bill. However, through their organizations the veterans favor the more economic approach, which is the approach provided for in the bill. Considering the inflationary spiral that may be upon us, and considering the economic situation which confronts us, the veterans' organizations realize that collectively the veterans would be injured by a cash payment. I can sympathize with the individual who is short of funds, and who is unable to establish a home or a business. Therefore we can readily see the two different approaches—the approach of the organization which favors the proposal which is before us, and the approach of the individual who may be hard pressed for cash at this time.

As I previously stated, while I favor the cash payment, I realize that those who are concerned with the bill, including the able Senator from Colorado, have taken the question up with the various departments and agencies which are interested, and whose approval we require; and in the interest of having a bill enacted before the session adjourns, the Senator is proposing this method as the best—and only—possible chance of obtaining legislation now.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I appreciate the Senator's realistic approach to the problem which we are facing.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. After the Senator and the committee had worked diligently, the Senator held another hearing with officials of the Navy Department, the Treasury Department, and other departments, to make certain that the best method was adopted; and it was decided that the bond method would be best. Is it not correct that after the bill was ready to be reported the committee held a hearing on Tuesday before last?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct. After the hearings had been closed, the Navy Department stated that it had some further suggestions to make. We invited officials of the Navy Department to appear before the committee and make suggestions. Even yesterday the Navy Department submitted four amendments. I agreed to three of them. They were clarifying amendments. So we have worked very carefully with the executive departments. After all, this bill is so comprehensive and so tremendous in its effects that we must not ignore the situation of the Departments and their interest in the matter.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. TUNNELL. I should like to ask the Senator as to the nature of the hearings which were held. Were they numerous or lengthy?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Many bills had been introduced. We held hearings, and everyone was invited to present whatever suggestions he had. For the most part those who attended the hearings were representatives of the departments and of the veterans' organizations.

Mr. TUNNELL. Was there any opposition to the general purpose? I can see that there might be differences of opinion as to whether payments should be in bonds or in cash; but was there any opposition to some sort of payment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. There was no opposition whatever. No one appeared in opposition to the measure.

Mr. TUNNELL. As I understand, this is a payment for time which belonged to the men.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct. It is retroactive to September 8, 1939, and it is a payment to the men for vacations which they should have had, but which they did not have.

Mr. TUNNELL. If they had their vacations, they will not get the money. Is that true?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. If they had their vacations they will not get the money. They must file applications and affidavits stating the amounts due them. Anyone can understand that with 11,000,000 applications it would be almost an endless task for the War and Navy Departments to determine the amount due each individual if it were necessary to go through the records in each case. The method of escaping that burden is to require an affidavit with the application. Of course, the applications can be checked if there is any reason for suspecting fraud. The departments will probably check a certain number of sample cases, so as to be sure that they are not being defrauded. That method will save a tremendous amount of money. Otherwise it would require an army to work out the details. Under the present terms of the bill it is estimated that 2,500 man-years will be required to carry out the purposes of the bill. Two thousand five hundred men working 1 year will be required to handle all the payments by the War and Navy Departments.

Mr. TUNNELL. The payment under the terms of the bill is not a bonus or a gift, but simply a payment for time which belonged to the men in the service.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct. As I previously stated, officers and civil-service employees are paid for leave time. Only enlisted men are denied that privilege.

Mr. TUNNELL. According to the law as it now is, the officers have been permitted to receive pay for terminal leave, but the enlisted men have not. Is that correct?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The enlisted men were denied it, but the officers were granted it.

Mr. TUNNELL. Yes. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BALL obtained the floor.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me, for the purpose of permitting me to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. BALL. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MAGNUSON in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hart	O'Daniel
Andrews	Hawkes	Overton
Ball	Hayden	Pepper

Gurney	Myers

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I offer and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 18, between lines 7 and 8, it is proposed to insert a new subsection as follows:

(d) In the settlement and compensation for leave under this section, there shall be deducted from the amount found to be due the member of the armed forces or his survivors under section 5, the amount of any mustering-out payment which has been paid or is payable in the case of such member under the provisions of the Mustering-Out Payment Act of 1944, as amended.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, before discussing the amendment, I should like to discuss the bill generally.

I am disturbed about several points in the bill, particularly the proposal that we make a change in the employment contract of the Federal Government with these enlisted men retroactive for 7 years. As I understand the situation, the Army and the Navy have kept no records of furloughs granted to enlisted men, so in the computation of this so-called terminal leave due to enlisted men, they will have to rely entirely upon the affidavits furnished by the men. The effect probably will be to allow 1 month for every year of service.

I wonder how many Senators could remember today how many weeks of vacation they took in 1939 or 1940 or 1941. It seems to me that it is obvious that these men will not be able to recall with any degree of accuracy how much furlough time they had, and the tendency will inevitably be for every man filing an application under this measure to claim the full month for every year he was in service.

But if this principle of making retroactive a change in the employment contract of the Federal Government is sound and just, then it seems to me that we made a terrible blunder a few weeks ago when we increased the pay of enlisted men about 20 percent. I cannot see much justice in paying the enlisted men 20 percent more for serving in the Army in peacetime than we paid enlisted men for fighting in the war. If this retroactive principle is sound as to terminal leave, why did not we make that change in the employment contract retroactive, so that the boys who actually fought the war would have received some advantage from the change?

Of course, we all recognize that in reality there are innumerable injustices in the armed forces in the course of fighting a war. They are inevitable. For instance, nearly all the boys who were drafted or who went into the service in the early days—1939, 1940, and 1941—had a chance to go to officers' training schools. Nearly all of them had an opportunity to take specialized training and receive ratings which would increase their base pay in some instances as much as 100 percent. On the other hand, those young men who became 18 years of age and were drafted in 1943 or 1944, when the need for replacements on the fighting fronts was desperate, received only a few weeks of training in the United States and then were shipped to the various fronts for replacements and many times the ranks of those replacements suffered tremendous casualties. Can we correct those injustices? Of course not. We cannot correct the injustice of assigning one soldier to a billet where he does not have to be under fire, and another one who, by chance, is selected for an infantry company which goes directly to the front line.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the principle of making a change retroactively in an employment contract can lead us into many difficulties. If, every time we find some small injustice in connection with the Federal service, we attempt to make a correction of it retroactively so that every person who has ever suffered under such injustice will receive consideration of some kind to compensate him, we will wind up in tremendous volumes of red tape, and the cost to the Government will be overwhelming.

Mr. President, I realize that many Senators, in considering this bill, have concentrated their entire attention on the fact that officers receive terminal leave while enlisted men do not. While mustering-out payments were provided for enlisted men, the Military Affairs Committee unfortunately made the mistake of extending those mustering-out payments to lieutenants and captains. For that error of the committee, we are now called upon to appropriate $3,000,000,000 to be distributed among 11,000,000 men.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALL. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I am wondering if the statement of the Senator is entirely correct. As I recall it, the mustering-out pay amendment, which extended payments to the junior officers, was the result of conference and not the result of committee action. I am pretty sure that that was the situation.

Mr. BALL. If the amendment was inserted on the floor of the Senate, the fault lies with the Senate rather than with the committee. However, the error took place, and, in the final analysis, it was committed by the Congress. It seems to me that it was an extremely expensive way of correcting an error of that nature.

Mr. President, I have been concerned with the pleas which have come to me for early passage of this bill. These appeals often partake of the current propaganda which has been circulated against officers in the Army and in the Navy. I refer to the so-called caste system. It seems to me that the retroactive feature of this bill, particularly, is a part and parcel of the current attempt to blow up out of all proportions the relatively minor abuses of officers' privileges in the armed services. It is part of a campaign to prove that all the officers in the Army and in the Navy were heels who had special privileges while all the enlisted men had hearts of gold and fought the war all by themselves. We all know that is not true, and we all recognize the distorted propaganda which has been circulated in an effort to overemphasize the situation about which there have been complaints.

Mr. President, this entire issue arises, as I have said, from the fact that lieutenants and captains—I have not been able to ascertain how many are concerned, but I do not believe that more than 300,000 or 500,000 are concerned—received mustering-out pay of from $100 to $300, as well as terminal leave. I think there has been too much concentration on that particular phase of the picture. There are other inequalities in connection with pay and allowances of officers and men, some of which are in the other direction. For example, enlisted men are furnished all their clothing and replacements. Lieutenants and captains receive a $250 initial allowance to be used in buying uniforms. In almost all cases the allowance is not sufficient, and those men are required to pay out of their own money for necessary replacements. Enlisted men are furnished all their food at the regular Army messes. Officers are granted 70 cents a day as subsistence allowance. From the best information I have been able to obtain, the mess bill of a lieutenant or a captain at a normal Army post ran about $1.30 to $1.50 a day, and the man's deficit at the end of each month was approximately $20 to $25. That is another differential between the officers and enlisted men which ran in the other direction. The discrimination in that case was against the officers.

In connection with dependency allowances, the discriminations were far greater. A lieutenant or captain who was married could obtain a dependency allowance of not to exceed 70 cents a day, or $21 a month, regardless of how many dependents he had. On the other hand, if married, the enlisted man was entitled to an allowance, in addition to his pay, of $28 a month for a wife, $30 a month for the first child, and $20 a month for each additional child. When an enlisted man had a wife and three children he was entitled, above his regular pay to an allowance of $98 a month. A lieutenant with three children was entitled to only $21 a month.

In connection with class B dependents, such as parents, brothers, and sisters, if the officer was married he was able to obtain no allowance. If he was not married and had a dependent mother, for example, the most he could obtain was $15 a month. The enlisted man, for class B dependents, could receive an allowance of $45 a month if the dependent was totally dependent, and if partially dependent, the enlisted man was allowed $32.50 a month. The enlisted man could obtain both class A and class B dependency allowances, whereas the officer could receive only one. If the officer received $15 for a dependent mother, he could not get $21 in the event that he was a married man.

Mr. President, what I have stated represents a pretty strong discrimination in pay scales and allowances in favor of enlisted men. When we are talking about justice between enlisted men and officers, I think we should recognize the fact that there are clearly two sides to the story. As a matter of fact, I have been told many times by both officers and enlisted men that some of the petty officers in the enlisted ranks would not even consider making application for admission to officers' training schools, because they could not afford to be officers. They had families, and the pay and allowances of second lieutenants did not permit the enlisted men, if they became such, to receive as much for the support of their families as they received for being top-grade enlisted men.

Finally, Mr. President, is there any need at this time for passing out to 11,000,000 men some $3,000,000,000 in Federal checks? Only recently the Senate completed action on the third deficiency appropriation bill in which there was a deficiency appropriation for the 1947 fiscal year for veterans of nearly $2,000,000,000 on top of a previous appropriation of approximately $1,000,000,000 for the purpose of paying for benefits available to all veterans under the GI bill of rights. A few minutes ago the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] inserted in the RECORD a three-page list, compiled by the Legislative Reference Service of the Congressional Library, of the various benefits to which veterans are entitled under acts of Congress. Among those benefits is $20 a week which any unemployed veteran is entitled to receive for 52 weeks. That amounts to $1,040 which is available to any veteran in need, as compared with approximately the $240 check or bond which it is proposed to give under the pending bill. Those who take advantage of the educational and training features of the GI bill of rights receive $65 a month subsistence if single, and $90 a month if married.

I think, incidentally, that is the one benefit to veterans which is going to pay the biggest dividends to the country. They can also, of course, borrow, with a Government guarantee of half the loan up to $2,000 with which to buy a home or business or a farm.

There is no need for the concealed bonus in this bill today. Any veteran who wants it can get a job today. These checks will go mainly to able-bodied young men who are in the age bracket from 20 to 30 years. If there is any group in our whole population who should be able, in the full employment economy of today, to stand on their own feet and make their own way, without hand-outs from the Government, it is that group.

Mr. President, I should like to read the last paragraph of a letter from Paul Appleby, Acting Director of the Budget, with regard to the bill. The letter appears in the committee report, and after discussing amendments which are incorporated in the pending bill, reads as follows:

> I have discussed with the President the provisions of H. R. 4051 and the amendatory provisions thereof as projected in the committee print of the bill.

I call attention to this:

> While such provisions would not be considered as being in accord with the program of the President, he would find acceptable a measure along the lines of the draft attached hereto.

It is not in accord with his program, but he will find it acceptable in an election year to pass out $3,000,000,000 to 11,000,000 men and women, most of them voters. That is the most honest and courageous example of double talk I have noted around here in quite a while.

Mr. President, I have read many hundreds of letters and telegrams I have received in regard to the bill. The American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and all the other veterans' organizations are putting on a great drive to get it passed. I have received more than my share, I suppose, because a few days ago, on the call of the Consent Calendar, I objected to the passage of the bill now pending by unanimous consent under the rule permitting only 5-minute speeches. We have already discussed it 3 hours today. I had a call from the legislative representative of one of the veterans' organizations, who protested very vigorously because I had not let the bill go through on a call of the Consent Calendar.

Mr. President, not all but many of the letters from veterans' organizations, unfortunately, and various posts, as well as letters from individuals, contain threats of political reprisals if I do not support the legislation. In other words, they say, "If you want my vote in the next election, you had better vote for this bill."

I do not blame the individuals who sign those letters or telegrams. I do not blame the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, or individual posts which adopt resolutions endorsing the legislation, because it is perfectly obvious they have heard only one side of the story. They have swallowed the allegations of rank discrimination between officers and men. They have not heard it all. They think an injustice has been done, and that it should be corrected.

I am sorry that apparently in so many of the posts there is no veteran who knows the facts and has courage enough to get up and tell them in meeting. Obviously it is because the boys who want the checks would be a little hostile to that kind of procedure.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BALL. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. The Senator read the last paragraph of the Appleby letter found on page 3 of the committee report. I call the Senator's attention to the last sentence, which reads as follows:

> While such provisions—

Referring to the provision in a proposed bill—

> While such provisions would not be considered as being in accord with the program of the President, he would find acceptable a measure along the lines of the draft attached hereto.

Is the Senator familiar with the terms of the draft which was attached to the letter?

Mr. BALL. I assume it is the bill now pending.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALL. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Senator is correct in his assumption. The bill now before the Senate is the draft which was referred to by Mr. Appleby.

Mr. CORDON. Will the Senator further yield?

Mr. BALL. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. Am I to understand, then, that the provisions which were sent to the President were provisions for cash payments?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The bill as it came from the House provided for cash payments. The Treasury Department and the Budget recommend bond payments, and that is the matter to which Mr. Appleby referred.

Mr. CORDON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, the point to which I referred in reading the letter was that the statement is made that while the bill is not in accord with the program of the President, nevertheless he finds it acceptable.

I think it is perfectly clear, at least it seems so to me, that this is not an attempt to correct a serious injustice, but rather a little bonus to be paid out to 11,000,000 men in an election year.

I intend to vote against the bill. I fear for the future of this country if these great veterans' organizations, with their millions and millions of members, start out again on a program, not to develop a sound economy in this country, a government that is operated on a balanced budget, so that he will not head straight for bankruptcy, but purely and simply on a "gimme" basis, out to get everything they can bludgeon the Congress into giving for veterans.

Mr. President, if that is the direction down which these great and powerful veterans' organizations are going to travel and take their millions of members in the next few years, then God help these United States of America. In my opinion we will not long preserve the kind of a country and system for which these boys fought, and we will do them a greater disservice than any favor we could do them through the enactment of such a bill.

Mr. President, the amendment I have offered is very simple. It provides for the deduction from this terminal leave pay, as computed, of mustering-out payments made to these individuals.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALL. I yield.

Mr. KILGORE. Is there any way of going back and ascertaining the terminal leave pay that has been paid to officers who have been discharged?

Mr. BALL. I do not think there is any practical way.

Mr. KILGORE. That has gone on for some time. I wondered if any provision had been made to treat all the discharged men alike, regardless of grade.

Mr. BALL. Perhaps the Senator would like to go back to the First World War and the Spanish-American War. The same system prevailed then, I understand.

Mr. KILGORE. I beg the Senator's pardon. I happen to have served in the First World War, and I did not receive any terminal leave, as I well remember.

Mr. BALL. The acts which are repealed in the pending bill date back before the First World War.

I realize the difficulty arises because three grades of officers, lieutenants and captains, as well as enlisted men, receive this mustering out payment. Of course, the fact is that the great majority of the lieutenants and captains started out as enlisted men, and, as I understand, under the bill, they would be entitled to terminal leave for the months or years when they were enlisted men. Is that correct?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct; but in no case a total of more than 120 days.

Mr. BALL. That is correct. So that if they had received 30 or 60 days of terminal leave as officers, and can go back and show 2 years of service as enlisted men, they would be entitled to a lump sum of 60 days' terminal leave. Is that correct?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. They would be entitled to the amount they did not get.

Mr. BALL. In my opinion, that would cover the great bulk of the lieutenants and captains, most of whom came up through the ranks. If we deduct the mustering-out payments from this computed terminal leave, that in large part corrects the injustice. It would not correct it completely, but I do not think there is any possibility of ever eliminating completely these minor injustices. I see no reason for a $3,000,000,000 raid on the Treasury merely because a few hundred thousand lieutenants and captains, most of whom came up through the ranks themselves, received terminal leave payments as well as mustering-out payments, while the enlisted men got only the mustering-out payments.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. BALL. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Since the able Senator has raised this question, of course he realizes that even today the lieutenants and the captains receive their mustering-out pay, plus this terminal leave. The bill does not create a situation in which they would get any more.

I may say to the Senator that the very point he raises was discussed in the committee. He has spoken about the credit that might be received for mustering-out pay. But, as has been brought out in the discussion, many thousands upon thousands of the veterans have received both the mustering-out pay and the terminal leave. I further point out to the able Senator that when the original mustering-out bill came from the Committee on Military Affairs to the floor of the Senate, it applied only to the enlisted man, but an amendment was inserted on the floor which included the first three grades following, with the result that perhaps those officers received both terminal-leave and mustering-out pay. We cannot go back and collect from them a credit for mustering-out pay. So the bill is reported on what seems to me the only fair basis—it is costly; I realize that—but it is reported on the only fair basis on which it could be framed, and that is that the men in the ranks should receive their terminal pay.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator this question. On that basis would he be in favor of going back and granting to officers the same allowances for dependents which were granted to enlisted men? The enlisted man received much higher and more liberal allowances for dependents than did officers.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I have not given study to that subject. It has not been raised in committee. I certainly would be willing to study it. I was trying to make plain to the Senate that unless we take a position of this kind we shall have made a discrimination which we cannot avoid correcting, and we do not want to avoid correcting it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALL. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I do not think it is quite fair to make the point that all the men in the three lower officer grades came up from the enlisted ranks with any long service in the enlisted ranks. Many of the younger officers did come up from the rank of private, but they served only a very few months as privates. Most of them came from the ROTC, from West Point, from Annapolis, and from the other schools. Very few of them came up to the commissioned ranks after long service in the enlisted grades. Very few men had long service in the grades of noncommissioned officers and then became commissioned officers.

Mr. BALL. I think it is probably true that very few of them served more than a year or year and a half, on the average, in the ranks before being commissioned, most of them, I believe, coming through OCS. I do know, myself, however, of individuals who served as much as 3 years in the ranks before they were commissioned.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an observation?

Mr. BALL. Yes.

Mr. MAYBANK. My observation is made in connection with what was brought out by the Senator from Colorado earlier in the debate, that there seemed to exist in the minds of some Senators the belief that paying enlisted men in bonds, whereas officers have been paid in cash, involved discrimination. I must agree with the Senator from Minnesota and say that most of the officers who received the mustering-out pay certainly came up from the ranks. Many of them were in the ranks a very long time.

What I wanted to bring out was that most of the officers are going to be paid in bonds because their terminal leave as enlisted men in many instances will be far greater than it was as officers, for which they were paid in cash. The point has been made that all the officers are going to be paid in cash and the enlisted men in bonds. As a matter of fact most of the officers' payments will probably be in bonds, because in the case of officers the mustering-out pay was limited to captains, lieutenants, and second lieutenants, and certainly 90 percent of them came up from the ranks. Large numbers of them served for a long, long time in the ranks, and will receive credit for 2 or 3 years' service in computing terminal pay in the form of bonds for the time they served as enlisted men, although they are now officers. I am heartily in favor of the legislation. The argument that officers are being paid in cash and the enlisted men in bonds has no force at all, because I believe it will be found that most of the payments will be made in bonds, by reason of the fact that the officers involved were enlisted men for long periods of time.

Mr. BALL. I thank the Senator. I think he has made a good argument for the pending amendment, which would deduct mustering-out payments from the terminal leave provided under this bill. If 90 percent of the officers who receive both mustering-out pay and terminal leave will be entitled to benefits under this bill, then we will correct, through my amendment 90 percent of the so-called injustice which this bill supposedly is aimed at, and we will do it at about one-tenth of the cost to the Federal Government.

Mr. MAYBANK. I merely wish to add that I am opposed to the Senator's amendment for the reason previously stated, that is, that the committee tried in every way possible for a period of more than a month to draft a bill which would do justice to those who have already been paid, and we were unable to do it.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I am opposed to this bill because I feel it is an utterly unjustifiable expenditure of a huge sum of money. Congress passed the GI bill of rights. We knew when we did that that enlisted men did not get terminal leave. For that reason we gave them $300 mustering-out pay. At that time it was not contemplated they were going to get terminal leave. We then knew that they did not get it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. But we did pay mustering-out pay and terminal leave also to certain officers.

Mr. TAFT. I am coming to that. But I say, as to the enlisted men we knew that when we passed the GI bill of rights. I am in favor of a very liberal treatment of veterans. The GI bill of rights treated the veterans liberally in a constructive way. The various provisions of that bill, it seems to me, provided a program on which we could stand. It was a generous program, and from time to time it can and should be improved to make it better and more fitting for the needs of the veteran.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The GI bill of rights makes no distinction between officers and enlisted personnel.

Mr. TAFT. Now it is said that because by mistake—and so far as I am concerned it certainly was a mistake to give mustering-out pay to lieutenants and captains who also happened to have terminal leave pay—because by mistake 500,000 men perhaps received something more than they were entitled to, now we must give it to 11,000,000 men at a cost of $3,000,000,000. That seems to me to be an utterly fantastic and illogical argument.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BALL] has pointed out that there were many other inequalities. The officers receive less allowance for food and less allowance for clothing and less allowance for dependents than does the enlisted man. That cannot be equalized. Because we perhaps made a mistake and were too generous with captains and lieutenants, five hundred thousand of them, it is now contended we must extend that to 11,000,000 men. I think it is an utterly fantastic and illogical and unjustifiable argument.

Mr. President, we have come to the time when we cannot spend Federal money in the way it is proposed to spend it. I pointed out the other day that for the next year apparently there will be a deficit of from ten to twelve billion dollars. It does not make it better to pay the amount of money involved in this bill in bonds. Those who receive them are a little less likely to spend them than if they receive the money in cash, but, if they need the money, friends will loan them money on their bonds, or banks will loan them money on their bonds. The provision for bonds simply covers up the fact that we are paying out $3,000,000,000, and paying it out at a time when we have more purchasing power than we need, when there is no necessity on the part of the men who are receiving the payments, no justification to take care of them in hard times, because we have been very generous with them both in unemployment compensation, and fortunately the economic condition of the country had been such as to provide jobs for the men who want them. So it seems to me that we have no justification for this proposal.

I have here a schedule by months of the expenditures of government, which is very interesting because it shows the direction in which we are going. We were spending at the height of the war about $10,000,000,000 a month. By VJ-day we had gotten down to $6,500,000,000 a month. Then it came down until February of this year it reached $3,500,000,000. That is the lowest point in Federal expenditure in any month since that time. From that time on expenditures went upward. In March the Federal expenditures were in excess of $4,500,000,000; in April more than $4,250,000,000; in May $3,500,000,000; in June $5,500,000,000.

Mr. President, all this talk about economy does not mean anything if we are willing to pass bills which provide for the expenditure of vast sums, of billions of dollars of money. We have done it in other respects, I agree. I voted against the Bretton Woods agreement and the British loan, which cost about $10,000,000,000. I think we have succeeded in reducing subsidies from $2,000,000,000 to $1,000,000,000, and perhaps a little more. But unless we deal with the large sums the small amounts we argue about in the appropriation bills for the departments mean nothing. Certainly we have reached a time when we must regard expenditures of the Federal Government in large sums with great care and with great criticism.

I recognize the argument that a mistake was made in connection with mustering-out pay, and so forth, but it seems to be a superficial argument, and I do not think that at the present time there is any justification for trying to correct a mistake which we made. Maybe a few officers did receive a little more than they were entitled to. Perhaps some of the men who will receive this terminal pay will receive a little less. There will be inequalities. All inequalities cannot be corrected. Some men suffered injuries for which they cannot be compensated. War is a great leveler. Equality cannot be achieved between men and men, between officers and men, or between different officers. I believe the program which we adopted of $300 mustering-out pay was fair. When we did it we did not contemplate that we would go back and pay what amounts to another mustering-out pay, because that, in effect, is what it is, amounting to approximately the same as the mustering-out pay provided in the GI bill of rights.

Mr. President, I do not like to vote against the bill, but in case there is not a yea-and-nay vote I should like to be recorded as opposed to it.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I think the members of the Committee on Military Affairs are to be commended for writing a fair and reasonable bill in relation to terminal-leave pay, and I wish particularly to commend the able Senator from Colorado, who is in charge of the bill.

I served for 3 years in the Army, a part of the time as an enlisted man and a part of the time as an officer. Frankly, I could not see then, and I cannot see now, any equity in providing payment for terminal leave in the case of an officer and not providing the same terminal-leave pay for enlisted personnel.

Some statements have been made to the effect that perhaps this is a raid on the Treasury of the United States. I do not think that is so. At one time there were 15,000,000 men in the armed services of the United States. Some served in this country and some served overseas. Some have returned and some have not. Some have come back in such condition that they can once more take their places in the lives of their communities; and some have come back in such condition that they cannot take their old places in the lives and activities of their communities.

Mr. President, we took those men away from their families, their businesses, and their jobs. We put them into the Army of the United States and told them that they would be compensated to a certain extent. For the most part that compensation was far below the compensation paid those who did war work and engaged in other forms of activity in the United States during that period.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator might add that their compensation was far below the present compensation of members of the armed forces.

Mr. KNOWLAND. The Senator is absolutely correct.

Mr. President, we are not giving something to these men. We are compensating them for time which they spent in the Army of the United States, working for the Government of the United States. During that period of time, under Army regulations and under the laws of the country, they were entitled to have a certain furlough period, in the case of enlisted men, or a leave period in the case of officers. Because of the very serious situation with which our armies as a whole and the various components of the armies were confronted overseas, in innumerable cases it was not possible for the commanders to let their men take the furlough time to which they were entitled. Therefore they were, in effect, donating the time which they were entitled to have as leave or furlough time, and for which they were entitled to be paid. It seems to me, Mr. President, that we are merely carrying out an equitable principle. If an officer is entitled to be paid for the time which he did not take, but to which he was entitled, then as a matter of principle an enlisted man is entitled to the same treatment. There is no doubt whatsoever in my mind on this question.

The point has been raised that this measure may add to the inflationary situation facing the country. I believe that the committee has framed a reasonable amendment, providing for payment in bonds which will be cashable over a period of years. But it seems to me that it would be a gross inequality today for the Senate not to pass this amended bill, as proposed by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I most earnestly hope that the pending amendment will not be approved by the Senate. I do not wish to take much time to reply to the arguments made by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BALL] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT]. I wish to read into the RECORD, however, a complete reply to their arguments from two former sergeants. This is in the form of a memorandum addressed to me:

Memorandum to: Senator EDWIN C. JOHNSON.
Subject: Terminal leave for enlisted men.

1. On return to the States for discharge, it appeared as though the end of unpleasant experiences of partiality and privilege for officers had come. Apparently the country felt as well disposed toward the enlisted men who had served as toward the officer and that there would be no prerogatives for the officer group.

2. However, at our separation center we discovered there was a distinction. The golden eagle worn on the lapel of an ex-officer implies he is receiving money for the furloughs he has not had whereas that same eagle worn on the lapel of an ex-enlisted man means he is not receiving money for the furlough time the service owes him. Terminal leave, or payment for unobtained furloughs, is due only ex-officers under present arrangements.

3. All veterans are entitled to equal benefits from the GI bill of rights; we all wear the same discharge button. Why, then, are not enlisted men also entitled to accrued leave with the pay of their discharge rank? Why doesn't our Nation realize that ex-enlisted men need and are entitled to the financial compensation as much as ex-officers; that we demand an equal policy in all veterans' legislation, and that we want veteran discrimination erased?

Ex-Sgt. CLYDE WENDELKEN, Jr.
Ex-Sgt. CHARLES N. HILL.

Mr. President, this seems to me to be a complete reply to the arguments to which the Senate has just listened. I have received hundreds of letters on the same subject. I shall not burden the RECORD with them.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I am not speaking directly to the pending amendment. However, I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate facts which I think ought to be in the RECORD and in the minds of Senators.

Earlier in the day the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] placed in the RECORD a summary of major benefits extended to veterans of World War II by Federal legislation. That was a list of legislative enactments for the benefit of veterans of World War II. The statement does not indicate the amount of money expended for the veterans.

At this time I wish to read into the RECORD a list of laws enacted by the Seventy-ninth Congress only, for the veterans of World War II.

The act of April 27, 1945, amended the Code of Laws of the District of Columbia by adding new sections and providing for the recording of veterans' discharge certificates without payment of fees.

The act of May 4, 1945, amended section 2 of Public 140, Seventy-seventh Congress, making benefits apply to former enlisted men of the Regular Army and Philippine Scouts who have served 20 years or more and who were honorably discharged with a disability incurred in line of duty.

Under the act of May 9, 1945, we extended the date of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, and provided that inductees under 19 years of age be given 6 months' training for combat.

Under the act of June 1, 1945, Congress provided for enlistments in the Regular Army during the period of the war.

Under the act of June 23, 1945, the Congress amended Public 849 of the Seventy-sixth Congress by adding a new title to provide housing of temporary nature to distressed families of servicemen and veterans with families.

By the act of June 30, 1945, the Congress amended the Federal Farm Loan Act, the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation Act, and the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, all of which amendments created additional benefits for veterans.

Also by the act of June 30, 1945, Congress enacted the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1945. Section 608 of that act carries exemptions for purposes of veterans' laws and regulations on income restrictions.

By the act of July 2, 1945, the Congress amended the National Life Insurance Act to extend 5-year level-premium term policies for an additional 3 years.

By the act of July 6, 1945, the Congress provided for a medal for services in the armed forces of the United States or of the Government of the Philippine Islands, beginning December 7, 1941.

By the act of July 6, 1945, the Congress amended section 100 of Public 346 of the Seventy-eighth Congress to grant certain priorities to the Veterans' Administration for the benefit of veterans.

By the act of September 20, 1945, Congress amended Veterans' Regulation 1 (a) parts I and II, as amended, to provide additional rates of compensation or pension and render inequalities as to specific service-incurred disability in excess of total disability.

Mr. President, in addition to the laws I have already enumerated, the Seventy-ninth Congress has enacted the following laws in aid of veterans:

Public Law	Subject	Approved
190	Armed Forces Voluntary Recruitment Act of 1945	Oct. 6, 1945
216	Amends Civil Service Retirement Act of 1930, as amended, to protect retirement rights of persons who leave service to enter armed forces of United States	Nov. 9, 1945
226	Provides that members or former members of armed forces who reenter civilian employment while on terminal leave, shall be paid for accumulated or accrued leave (officers)	Nov. 21, 1945

268	Amends titles I, II, III, and IV of Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, liberalizing the provisions thereof	Dec. 28, 1945
271	Expedites admission to the United States of alien spouses and alien minor children of citizen members of the United States armed forces	Do.
288	Provides for transfer of appropriation for continuing the Navy's V-12 program to the end of June 1946	Do.
292	Amends Public, 849, 76th Cong., to authorize additional appropriation to provide housing for distressed families of servicemen, veterans, and their families ($160,000,000)	Dec. 31, 1945
293	Establishes a Department of Medicine and Surgery in the Veterans' Administration	Jan. 3, 1946
295	Amends sec. 2 (b), Public, 880, 76th Cong., to count military services of legislative branch employees as continuous	Feb. 12, 1946
298	Amends Public, 490, 77th Cong. (and other acts) providing for payment on a commuted basis of costs of transportation of dependents of certain persons entitled to such	Do.
301	First Supplemental Surplus Appropriation Rescission Act, 1946. Contains appropriation for the Army of the Philippines, for national service life insurance and pension	Feb. 18, 1946
306	Permits settlement of accounts of deceased officers and enlisted men of Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard; and of deceased commissioned officers of Public Health Service without administration of estates	Feb. 26, 1946
318	Amends sec. 9, Boulder Canyon Project Act, 1928, to include members of armed forces during World War I and II, Spanish War, and Philippine Insurrection, in preference rights to land and employment	Mar. 6, 1946
336	Amends Public, 849, 76th Cong., as amended by Public, 292, 79th Cong., to authorize appropriation for additional temporary housing units for distressed families of servicemen and for veterans and their families ($410,000,000 in lieu of $160,000,000)	Mar. 28, 1946
341	Makes additional appropriation of $253,727,000 for veterans' housing and related expenses, under title V, Public, 849, 76th Cong., as amended by Public, 87, 79th Cong., subject to provisions of Public, 336, 79th Cong	Apr. 12, 1946
348	To facilitate voting by members of the armed forces and certain others absent from the place of their residence, and to amend Public, 712, 77th Cong., as amended by Public, 277, 78th Cong	Apr. 19, 1946
365	Amends par. 8 of pt. VII, Veterans Regulation 1 (a), as amended (Public, 16, 78th Cong.), to authorize, in lieu of $500,000 now authorized, an appropriation of $1,500,000 as a revolving fund for advancements to persons undertaking courses of vocational rehabilitation	Apr. 24, 1946
368	Provides payment of travel allowance and transportation and transportation of dependents and shipment of household effects, of members of naval forces who are separated from active service under conditions other than honorable	Apr. 27, 1946
372	District of Columbia Servicemen's Readjustment Enabling Act of 1945. Removes disability of minority in District of Columbia in connection with loans under Public, 346, 78th Cong., and makes other provisions with respect to loans to effectuate the purposes of that act	May 1, 1946
375	Amends certain sections of Public, 457, 78th Cong., giving veterans priority in acquiring surplus property, except transfers to Government agencies	May 3, 1946
376	Amends Public, 373, 77th Cong., as amended by Public, 699, 77th Cong., and Public, 145, 78th Cong., "An act to authorize black-outs in the District of Columbia"; to authorize Commissioners of District to provide services to veterans and war workers	May 9, 1946
379	Extends the Selective Training and Service Act, 1940, as amended, until July 1, 1946	May 14, 1946
383	Provides for the evacuation and return of the remains of certain persons who died and are buried outside the continental limits of the United States	May 16, 1946
385	Authorizes the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to provide necessary utilities for veterans' housing furnished and erected by the National Housing Administrator	May 18, 1946
388	To expedite the availability of housing and production and allocation of materials for housing purposes for veterans of World War II and by curbing excessive pricing of new housing. Veterans' Emergency Housing Act of 1946	May 22, 1946
405	Authorizes payment of additional uniform gratuity to Reserve officers commissioned from the status of aviation cadets	June 11, 1946
424	Amends sec. 100 of Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944 to authorize Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to enter into leases or renewals of leases of property for periods not exceeding 5 years	June 22, 1946
425	Removes existing limitation on number of associate members of the Board of Veterans' Appeals in the Veterans' Administration	Do.
440	Amends sec. 1, Public, 434, 78th Cong., to provide that World War II veterans shall not be disqualified from making homestead entries or from other benefits of the act by reason of not having reached the age of 21 years	June 25, 1946
444	Modifies the time limitations governing the award of certain military and naval decorations for acts performed during World War II	June 26, 1946
454	"Republic of the Philippines Military Assistance Act." Provides military assistance to the Republic of the Philippines in establishing and maintaining national security and to form a basis for participation by that Government in such defensive military operations as the future may require	Do.
458	Governs the effective dates of ratings and awards under the Veterans' Administration revised schedule for rating disabilities, 1945	June 27, 1946
471	Makes provision for facilitating the admission into the United States of the alien fiancées or fiancés of members of the armed forces of the United States	June 29, 1946
473	Reenacts all provisions of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, except certain provisions which are amended or repealed	Do.
474	Amends the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended, so as to provide an increase in pay for personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service	Do.
494	Provides that under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration monetary benefits, other than retirement pay, for service-connected disability or death shall be designated "compensation," and not "pension"	July 9, 1946
499	Authorizes the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to furnish upon a reimbursement basis certain benefits, services, and supplies to discharged members of the military or naval forces of any nation allied or associated with the United States in World War II in consideration of reciprocal services extended to the United States	July 11, 1946

Mr. President, let us look at some of the benefits which have actually been paid to the veterans under some of the laws to which I have made reference. The amounts to which I now refer were payments actually made up to July 1, 1946, as pensions for World War II veterans:

Under Public Law 2, Seventy-third Congress, March 20, 1933, which is an amendment of an old act of Congress applicable to World War I veterans—Veterans Regulation 1 (a), of June 6, 1933, as amended by Public Law 144, Seventy-eighth Congress, of July 13, 1943, and by Public Law 313, Seventy-eighth Congress, of May 27, 1944, the amount paid out up to July 1, 1946, under these acts, as amended, was $897,869,000.

Under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, Public Law 346, Seventy-eighth Congress, June 22, 1944, as amended by Public Law 268 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, the amounts actually paid out to July 1, 1946, are as follows: Educational benefits, $410,000,000; readjustment allowances, $1,105,000,000; loan guaranties, $6,746,000.

Vocational rehabilitation under Public Law 16 of the Seventy-eighth Congress, act of March 24, 1943: amount of costs to July 1, 1946, $120,000,000.

National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended, $2,634,487,000.

Hospitalization under Veterans Regulation 6 (a) as amended, $135,000,000.

The total cost to July 1, 1946, was $5,309,102,000.

What I read are the amounts paid out by the Veterans' Administration. Mr. President, let us look at benefits not administered by the Veterans' Administration:

Housing for veterans, to which I have already referred in Public Law 336, $410,000,000.

Public Law 341, Seventy-ninth Congress, $253,727,000.

To this should be added, perhaps, a $160,000,000 additional appropriation, under the Lanham Act, but I am not quite sure what that appropriation would absorb in the larger appropriation of $410,000,000, and I am therefore not including it. But the total benefits not administered by the Veterans' Administration, but for veterans nevertheless, amounted to $663,727,000 up to July 1, 1946.

Mr. President, benefits administered by the Army are as follows:

Payment of 6 months' death gratuity, which I regret to say I am not able to supply, but is, of course, quite an item.

Mustering Out Payment Act of February 3, 1944, $2,368,691,405. No figures are available, to me at least, from the Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard. That is to say, I have no information with regard to expenditures made on this account by any one of those services.

Let us look briefly at the benefits proposed by pending legislation. By the term "pending legislation," Mr. President, I mean legislation which has been passed by one House or the other of the Congress, or has actually gone to the White House, as I believe is the case in one or two instances.

Under House bill 6811 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, increased payments during hospitalization of veterans, $13,148,000; 20 percent increase in pensions and compensation, $285,450,000, or a total under this bill of $298,598,000. That is also an annual expenditure. In other words, the obligation of the Government is not discharged in 1 year, but the payments continue from year to year, although perhaps in varying amounts.

House bill 6371, Seventy-ninth Congress, increased benefits under national service life insurance, $1,600,000,000.

Under a bill which has not yet been passed by either House, but is on the Speaker's desk awaiting the signature of a sufficient number of petitioners to discharge the committee, House bill 6304, Seventy-ninth Congress, provides for automobiles for veterans who have lost their limbs or have sustained a loss in the use of their limbs, $30,000,000.

The cost of the pending bill, House bill 4051, the terminal-pay bill, is estimated to run between $2,000,000,000 and $4,000,000,000.

In making a computation which is not entirely accurate, perhaps, but in the main is accurate, there has been listed the cost of the pending bill, the terminal-pay bill, at only $2,000,000,000. Actually, it may run, as the distinguished Senator from Colorado has said, to $3,000,000,000. So, under the benefits proposed by pending legislation, in dollars and cents, under House bill 3908, Seventy-ninth Congress, the first year's increase in pensions to veterans will be $3,445,000.

Under House bill 5148, which is at the White House awaiting the signature or the action of the President, the pensions withheld from persons in foreign countries in World War II, will be $10,164,061.13.

House bill 6900, Seventy-ninth Congress, 20-percent increase in pension, Spanish-American War, first year, $1,394,000.

Payments to 70-day cases, age 65, $254,000.

Increase to 70-day cases, regular aid and attendance, $12,600.

Increased payments to widows, $4,860,000. The total is $6,520,600.

Mr. President, another bill which is now at the White House, Senate bill 706, Seventy-ninth Congress, provides for increases in burial allowances totaling $4,290,000.

Under Senate bill 2204, Seventy-ninth Congress, which has already passed the Senate and will be passed by the House perhaps today or tomorrow, social-security benefits to survivors of veterans of World War II, $175,000,000.

I have tabulated the estimated cost of pending legislation, and the total is $4,098,281,600, including the pending bill at $2,000,000,000, as I have already stated.

A recapitulation is as follows:

Veterans' housing, $823,727,000.

Benefits not administered by Veterans' Administration, $2,378,691,405.

Pension, World War II veterans and GI bill, costs to July 1, 1946, $5,309,102,000.

Pending legislation, $4,098,281,600.

That represents a total, Mr. President, of $12,609,802,005, or more than twelve and one-half billion dollars.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. GEORGE. I am glad to yield to the Senator. I was about to conclude.

Mr. HAWKES. I know the Senator was about to conclude, and I merely wanted to ask him why he uses the figure $2,000,000,000 as representing the cost of the pending measure?

Mr. GEORGE. Because it was estimated to cost from $2,000,000,000 to $4,000,000,000, and I took the smaller of the two amounts. I am quite sure it will amount approximately to $3,000,000,000, as the Senator from Colorado himself has estimated.

Mr. HAWKES. I should like to say to the Senator that I have talked with a number of persons who have told me that the cost of the bill will run as high as $5,000,000,000. No one in the world knows what the furloughs for which compensation is to be paid will cost. I do not see how anyone can estimate the cost.

Mr. GEORGE. I am prepared to agree with the Senator, but I was taking the minimum as estimated by any responsible source of which I know.

Mr. HAWKES. I invite attention of the Senator to the fact that, in the report which is before the Senate, the Undersecretary of the Navy, Mr. Sullivan, when he submitted to the hearings a draft which he said would be acceptable to the President—and I understand the bill now before the Senate is a draft which will be acceptable to the President—stated as follows:

> The figures I have been using in my own discussions and thinking are $2,000,000,000 for the Army and three-quarters of a billion for the Navy. It is a very difficult figure on which to get a reliable estimate, but I think this is as close as we can come in giving you an opinion.

The only purpose I have in bringing this to the notice of Senators is that I do not think we should continue to fool ourselves any longer about how much these payments are going to amount to.

I think there is no one in the world who can pay the veteran for what he has done. In other words, it seems to me that any man who is willing to accept an unnecessary dollar in return for the service he has rendered this country over and above his established rate of pay is losing his fine position in the world. I told a fine group of veterans a few nights ago something which I should like to repeat here. I said that every veteran of this war, from my point of view, will be found in one of four classes. First, there are those who went abroad and will never return; they are buried on foreign soil, and we cannot do anything for them except to honor and respect them. My own son is one of them, as is the son of the distinguished Senator from Georgia, who has permitted me to interrupt him.

The next class consists of those who have been wounded, many of them blown nearly to pieces, and who have come back mutilated. My office was full of them today. There is no one in this world who can do the things necessary to replace what has been taken away from those boys. If I had my way about it, this Nation would pay many times more to the fellow who has had his arms, his legs, or his eyes taken away from him, or his health ruined, and has come back incapacitated for life, than we have ever done thus far.

There is a third class, the men who were wounded but who have recovered, and are now perfectly able to stand on their own feet with temporary help from the Government.

There is a fourth class, the fellows to whom God has been kind, who have come back well and strong after having the wonderful experience of fighting for their Nation.

I said to those veterans the other night that if a man who has come back whole is going to try to raid the United States Treasury for something he does not need, and thus wreck this country, then he lost the war to preserve the principles of American life; he did not win it.

Mr. President, I say that to the distinguished Senator from Georgia today. If we can teach the veteran who has returned whole that all he needs and all he is entitled to under the American way of life, is a chance to get on his feet—and we should willingly give him that and help him in every way necessary—after that he should with pride carry his load as an American citizen. Al Smith, one of the greatest real liberal Democrats who ever lived, entertained those views, and I always agreed with him.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from New Jersey. I have a purpose in making this statement, showing that benefits heretofore provided, and those provided in pending bills, some of which are already at the White House, as I have said twice before, and all of the rest of which will reach the White House before we finish this session, even though we adjourn this week or early next week, reach the high total of approximately twelve and one-half or thirteen billion dollars.

There are other items which are continuing, to which I have not referred. The veterans' unemployment compensation, of course, is being enjoyed by all veterans who do not find suitable employment for the 52 weeks after their discharge, and that is a considerable daily and monthly item.

I have made no reference to the Pay Adjustment Act, which has already passed the Congress and which, of course, affects officers as well as the enlisted personnel. That itself will add several additional billions of dollars, perhaps, to the figures which I have given here today.

I am bringing these facts before the Senate and before the country because there are influences which apparently are endeavoring to persuade the veterans that Congress has not met its obligation to the veteran, and has been unwilling to display toward the veteran the generosity of a great country.

I am doing it for another purpose, however. Fifteen million men and women were enlisted in the armed services during World War II. Those 15,000,000 men and women constitute, for tomorrow, fully one-half of all the taxpayers of the United States. So what we are doing here is to provide benefits for the veteran sometimes without any scrutiny or without much thought, and at the same time passing to him a bill which he must meet as the taxpayer of tomorrow.

There were about 50,000,000 taxpayers, in round numbers, on our Federal tax rolls before the passage of the last tax act. That act removed entirely from the rolls 12,000,000 taxpayers in the lowest brackets. So it can be seen about how many taxpayers there are now on the rolls. The 15,000,000 men and women who were called into the armed services will next year and the year after that become the great taxpaying group in the United States, and they will pay the bill which the Congress is now placing upon their shoulders.

We are overgenerous, perhaps, or at least we are fully generous, especially when we consider that the veteran himself is going to pay a great part of the money which we are expending for his benefit, because every dime of it is borrowed money. It is true we are raising about $40,000,000,000 in tax revenues at the present time, under existing law, which is a pretty heavy burden on the American people, but that is not adequate to meet the current costs of government, including such part of the costs, of course, as include veteran benefits.

There will be a deficit for the next fiscal year, so we are borrowing money. We can do the veteran a great service by saying to him frankly, "This debt is being passed on to you, and the real interest of the veteran, along with every other American citizen, is in having an economy under which men can live and prosper."

Mr. President, I make these observations, not in opposition to the particular bill now pending, because it does contain many elements of justice, but I make the observations for the purpose of indicating to the veterans that Congress has not been remiss in meeting their problems, and that at least we here are fully conscious of the fact that the benefits we are giving to the veteran now are simply deferred obligations which he will have to bear in the future.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BALL] which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 18, between lines 7 and 8, it is proposed to add a new subsection, as follows:

(d) In the settlement and compensation for leave under this section, there shall be deducted from the amount found to be due the member of the armed forces or his survivors under section 5, the amount of any mustering-out payment which has been paid or is payable in the case of such member under the provisions of the Mustering-Out Payment Act of 1944, as amended.

Mr. LANGER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. Not knowing how he would vote, I transfer that pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS]. I am not advised how the Senator from Missouri would vote on this question if present. Being at liberty to vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOSSETT] are absent because of illness.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] is unavoidably detained. If present, he would vote "nay."

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND], and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART] are detained on public business.

If present and voting, the Senator from Tennessee would vote "nay."

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] is attending a meeting of the Maryland Democratic State Convention, and is therefore necessarily absent.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are absent on official business, having been appointed to the commission on the part of the Senate to participate in the Philippine independence ceremonies.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] is absent on official business, being a member of the commission appointed to attend the Philippine independence ceremonies.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business as a member of the Special Committee on Atomic Energy.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] is necessarily absent. He has a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS].

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] is necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 67, as follows:

YEAS—12

So Mr. BALL's amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Swanson, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 371) extending the effective period of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended.

TERMINAL LEAVE FOR ENLISTED PERSONNEL OF THE ARMED FORCES

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 4951) to grant to enlisted personnel of the armed forces certain benefits in lieu of accumulated leave.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I call up the amendment, which I previously offered and temporarily withdrew.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. —. Nothing in sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code (U. S. C., title 18, secs. 198 and 203) or in section 190 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 99) shall be deemed to prevent any person (other than a member of the regular component of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard) on terminal leave from the armed forces from acting as counsel, agent, or attorney (1) in any matter or thing in which the United States is a party or directly or indirectly interested or (2) for prosecuting any claim against the United States: Provided, That such person shall not prosecute any claim against the United States, or act as counsel, agent, or attorney in any matter in which the United States is a party or has an interest, involving any subject matter with which such person was directly connected during the period of his service and prior to entering upon terminal leave.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. There is no objection to the amendment as now stated.

Mr. McCLELLAN. If the Senator will pardon me, I have not yet asked to modify the amendment. I wish to modify my amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I wish to withdraw my statement then. However, I have no objection to the amendment as I know the Senator proposes to modify it.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I thank the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. President, I ask to modify the amendment as offered by striking out, beginning in line 2 with the word "or" through line 3 and line 4 to the close of parenthesis, and to strike out the word "for" in line 9, and insert in lieu thereof the word "from."

Mr. President, as the amendment is modified or perfected it eliminates the objection that was raised to it in its original form, and I believe the modifications are proper. I ask that the amendment, as modified, be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the modified amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. McCLELLAN].

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I had printed another amendment——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. BALL. No, Mr. President, I am not calling it up. The amendment would extend the benefits of this terminal-leave pay for enlisted men to the living veterans of World War I. It seems to me no more wrong in principle to make it retroactive to World War I than to go back to 1939. I did not propose the amendment seriously. I would not want to offer it now. I am a little afraid that if I did it might be adopted and make the bill worse than it is.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add the following new section:

SEC. 9. That for all purposes of this section the term "prisoner of war" shall include each officer and nurse and enlisted person of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard, and of the Reserve components thereof, whether living or deceased, who, by reason of his or her capture by an enemy, escape or evasion from an enemy, or, because of his or her being in an internee status, is, was, or may be separated from the jurisdiction of the United States at any time after December 7, 1941, and prior to August 16, 1945.

(a) Prisoners of war shall be promoted in accordance with regulations prescribed by the President. Promotions of prisoners of war may be made without regard for the needs of the service.

(b) Any increases of pay and allowances to which prisoners of war may become or have become entitled by reason of promotion pursuant to this section or otherwise, shall be held and considered to have accrued retroactively to the credit of and to be payable to the prisoners of war beginning on the date prescribed by the President in each case. Each appointment or entry in service records issued or made under this section shall indicate the effective date thereof for purposes of pay and allowances.

(c) Nothing within this Section shall be construed as preventing the promotion of any person pursuant to other provisions of law as reducing the pay or allowances to which any person may be entitled under other provisions of law, or as authorizing the promotion of officers to ranks above those of captain in the Navy or Coast Guard or colonel in the Army or Marine Corps.

(d) Each enlisted person and nurse not entitled to a subsistence allowance at the time he or she became a prisoner of war shall be credited with a subsistence allowance at the rate of 70 cents per day during such period as he or she was a prisoner of war and not otherwise entitled to be credited with a subsistence allowance.

(e) Within the scope of the authority granted by this section, the determination by the President, or by such person as he may designate, of the date of termination of a prisoner of war status in any case shall be final and conclusive.

(f) The appropriations for pay and allowances of personnel of the services concerned currently available at the time payment is made shall be available for the payment of all sums which accrue by reason of the retroactive provisions of this section.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, this amendment is essentially the same as a bill which passed both Houses and was vetoed by the President. That bill, Senate bill 1805, referred only to the Navy, the Coast Guard, and the Marine Corps. One of the reasons which the President gave in his message for his veto was that it did not apply to the Army. That has been changed, and the amendment as now offered includes all the armed forces.

This section is very largely in the interest of the enlisted man. The provision with respect to a subsistence allowance of 70 cents a day applies only to enlisted men, and that feature constitutes the larger part of the cost which would be involved in reimbursing the men who were starved in prison camps, particularly those who spent 3½ years in Japanese prison camps, at a cost to the Japanese of about 1 cent a day.

The promotion feature, which is the other objection which the President had to the bill, also largely concerns enlisted men rather than officers. So far as the Navy and Marine Corps are concerned, what is possible or just has, in the main, already been accomplished. There are a number of cases in which, under the law, the Navy Department was unable to do what it really thought should be done in the way of promotions. The case is quite similar as regards the Army.

The President stated that his third objection was the indefiniteness of the bill. That part of the amendment which reads "shall be promoted in accordance with regulations prescribed by the President" puts the administration directly in the hands of the President. My own study of the subject, and that of both the House and Senate Committees on Naval Affairs, led to the conclusion that a law which would cover all cases would be extremely intricate and quite likely would be wholly impracticable. Therefore I thought that the best way would be to put it entirely in the hands of the President. He will be enabled to write regulations to cover the great variety of cases which may arise.

To my mind the men who are still with us who suffered most in this war are the prisoners, particularly those who were captured early in the war and who endured 3½ years in Japanese prison camps. The casualties were high. Those who came back have not all recovered.

The President stated in his veto message that one of his objections was the uncertainty as to cost. I have no over-all estimate which I can submit to the Senate. However, I obtained figures from the Navy Department which were to the effect that the cost in the case of naval prisoners alone would be between $5,000,000 and $10,000,000. If Army prisoners are included, the cost will be considerably more. Of course, many more Army personnel than naval personnel were captured. The highest costs will be involved in the cases of those who were captured early in the war. It is entirely certain that if this amendment is accepted the difference in the total cost involved in the bill will be a very small fraction of 1 percent.

I hope the amendment will be accepted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I sincerely hope that this amendment will be rejected, not particularly on its merits. If this proposal were to come before us in the proper way, in the form of a bill, I would support it. However, it seems to me that it is not fair to the pending legislation to bring in an amendment of this kind at the last minute, in the form of a rider consisting of a bill which the President vetoed only recently.

The Senator from Connecticut is one of the very valuable members of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs. He was present at the hearings. He was present when officers of the Navy appeared before the committee, and he heard their testimony in regard to this bill. But, so far as I am concerned, this is the first time that I have heard anything about his proposed amendment. I do not think that is the proper way to legislate. I am not criticizing the Senator. He has the right to do as he sees fit. If he were not a member of the committee, if he had not been invited to participate in framing the bill which we reported, and if he had not had a full opportunity to advocate before the committee the amendment which he is bringing before us now, the case might be different. As I say, if his proposal were brought before the Senate in the form of a bill—and it is really a bill—instead of as a rider, I think I would support it, because I believe it has merit.

But we are in the closing hours of the session. There may not be time for conferences to consider all the points which should be considered. If I were sure that we could have time for full consideration of the amendment in conference, I would not object to taking this rider to conference. It is not germane to the pending measure. I would not object to taking it to conference and trying to reach an agreement if we had time; but that is not the situation facing us. So I earnestly hope that the Senate will reject the amendment which has just been offered.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, I am well aware that the Senator from Colorado is not charging me with unfairness; but I invite his attention to the fact that there was before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs a bill introduced by the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] in the interest of the Army. That bill was quite similar to the bill applying to the Navy which passed both Houses. The Military Affairs Committee of the Senate never had time to consider that bill, and although I mentioned it in the committee, it was never taken up. A companion bill which was passed went through the Naval Affairs Committees of both Houses, and consequently did not automatically come before the committee of which the Senator is a member.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, at this stage of the pending bill I hope that the amendment will not be agreed to by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HART]. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The CHIEF CLERK called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Brewster	Byrd
Andrews	Brooks	Capper
Ball	Buck	Carville
Barkley	Burch	Chavez
Bilbo	Bushfield	Connally
Cordon	La Follette	Russell
Donnell	Langer	Shipstead

Hoey	Myers	White
Huffman	O'Daniel	Wiley
Johnson, Colo.	Overton	Willis
Johnston, S. C.	Pepper	Wilson
Kilgore	Revercomb	Young
Knowland	Robertson

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HART].

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, for the benefit of the few Senators who were not in the Chamber a few minutes ago, let me say that this amendment is in all respects similar to a bill which passed both Houses of Congress and was vetoed by the President. It is in the interest of the prisoners of war, somewhat as regards their retroactive promotions and somewhat as regards money. I do not know the total cost of it. I had a fairly good estimate of the cost as regards the Navy prisoners. That would have been between $5,000,000 and $10,000,000. In any case, I think the cost is an extremely small percentage of what is likely to be the total cost of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, inasmuch as additional Senators have entered the Chamber since I made my statement a moment ago, I wish to repeat something I have already said.

If Senators wish to kill the pending legislation, the adoption of this amendment is an easy way to do it. It will be rather a bloodless way of killing the bill. It will not involve the use of a dagger to stab it in the back or to cut its throat visibly; but this amendment, if adopted, will be a neat, nice little way to kill the legislation. If Senators wish to do that, very well. The President has already vetoed the corresponding measure. I do not think it is proper to bring it in at this time and attach it as a rider to the bill.

If the proposal were before the Senate on its own merits, it would have my support. But coming as it does, I cannot regard it as anything else but a mischievous amendment. I hope it will be rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HART]. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], who, if present, would vote "yea." I transfer that pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS]. I am not advised how the Senator from Missouri would vote on this question if present. Being at liberty to vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. WAGNER. I have a general pair with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED]. Not knowing how he would vote, I transfer that pair to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOSSETT]. I am not advised how the Senator from Idaho would vote on this question if present. Being at liberty to vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOSSETT] are absent because of illness.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND], and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART] are detained on public business.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] is attending a meeting of the Maryland Democratic State Convention, and is therefore necessarily absent.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are absent on official business, having been appointed to the commission on the part of the Senate to participate in the Philippine independence ceremonies.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] is necessarily absent. He has a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]. If present, the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "yea."

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] is unavoidably detained. He has a general pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] is absent on official business, being a member of the commission appointed to attend the Philippine independence ceremonies.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business as a member of the Special Committee on Atomic Energy.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 44, as follows:

So Mr. HART'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment and address myself briefly to it. On page 15, in line 5, after the words "shall be", I offer to amend by striking out "nonnegotiable and shall not be transferable for sale, exchange, assignment, pledge, hypothecation, or otherwise" and insert "negotiable." The language, beginning in line 5, would then read: "Such bonds shall be negotiable."

Mr. President, if that amendment is clear in its effect, I wish to address myself briefly to it.

Senators will recall, of course, that the essential difference between the bill in the form in which it was reported by the Senate committee, and the form in which it was passed by the House, is that the House version provided for cash payments to veterans in the form of terminal-leave benefits, while the Senate committee version provides that payments shall be made only in nonnegotiable bonds payable in 5 years. The language which I propose to strike out would limit the bonds strictly to nonnegotiable bonds, as provided in the following language:

> Such bonds shall be nonnegotiable and shall not be transferable by sale, exchange, assignment, pledge, hypothecation, or otherwise.

Mr. President, that language means, in the first place, that while we say that enlisted men who would be beneficiaries under the bill have a right to the benefits which have been described, yet, we also say that they may not enjoy those rights or benefits for 5 years, either directly or indirectly. Many of the boys who would benefit from this bill will be dead within 5 years, and will never be able personally to enjoy the benefits which the Senate is seeking to provide for them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I am glad to yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The fact is that under the present provisions of the bill, if a veteran dies his benefits will be immediately payable to his family.

Mr. PEPPER. That is true, but if he dies he personally will not be able to enjoy the benefit which the Congress is endeavoring to provide for him.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Any benefits which are to be provided under the bill should go to the veteran and not to his heirs.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator is entirely correct. After all, as the able Senator from New Mexico has suggested, it is the veteran who won the war.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The theory of providing assistance under the bill is that veterans may be benefited personally.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. CHAVEZ. What good would the benefits provided by the bill do the veteran after he had died?

Mr. PEPPER. They would, of course, do him no good whatever.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The veteran needs the money now.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes; he does.

Mr. President, one of the principal reasons why we are endeavoring to provide these benefits is to bring the enlisted men up to an equality with officers in the benefits which they have already received, not in 5-year nonnegotiable bonds, but in cash. Yet, according to the present language of the bill now pending before the Senate we are saying to those boys, "We will not give you what the officers received in cash; we will give you in principal the equivalent of what they received, and it will be in the form of 5-year nonnegotiable Government bonds."

Mr. President, I am not one of those who believe that the American veteran needs a guardian. He was not accompanied by a guardian into the jungles, into the depths of the sea, or into the upper reaches of the air. Yet, he went forth to battle for his country in order to save democracy for mankind.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. It seems to me that another argument which could be advanced is that the enlisted man is not being treated, under the pending bill, in the way that officers were treated. The officers received cash.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes; and the enlisted man would receive a 5-year bond. He would not be able to take the bond to a bank and pledge it, or hypothecate it as security, or discount it. No matter how great his emergency might be, he would not be able to use the bond for collateral.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. If the Senator really wants to place cash in the hands of the veteran, or wants to place the veteran in a position where he can obtain cash in the event that he needs it, why not make the bond the same as the Government bonds which the Senator may hold or which I may hold? The Senator says that the veteran does not need a guardian. I do not believe that the veteran needs a guardian, but during the war we learned from the Federal Reserve System that our bonds were the same as cash. Under that theory, the holder of any savings bond today can go to the Treasury and receive the amount of money he paid for the bond, plus accrued interest. If the Senator really wants to help the veteran in obtaining cash, I suggest that instead of making the bond negotiable so the veteran could then be made the victim of some broker in bonds, the language of the bill should be made such that the veteran would be in position, if necessary, to go to the Treasury and get cash for his bond. If the Senator wants cash to be delivered to the veteran at the veteran's election, then the veteran should be allowed to go to the Treasury, just as the Senator or I am allowed to go to the Treasury at the present time and receive cash for any Government bonds which we may hold.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator and I thank him very much. But allow me to say that I had to be out of the city until 1 o'clock today and was not able to be present earlier. I have been trying to figure out the best method by which to accomplish what several of us had in mind, namely, to give veterans the right to obtain their money if they wanted it and needed it. The first thought which came to my mind was that the Senate should provide the same as the House provided, namely, that veterans should be entitled to receive their benefits in a lump sum. The next thought which came to my mind was to give them an option to take cash, or in lieu thereof, the kind of bonds provided for in the Senate amendment, whichever they choose. Yet I knew that if, on the one hand, they were offered cash and, on the other hand, a 5-year negotiable bond, they would in all probability take the cash. So when the matter was proceeding to a conclusion, in order to achieve what some of us had in mind I thought of the amendment which I have proposed, namely, to strike out the language to which I have referred and make the bonds negotiable. However, I will gladly accept an amendment by the Senator from Utah. I would prefer somewhat having the veteran go to the Treasury and there receive his cash if he needed it. I want him to be in position to obtain the money if he needs it. If the Senator from Utah will suggest the proper language through an amendment, or a modification of my amendment, I shall gladly accept it.

Mr. MURDOCK. I had the same thought in mind as that which the Senator from Florida has expressed. I took the matter up with the distinguished Senator from Colorado, and other Senators. We must remember that when we give the veteran a dollar we do not want to destroy the dollar he already has, nor depreciate too much the dollar which he may receive as compensation under this bill. The committee looked into the matter very thoroughly. If we add $2,000,000,000, $3,000,000,000, or $4,000,000,000 to the present volume of money which already is in circulation, we will run a very serious chance, in my opinion, of destroying the value of the bonds which the veteran already owns. We may tell him that we are giving him a dollar, but it must be remembered that if inflation overtakes us, instead of giving him a dollar it may turn out to be only half a dollar, or only a quarter.

So I hope the Senator will think very seriously with regard to the question of whether it might not be wise at the present time to do what the committee has suggested. In the event of unemployment, or in the event of a depression when we will all, perhaps, need financial assistance, the Congress can very readily make the bonds negotiable at the Treasury. I believe that the committee has perhaps selected the wisest course which we could take. However, I certainly wish to emphasize that if the Senator insists on making the bonds negotiable, they should be negotiable at the Treasury of the United States for their face amount plus any accrued interest. If we do it any other way, if we make them negotiable, I predict that instead of the veterans getting benefit under the bill, bond brokers will get it.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah suggest how he thinks the language should be drafted?

Mr. MURDOCK. I really have not drawn any language, but I know that every one of us who has Government bonds can walk down to the Treasury and get cash. It may be well to make the bonds negotiable, but I think that one of the most forward steps we took in financing the war was to say to the people of the United States, "When you buy a Government bond, and the time comes when you want to obtain cash for it, you can take it to your own Treasury and cash it for the exact amount you paid for it, plus the interest." But when we make Government bonds negotiable, and make them subject to traffic and trade by the expert brokers, we do not do a service to the veteran, we do a disservice to him.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President——

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator from Utah very much, and after I yield to the Senator from North Dakota, I shall modify my amendment to embody the suggestion of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I took the matter up on the floor, in the absence of the Senator from Florida, with the distinguished Senator in charge of the bill, and was advised by him that the language now contained in the bill was inserted at the request of the American Legion and various other veterans' organizations. The Senator was not in the Chamber at the time.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Will the Senator from Florida yield for a minor correction?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Senator in charge of the bill did not say it was inserted at the request of the American Legion. It was inserted at the request of the Treasury and the Bureau of the Budget. They took it up with the veterans' organizations, the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the DAV, and I do not know what other veterans' organizations, and it met with their entire approval.

I do not know whether the Senator wants to run the risk of losing the hoped for benefits by insisting on cash payments. If he does, of course, that is his privilege. I will say to the Senator that the bill as it came from the House provided for cash payments.

Mr. PEPPER. And it passed the House unanimously, did it not?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Bureau of the Budget and the Treasury, and, as I understand, the President himself, strenuously objected to that because of its inflationary aspect, and they suggested the system of payment found in the bill as reported by the Senate committee, so that the burden on the Treasury would be staggered, that is, that the payments would be made month by month over a period of time, and would not be so inflationary. At the present time if the veteran should be paid in cash, there are few goods on the shelves which he can buy, the supply of money is great, and the supply of goods is small. It is hoped production will get under way soon, and that in a few months, or a very short time, at least, there will be goods to purchase, and the dollar will return to its normal value. If the veteran does not spend his money now, but holds in reserve what he receives, when the goods come on the shelves he can buy them. If the benefits provided by the bill are paid in cash now, he is going to compete with everybody else who is trying to buy, and, of course, prices will rise.

I am sure the Senator from Florida will agree that we cannot dump $3,000,000,000 into the economy of this country and not have inflation immediately. The Senator knows that this money would be paid out in small amounts all over the country. There would be immediately a buying demand, and the money would be converted into purchases almost overnight. That will do something to an economy which is already staggering under the load of undersupply and overdemand.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, let me modify my amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to say a word in connection with what the Senator from Colorado has said?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. Under the bill all the smaller payments are made in cash, and the privilege is accorded anyone who wishes to be paid in cash. It is a privilege for those who have obligations otherwise to have them paid in cash. A good portion of the money paid out in the next few years will be paid in cash, because of provisions already made in the bill.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I am sorry to disagree with the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from South Carolina. Now that the soldier is out of the Army, some appear to be worrying about inflation in figuring benefits to the veterans. Did any Senator worry about inflation when the officer was getting terminal leave? Who wants to receive a benefit after he is dead? We were all for the soldier when he was on the battlefield. If we are to do something for him, let us do it while he is alive. How many thousands will be dead 5 years from now, and what are they to get? Nothing but worry about inflation by the United States Senate? There are many ways to stop inflation. One of them is to set up a good OPA, but the Senate though differently. Now Senators are worried about the benefits the poor soldier is going to get. We were singing his praises just a few months ago, and we said nothing about the officer receiving terminal pay. I think it is unfair and unjust to give the officer pay for his terminal leave, and to say to the soldier, "You might be alive 5 years from now, and if you are, you will get it."

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, in fairness to the Committee on Military Affairs, and to those who serve on the committee, let me say that this is not a terminal leave pay bill for soldiers. A large proportion, probably the largest part, will go to officers, because the largest proportion of the officers, second lieutenants, first lieutenants and captains, all of whom were privates in some instances, will receive their terminal pay as enlisted men through the bill. I merely want to keep the record straight, and I know the Senator from New Mexico and I both want to do everything for the privates, but this is not a privates' bill. A large number of the beneficiaries will be officers, who are awaiting the passage of the bill.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Why should the colonel and the major get terminal leave, and not the second lieutenant? If the second lieutenant gets some benefit under the bill, it is about time he was getting something.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I wish to modify my amendment in the following respect, to strike out, as I said, "Such bonds shall be nonnegotiable and shall not be transferable by sale, exchange, assignment, pledge, hypothecation, or otherwise", and insert in lieu thereof, "Such bonds shall be subject to liquidation by the Government of the United States in the same manner as War Saving bonds of World War II."

Mr. President, does that meet the objection the Senator from Utah had in mind?

Mr. MURDOCK. I have conferred with our legislative counsel, and they suggest that the proper way to reach what the Senator has in mind is to insert a comma after the word "thereof" in line 25, page 14, in lieu of the period, and the words, "but shall be redeemable for the face value, plus accrued interest, at any time prior to maturity."

Mr. PEPPER. And then strike out——

Mr. MURDOCK. No; leave the language on page 15, lines 5 and 6, exactly as it is.

Mr. PEPPER. Will not the Senator read the suggestion again? I hope Senators interested will listen to the language so that they will see what the effect would be.

Mr. MURDOCK. The proposed amendment is on page 14, line 25, after the word "thereof," to strike out the period and insert a comma and the words, "but shall be redeemable for the face value, plus accrued interest, at any time prior to maturity."

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, if I may have the indulgence of the Chair to modify my amendment further, I withdraw the amendment as I have stated it and offer the amendment in the language just given by the Senator from Utah at the place indicated on page 14. I will ask the clerk to state the amendment as it is now offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 14, line 25, after the word "thereof", it is proposed to strike out the period and insert a comma and the words "but shall be redeemable for the face value, plus accrued interest, at any time prior to maturity."

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, relative to the suggestion made by the Senator from Utah—which I understand the Senator from Florida is accepting——

Mr. PEPPER. That is correct.

Mr. KNOWLAND. It seems to me that there is a direct conflict there, because, as I understand it, the language will be: "Each such bond shall mature 5 years from the date thereof," or such sooner date, and then we go to the next sentence, which provides: "The bonds issued under this act shall be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury—subject to the provisions of the Second Liberty Bond Act," and the next sentence provides: "Such bonds shall be nonnegotiable and shall not be transferable by sale, exchange, assignment, pledge, hypothecation, or otherwise."

Mr. PEPPER. No. In the first place, the Senator no doubt heard the able Senator from Utah say that the legislative counsel of the Senate said that to accomplish the purpose we have in mind it was not necessary to strike out the last part of the language just read. The prohibition which the Senator has just read would limit the holder of the bond in respect to transfer to another person, but under the language I have just inserted in the bill at the suggestion of the Senator from Utah, the holder would have the right to go to the Treasury and get his money from the Treasury at any time he chose to do so.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. I suggested to the legislative counsel the same question which the able Senator from California has suggested, and they say that the language on page 15 deals with an entirely different question, and that if the bonds are made redeemable in the language they have suggested, then the language on page 15 should remain as it is.

Mr. PEPPER. Very well. Now, Mr. President, we have a clear-cut issue before the Senate. Does the Senate believe that the holders of these bonds should have the right which the holders of other war bonds have, to cash them in when they decide to use the money? We have been issuing war bonds all through the war to the American people, and we have left it up to the people to determine whether they would cash in those bonds. If they had chosen to do so they could have cashed in every one of them. They have not chosen to do so. But many people have cashed in their bonds because they had to do so.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The privilege of cashing these bonds is limited somewhat in the case of E and F bonds.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes; that is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. E bonds are redeemable at the end of 60 days I believe, and F series bonds are redeemable at the end of 6 months.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is that difference between the bonds we have bought and the bonds which would be issued under the Senator's amendment. He would made them redeemable at once.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to modify the amendment again, and insert the words "three months," limiting it still further so a man could not cash the bonds for 3 months. I am willing to provide that at any time following a date 3 months after the issuance of the bonds they may be cashed by the holder thereof, the serviceman.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. I am wondering if it would not be better to make the period 6 months? That would allow at least 3 additional months in which to get production back to normal. In my opinion if the payment can be delayed 6 months instead of 3 months, then certainly we could be farther away from inflation. I suggest that the Senator make the period 6 months.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator from Utah. I should like to modify the amendment again, and make the date when redemption is possible a period six months after the receipt of the bonds by the service man or woman, a member of the armed services, as defined in the bill.

Mr. President, that brings up the suggestion made by the able leader. These bonds would then be subject to redemption in the same way as to bonds owned by the American public, and we would have the same protection that the veterans would not all cash their bonds at one time, that we had that the American people would not cash their bonds all at one time, and have not done so as a matter of practical experience.

Mr. President, Senators have talked about inflation, and I know they have done so sincerely and very earnestly. None of us want inflation, and I think I have tried in my voting on price control and measures of that kind about as hard as any other Senator to prevent a dangerous inflation. But the Senator from New Mexico was absolutely correct in saying that in connection with an OPA measure which proposed to confer upon a few of the people billions of dollars which were to be taken from the masses, some Senators were not too excited about inflation.

The estimate as to the cost of this bill, according to the testimony of Mr. John L. Sullivan, Under Secretary of the Navy, which is carried in the committee report, is about $2,750,000,000. At the outside I think the estimate is that the measure would cost not over $3,000,000,000. The OPA bill, even as it is now brought out, according to the OPA, will cost the American people a good deal more than $4,000,000,000. Yet it looks like Congress is going to have to take that bill if it is to get any price control at all. I am not willing to add to the profits of the corporations of this country, that generally are already making large profits. I am not willing to enrich the man who is already rich, at the expense of the masses of the people and then deny to the veterans who won this war for us the right to redeem their bonds the way other bondholders can redeem theirs, if they think they need the money and they wish to redeem the bonds they hold.

Mr. President, I want to tell the Senate, if I may, who these veterans are. Nine hundred and some odd thousand are GI's in school. I got those figures from the Veterans' Administration a few days ago. So, nearly 1,000,000 of them are in school. Senators know how much they are receiving. They are receiving $65 a month if they are single and $90 a month if they have dependents. Case after case has come to my personal attention of boys who are taking advantage of the GI Bill of Rights who have said that it looks like they will have to drop out because they do not have sufficient money to stay in school. The increased cost of living has shrunk their $65 in case they are single, and their $90 in case they have dependents, to the point where that is not enough money to keep them, or in case of dependents, to keep them and their dependents, and continue in school.

Mr. President, those boys can stay in school longer if they are able to redeem these bonds, and hundreds of thousands of them will use their bonds so that they may be enabled to stay in school. Yet if my amendment, or some similar amendment, is not adopted by the Senate, not a single boy will be able to get a dollar out of this bill to help him stay in school during the next 5 years. Do we want to deprive a boy or a young lady of the right to stay in school with the terminal leave money which he or she may obtain?

Mr. President, if I may say so, I never have believed that inflation came from increasing the wage of the worker who was at the bottom of the economic ladder. I do not believe we will have appreciable inflation by making it possible, after 6 months have elapsed from the time they receive their bonds, for the GI's to redeem their bonds in the United States Government in whole or in part.

It will be remembered that these bonds are in denominations of $25. I dare say, the veterans are not going to dump all their bonds in at the window of the post office on the day they are eligible to be redeemed. They will feed these bonds into the Treasury as they are obliged to have the money. There may be sickness in a man's family. Here he has bonds of some hundred dollars or a few thousand dollars in his box somewhere, but he cannot legally borrow a dime on them. He could not pay a doctor's bill, he could not buy a pound of groceries, he could not contribute to his child's education, he could not buy a home, he could not do anything at all until 5 years have elapsed, unless the bill as reported by our able committee is amended.

Mr. President, I said that nearly 1,000,000 GI's are in school under the GI bill. More than 1,000,000 are now receiving unemployment compensation benefits. There are a million GI's out of jobs in the United States today, and they are being paid by the Federal Government the money on which they live. We know that that payment in no case is in excess of $80 a month. How can a veteran, who has a wife and children and no job, live on $80 a month, with inflation facing him from day to day as we have let it come to grips. Yet, Mr. President, the Senate would say to that veteran, "We are proud of your service to your country during this war. We are going to give you your terminal leave because primarily you privates did not get your leave as the officers did. Yet, although you have a bond in your box which is worth several hundred dollars or two or three thousand dollars, and although you do not have a job, we are not going to let you receive a penny's worth of pecuniary benefit out of that bond for a period of 5 years." What do Senators think that veteran would say to us if we would make him a proposal of that kind?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I know what the veteran would say. He would say, "Well, that is not according to the bill that you had before you in the Senate." There are no thousand dollar amounts available under the bill. In the second place, the bonds are predated, that is, they are dated back. Some of them will be payable in 1948. So the veteran would say, "Well, that kind of argument does not click with me, because it is not the way the situation is at all." That is what he would say.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, if I may ask the Senator who is handling the bill, just what are the provisions of the bill? The one who will be paid in 1948 is the one who was discharged in 1943.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct.

Mr. PEPPER. The veterans will know how many were discharged as early as 1943. I venture to suggest that the majority of the servicemen have been discharged since 1943. Would the Senator agree with that?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I would say that a good many of them were discharged before 1943.

Mr. PEPPER. Would the Senator say that a majority of the servicemen were discharged before 1943 or since 1943?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I would say that more have been discharged since 1943 than were discharged before 1943. A great many of them have been discharged since the beginning of the war, and that is one of the merits of the measure, as the Bureau of the Budget looks upon it. The Senator must recognize that a measure such as this places a tremendous burden upon the Treasury. I am surprised that he has not more consideration for the Budget and for the Treasury than he has exemplified in asking that the bill be amended at this time. The Committee on Military Affairs, did not write in the bond provision on its own initiative. We were asked to do it by the administration. In my opinion—and it is only my opinion—unless the bill contains this bond provision, I do not believe it will be approved. So if the Senator wishes to run the risk of destroying this legislation, of course that is his privilege.

Mr. PEPPER. Let me clarify one further point. What are the maximum benefits, in terms of dollars, that the Senator would estimate any veteran would receive under this bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. One hundred and twenty days is the maximum time for which he can be paid. A first sergeant probably would receive the maximum amount. He would receive pay for 120 days plus 70 days, and if he had dependents he would receive $1.25 a day for housing.

Mr. PEPPER. What would be the maximum amount which the Senator would expect anyone to receive?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The average amount would be between $200 and $300. It would not run into the thousands.

Mr. PEPPER. What would be the maximum amount which any one would receive?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I should say $500 or less; and only a very few would receive that much.

Mr. PEPPER. A maximum of $500, and an average of $200 or $300.

Mr JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. I understood the Senator from Florida to say that the bonds are to be issued in denominations of $25. Is that a correct statement?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is not quite correct.

Mr. PEPPER. I was referring to lines 15 and 16 on page 14. The language there is "bonds of the United States to the highest multiple of $25." But perhaps the payment was intended to be in one lump sum.

Mr. DONNELL. The report of the committee states:

> In all other cases such payments will be made in bonds issued by the Secretary of the Treasury. The bonds will be issued in multiples of $25, with any remainder being paid in cash.

If I may address myself to the Senator from Colorado, if a man had a claim of $208.50, I take it the committee report indicates that he would receive a $200 bond and $8.50 in cash. Is that correct?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct.

Mr. DONNELL. He would not receive eight $25 bonds and $8.50 in cash?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. He would probably receive one bond of $200.

Mr. DONNELL. I understood that to be the meaning of the report, rather than that he would receive eight bonds of $25 each.

Mr. PEPPER. I am glad to have that point clarified. The bill was drawn in that way when it was contemplated that there could be no redemption of the bonds until 5 years had elapsed, and that they would all be redeemed at the end of that time. I will not take the time of the Senate on that point, but it would be an easy matter, if the amendment were adopted, for the conferees to provide that the bonds should be issued in $25 denominations, so that the holder could cash a part of his bonds without cashing all of them, in the same way that a holder of War Savings bonds can cash a part of his bonds without cashing all of them. It would be within the realm of the conferees, in view of the fact that the House provided for a cash payment and the Senate committee provided some other form of payment, to provide that the bonds should be in smaller denominations.

Mr. DONNELL. I agree with the statement that it would be within the power of the conferees, but as I see it the language now contained in the bill does not contemplate the issuance of bonds solely in denominations of $25.

Mr. PEPPER. I accept the interpretation of the able Senator from Colorado that the bill contemplates that the amount due the veteran will be paid to the nearest $25 multiple, in one bond, but again I emphasize that the conferees could provide for payment in denominations of $25.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me so that I may ask the Senator from Colorado a question?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I was interested in the remark which the Senator from Colorado made to the Senator from Florida, which I interpreted to mean that the Senator from Colorado has cause to believe that if we should pass the bill in the form in which it came from the committee the President would sign it, but that if we were to pass the bill in the form suggested by the Senator from Florida there is a possibility that the President would not sign it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I can only give the Senator my own opinion. That is my opinion. If the bill is amended as suggested by the Senator from Florida, it will not be acceptable. We might just as well pay cash. Why have bonds at all? It would be much simpler to pay the amount in cash, instead of preparing bonds. That only increases the work. We would not get any results from it. The reason for issuing bonds is to stagger the load on the Treasury, so that it will come in month by month over a period of 5 years.

Mr. MORSE. I wonder if the Senator from Colorado has had the same experience which the junior Senator from Oregon has had. I have received a great deal of mail from veterans who object to the nonnegotiability of the bonds, and who insist that payments ought to be in cash. Has the Senator from Colorado received a considerable quantity of such mail?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I did not quite understand the Senator's question.

Mr. MORSE. I am asking the Senator from Colorado if his mail from veterans indicates that a great many of them desire to have these amounts paid in cash rather than in nonnegotiable bonds.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I have had very little mail on the subject. The veterans' organizations, including the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Disabled American Veterans, and other veterans' organizations, have stated through their representatives that they prefer the plan which has been suggested by the Bureau of the Budget and by the Treasury. They believe that it is in the interest of the veteran. They believe that the dollar is at a low value today, and that as months go by and production comes in and goods appear on the shelves the dollars which we are giving to the veteran will be worth more. For that reason they say that they favor the plan proposed in the bill.

Mr. MORSE. I have received a great deal of mail to the effect that the veterans desire payments in cash; but I wished to satisfy myself that the Senator from Colorado, who is in charge of the bill, entertains the belief that unless we vote for the bill as it came from the committee we run the very serious risk of having no bill at all.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is my opinion.

Mr. MORSE. That means that each of us is in the position of having to make up his mind whether to vote for the bill as it is now written, in order to have a bill, or to vote for an amendment such as the Senator from Florida is offering, even though we might believe that such an amendment is to be preferred if we could get it and at the same time have the bill approved.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is my opinon. I arrived at that opinion after discussing the matter with Treasury officials and officials of the Bureau of the Budget. I am strongly of the opinion that if the bill goes to the President as it came from the House, or as the Senator from Florida is suggesting that it be amended, it will not be approved. By the way, the suggestion of the Senator from Florida would make a much worse bill than the bill as it came from the House, which provided for cash payments. The amendment of the Senator from Florida would make it a much more unacceptable bill. It is my opinion that if the bill goes to the White House in that form it runs a grave risk of being vetoed; and that if it is enacted in the form in which it is now before the Senate it will be acceptable to the President. The President has not told me what he would do about it.

Mr. MORSE. I may say to the Senator from Florida that I have two more questions which I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado. With his indulgence, I should like to ask them.

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado the following question: Is it his opinion that the risk is very great that the bill would be vetoed if it were sent to the White House containing the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida, based also upon newspaper stories, which I assume he has read, as has the junior Senator from Oregon, to the effect that either at a press conference or by way of a statement made somewhere else, the President indicated his opposition to legislation of this type which included within it a cash payment arrangement?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I have read such statements in the press; but the basis for my opinion is a conversation which I have had with Mr. Paul H. Appleby, Acting Director of the Bureau of the Budget, as well as something which he put in black and white in a letter to me dated July 8. I wish to read one short paragraph. It has been read previously, and it is in the RECORD. This is the closing paragraph of his letter:

> I have discussed with the President the provisions of H. R. 4051 and the amendatory provisions thereof as projected in the committee print of the bill. While such provisions would not be considered as being in accord with the program of the President, he would find acceptable a measure along the lines of the draft attached hereto.

The draft attached hereto to which he refers is the bill now before the Senate.

Mr. MORSE. The Senator from Colorado draws the conclusion, as does the junior Senator from Oregon, that the officials of the Bureau of the Budget and of the Treasury speak the administration policy with regard to this legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is my opinion. I will say to the Senator that the Bureau of the Budget and the Treasury Department are greatly concerned over cash payments in such vast amounts, widely distributed over the country. They are taking the matter very seriously, and they are very much opposed to such a measure because of its tendency toward inflation.

Mr. MORSE. One further question and I am through. Does the Senator from Colorado urge Members of the Senate to vote for the bill as it came from the committee because of his belief that if we should vote for a bill containing the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida such a bill would be vetoed, and if in the meantime the Congress had adjourned there would be no possibility whatever of obtaining any legislation until the Congress reconvenes, supposedly next January?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, the Senator has correctly stated the position of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. MORSE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, this is not the first time I have heard the threat of a Presidential veto mentioned in the Senate. I remember there was a threat of a Presidential veto when we had the Russell amendment offered to the minimum-wage bill. The President had recommended the minimum-wage bill, and the Russell amendment was offered, to provide that the parity base be changed. As I recall, the President sent to the able majority leader a letter advising that if the Senate passed the bill with that amendment in it, he would have to veto the bill. Yet the Senate passed the bill in that form, in aid of the farmers, with respect to the parity formula.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Will not the Senator from Florida admit that there is a vast difference between the situation with reference to the so-called Pace amendment and the situation with respect to the bill now before us? When that measure was before the Senate, we knew we were going to be in session for some months in the future. At the present time, as the distinguished Senator from Oregon has pointed out, we are probably within a week or even days of adjournment; and if we pass a bill which will not receive Presidential approval, after it is vetoed neither the Senate nor the House of Representatives will have an opportunity to pass the bill over the veto of the President, whereas we did have such an opportunity in connection with the Pace amendment.

So I think the distinguished Senator from Oregon has rendered a very useful service, because it seems to me that we are faced with a situation in which the enlisted personnel either will receive terminal-leave pay by the method proposed by the Military Affairs Committee or else they will not receive any at all.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator has asked that question. In reply, I say that there is a great difference between this amendment and the Russell amendment. The principal difference is that not even the farmers are entitled to receive what the veterans are entitled to enjoy. The second difference is that we do not have to go back home the middle of next week unless we choose to do so. But if the Congress wishes to tell the veterans that it will adjourn and will go home, leaving on the President's desk a terminal-leave bill undisposed of, and that the Congress will go home before the bill is returned to the Congress for its further consideration, let the Congress do that. The Congress has a right to do it, but it does not have to do it. I do not believe the Congress would do that. As a matter of fact, I doubt very seriously whether we shall get away from here at as early a date as the able majority leader has suggested, namely, the middle of next week.

So I do not think there is any practical reason why in this case we should deal any differently with a Presidential veto than we did in the other case.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask the Senator to permit me to make one more point, and then I shall yield.

I also doubt the accuracy of the comparison of the possibility of a veto of this bill with the threat of a Presidential veto of the OPA bill, the purpose of which was to take from the poorer Peters of this country to provide a profit for the richer Pauls, which is what it provided, for it would have added, as the OPA estimated, over $4,000,000,000 to the food bills of the housewives of America. The President indicated then that he would veto it, or at least it was quite generally known. Yet the Senate passed the OPA bill. The President did veto it, and we have stayed on here to try to work out something, after the bill was vetoed.

So, Mr. President, those are two recent instances in which the Senate has not been deterred from doing what it chose to do, merely because there was an intimation that the President might not agree with the action taken by the Senate.

I am sorry to have delayed yielding to the Senator from Kentucky, but I was quite anxious to complete my statement in regard to the comparison.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to propound an inquiry to the Senator from Florida, whose sincerity in this matter I do not question. Inasmuch as the bill follows the suggestion contained in the correspondence which has been referred to by the Senator from Colorado, and inasmuch as it states the views of the Treasury Department, the Bureau of the Budget, and, assumedly, the President, and inasmuch as the plan proposed in the bill seems to have been endorsed and approved by the organizations of veterans who speak for them here in Washington in respect to legislation, does not the Senator from Florida think that, regardless of any adjournment of Congress or any veto possibility, in view of those facts we can very well satisfy ourselves by supporting a proposal upon which all those elements have agreed?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I shall answer the able majority leader, because I know the seriousness with which he has asked the question. Let me answer it in this way: I do not recall when I have seen so much deference shown to the Treasury Department and the Bureau of the Budget as I see shown now that we are trying to give the GI's a few hundred dollars which they should have had earlier. I do not know when I have heard Senators place such great store on what the Bureau of the Budget and the Treasury Department tell us we should do. Time after time when lesser issues have been at stake, their views have been spurned by the Congress. So in connection with the present issue, I do not think we have to defer to the Bureau of the Budget or the Treasury Department, because, after all, although they are the executive and administrative agencies, we in Congress have the authority and the responsibility of enacting legislation. Although we take their opinions and value them and often observe them, I am not willing to let the Treasury Department or the Bureau of the Budget be my excuse for not doing what I believe to be partially fair to the GI's who served in the recent war.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not intend to lead the Senator from Florida into invidious comparison between our attitude toward the views of the Treasury Department or the Bureau of the Budget in regard to this matter and our attitude in regard to their views with respect to other matters. However, I do not think the Senator's answer was entirely responsive to my question. I propounded the question whether, not only in view of the position of the Treasury Department and the Bureau of the Budget, but also in view of the apparent concurrence of opinion of all the veterans' organizations which speak in Washington for the veterans, the Senator from Florida thought we might well be satisfied with the consensus of that opinion, which apparently has resulted in this bill.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I shall try to be more responsive in my answer to the able majority leader.

In the first place, I remember what the Treasury and the Bureau of the Budget said about paying the soldiers' bonus back in the 1930's. They said it would ruin the country if we paid the bonus. The Government did not pay it then. Subsequently there was a depression. But that instance was not the first time the Treasury Department and the Bureau of the Budget have been wrong.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield there, let me say that I happened to be a Member of the House of Representatives at that time. I voted for every bonus bill which was vetoed by any President, either Democratic or Republican, and I voted to pass them over the vetoes. When the Congress finally passed the bonus bill of 1932 or 1934 the Congress did not provide that the bonus should be paid in cash. We provided the bonus in the form of certificates, as I recall, which were to be given to the veterans on the basis of their length of service. The payments were not cash payments. They were extended over a period of years.

Mr. PEPPER. Were not those certificates redeemable, or was it not possible for the veterans to get some money on the certificates?

Mr. BARKLEY. As I recall, under some special circumstances the certificates might be redeemed. But aside from those special circumstances they were not redeemable until maturity.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes.

But what I am saying is that the Treasury and, I imagine, the Bureau of the Budget advised in the previous case that the bonus would be inflationary. But later a bonus bill was passed, and I do not believe the country sustained any great shock as a result.

Mr. BARKLEY. The attitude of the Treasury Department and of the Bureau of the Budget was wholly nonpartisan, because the bonus bills were vetoed by Presidents Coolidge, Hoover, and Roosevelt. We finally passed one over the veto of President Roosevelt, and I voted to do it.

Mr. PEPPER. That is what I am talking about. We finally passed the bill over the President's veto.

Mr. BARKLEY. But the point is that at that time we did not provide for cash payments.

Mr. PEPPER. The point is, Mr. President, that the Treasury Department was opposed to that step, but we finally passed the bonus bill, just the same.

Now, Mr. President, the President and some of the executive agencies of the Government have been shouting about the necessity for continuing the OPA. But the Congress has not paid much attention to that. This very week we shall vote on the question of having another OPA; and we shall vote for the conference report, if we are going to have any price control at all. In part, that proposal will enrich certain persons. I understand that one provision is that producers or manufacturers shall be guaranteed the prices they received for their goods in 1940, with all price increases since that time allowed for, without any regard to whether they need the price increases in order to make a profit in their individual businesses at this time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not care to discuss at this time the conference report on the OPA bill. I had hoped that we would be able to take it up this afternoon, but time is fleeting, and we shall not be able to consider that conference report today.

However, the Senator from Florida is not accurate in the statement he has made. On the other hand, I shall not go into that subject at this time. Tomorrow, when the conference report on the OPA is under consideration, I shall discuss what it provides.

Mr. PEPPER. Very well. I realize that national levels are taken into consideration in connection with that measure; but under the conference report someone will get more out of the OPA than he would have gotten under the original law, or else it never would have been amended. I think that is obvious.

Mr. President, I am talking about allowing within a few months $200 or $300 in cash to the men who fought the recent war. Now we are told that such a step will be inflationary, in fact, so inflationary, it is claimed, that we dare not place that dagger in the heart of the proposal.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. GUFFEY. What was the indebtedness of the country at the time the last bonus for veterans was voted for by Congress?

Mr. PEPPER. I do not know. It was perhaps between $16,000,000,000 and $20,000,000,000. I do not know exactly what the indebtedness was at that time.

Mr. GUFFEY. What is it at the present time?

Mr. PEPPER. It is in the neighborhood of $300,000,000,000.

Mr. GUFFEY. Does the Senator believe that the country can stand to have more money in circulation? Does he not believe that it would develop inflation?

Mr. PEPPER. No; I do not believe that an appreciable inflation would be developed.

Mr. GUFFEY. According to the Treasury, there is a debt of approximately $300,000,000,000, and the Senator would add $3,000,000,000 more.

Mr. PEPPER. I do not believe that $2,000,000,000 or $3,000,000,000 in relation to an outstanding debt of $300,000,000,000 is a larger percentage than a billion or two billion dollars was in relation to the debt of the country at the time the bonus bill was passed.

Mr. GUFFEY. That was during an inflationary period.

Mr. PEPPER. I do not believe that the benefits under this bill would represent a greater percentage of increase in relation to our present national debt than did the bonus in relation to the debt existing at the time to which the Senator refers.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I believe it should be pointed out that the impression is that this bill will put the GI on an equal basis with the officer who receives terminal leave. In justice to truth, it should be kept in mind that the GI received his mustering-out pay which was $300. The average terminal leave pay of the officer, as I recall the figure—I will get it later for the RECORD—was approximately $350 or $400. A high ranking officer received more. Therefore, so far as the GI is concerned, we are asking that he be given an additional amount. The average GI will be receiving more than the average officer received when mustered out with mustering-out pay plus additional considerations.

Reference has been made three or four times while I have been sitting in my chair to the possibility that the President will veto the bill. The truth of the matter is that the President is perhaps following, as he should, the advice of the Treasury and the Bureau of the Budget. They have no doubt told him that the Budget this year will run, for the normal expenditures of the Government, approximately six billion or seven billion dollars more than the $39,000,000,000 which the Government will receive in the form of taxes. It has been said that it would probably be better for the country and the future of the GI himself if the course to be followed were the one suggested in the bill as reported by the committee. I wish that we could pay the GI in cash. In doing so the additional financial burden on the country would amount to very little in the long run, but the benefit to the GI at the present time would be considerable.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the Senator is absolutely correct. We are asked to tell the GI that the country is in such precarious condition that his Government cannot afford to let him have his $250 for 5 years. What will the average GI think about that? Yes, Mr. President, it makes but very little difference to many persons how little is the amount of money which the GI has. I have pointed out already that millions of GI's are living on $80 a month. What will he think if his Government tells him that he may not have his $250 for 5 years? What will it mean to tell him that he will receive a $250 bond which he may cash 5 years from now? We might just as well not give him anything so far as help is concerned at a time when he is passing through reconversion from a soldier to a civilian.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR. The able Senator discussed his amendment with me before he offered it, and I was rather sympathetic toward it. After hearing the arguments which have been made on the floor of the Senate, and in view of the situation which has developed, and in view of the fact that the Senator from Florida has accepted the suggestion that the bonds be not redeemable for a period of 6 months, I might suggest that if the Senate passes the bill in its present form, thereby not taking the risk of a veto, after the Congress returns 6 months from now, if the inflationary pressures have eased and we feel that the veterans should be permitted to cash their bonds, we can pass further legislation to make it possible for the veterans to surrender their bonds and receive cash.

Mr. PEPPER. I doubt that the general condition of the country will be any more favorable 6 months from now than it is at the present time. Perhaps I erred in adopting the suggestion of the able Senator from Utah, but I was trying to make these bonds like other War Savings bonds which are outstanding. We have had practical experience which has demonstrated that the people who needed money cashed their bonds, but those who did not need money did not cash their bonds, and I wanted to give the veteran the right to make a choice.

Mr. TAYLOR. Inasmuch as a postponement for 6 months has been suggested in the date in which the bonds may be cashed by that time we could look over the situation and determine what further course we should pursue.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, perhaps instead of trying to have two votes taken, one on the 6 months provision and one on the cash-payment provision, if the Senator from Colorado believes that a 6-months bond is worth as much as the cash, we might as well vote first on the question of paying the veteran in cash.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I think the issue should be decided on the basis of whether or not we believe we should now treat the veterans in the manner which has been suggested by the Senator from Florida. I become annoyed with attempts to pass legislation on the basis of what might happen in the executive departments. No one has greater respect for the President of the United States, whether he be the present President, or some other President, than have I. But we should not legislate on the basis of what the President will do with a bill after it has reached him. It is his right and his duty to veto a bill if, in his judgment, he believes it should be vetoed. But why should we legislate on the basis of what we believe the President will do? We have heard it said again and again by someone who happened to be at the head of a department, "Unless Congress does this or does that I will resign." Well, let him resign. It has been said that we should not pass the pending bill because of the possibility of a veto. I am willing to let the President of the United States do what he believes is correct with reference to vetoing or signing the bill. The question before us is whether the amendment of the Senator from Florida is a correct and proper amendment.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Senator from New Mexico believe that it would be better to have the money payable immediately in cash, or preserve the 6-month provision? In view of the statement of the Senator from Colorado that he regards it as worse to have the 6-month limitation in the bill, I should like to have the opinion of the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CHAVEZ. My opinion is that if we paid the colonel, the major, and the captain in cash we should pay in cash the man who actually did the fighting.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. In answer to the argument that a cash bill would be preferable to the amendment of the Senator from Florida, I invite his attention and the attention of the Senator from Colorado to the fact that the GI's now hold a large percentage of the War Savings bonds. They have not had them redeemed at the Treasury any more than has any other segment of the population. They are holding their bonds just as the rest of us are holding ours. They have done so in the interest of the welfare of the United States, and because they have faith in the value of the bonds.

Mr. President, my answer to the Senator from Colorado is that we can depend on the GI's to hold their bonds for 6 months unless they are confronted with some dire emergency and are compelled to cash them.

I hope the Senator will not eliminate the 6-months provision. I stated earlier in the day that I was willing to go along with what the committee had reported to the Senate. I said that I did not believe we should say to the veteran that his bonds are not redeemable while the bonds of everyone else are redeemable. In my opinion, we are not taking any very great chance if we say to the veteran, "In 6 months from now you can redeem your bonds."

Mr. PEPPER. We will have a vote on the first amendment, and I wish to say now that as soon as the vote is had, whenever it is, on this amendment, if the amendment does not prevail, I am going to offer an amendment providing that the bonds be paid to the servicemen in cash or in bonds at their option.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wonder if the Senator from Florida would be agreeable to shortening the discussion in the hope that we may finish the consideration of the bill before we recess? There are other matters, very important matters, I desire to have taken up.

Mr. PEPPER. I am ready to conclude now, but I am going to offer the other amendment if the pending one does not prevail.

Mr. President, I wish to say a word in conclusion. I said I did not think this amendment would be very inflationary, and I was using the testimony of Mr. Chester Bowles in respect to the minimum wage bill which we had before us a little while ago. Senators will recall that the minimum wage bill contemplated raising the minimum wage from 40 cents an hour to 65 cents an hour. It was estimated that that would add some $2,000,000,000 to the wage bill of the country. The objection was made that that would be inflationary. But Mr. Bowles said that, distributed as it would be amongst the people at the bottom of the ladder, the money would be spent generally in such a way that he did not consider it would be appreciably inflationary. So I do not think the pending amendment will be appreciably inflationary, and I ask for the yeas and nays on it.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I wish to consume a little time on the amendment, notwithstanding the hour is somewhat late.

I have great respect for Chester Bowles, and I admire him as a man, as an economist, and as a patriot, but I am fearful that the Senator from Florida used the wrong individual in his attempt to prove his case on the floor of the Senate with respect to his argument about inflation.

Mr. President, who is behind the amendment which is offered by the Senator from Florida to change the committee bill into practically a cash proposition by making the bonds negotiable after a period of 6 months?

The great organizations of veterans have their representatives in Washington constantly attempting to bring to the committees of the United States Senate what they believe the rank and file of their members want. So, when the able Senator from Colorado had the hearings on the pending bill, he called before him the legislative counsel of the American Legion and other veterans' organizations to ascertain from them what they thought about the bill which is now before the Senate.

I read now what John Thomas Taylor, the director of the national legislative committee of the American Legion, testified. In reply to a question propounded by the Senator from Colorado, he said:

I sincerely hope that it will be gotten through before the recess of the Congress. It is one thing that is of most interest to the members of the armed forces during this war. It is the one thing that has caused the greatest dissatisfaction, and its elimination will go far toward satisfying the men who are presently in the armed forces, together with the vast population—certainly one in his family in the United States—and will eliminate distinctions and discriminations. I think it is a splendid piece of legislation.

Then, turning to the Disabled American Veterans, we find that William E. Tate, their representative, said:

It seems that perhaps it would be of more benefit to the men to get it that way——

That is, the way now proposed—than it would in cash.

Then John C. Williamson, assistant legislative representative of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, said:

I have been instructed by the director, national legislative service, Veterans of Foreign Wars, that our great organization interposes no objection to this new proposal. We recognize the danger coincident with the release of a huge sum of liquid cash at this particular time of sending the Nation into an inflationary spiral. Veterans, particularly those living on pensions, compensation, and retirement pay, would be the greatest sufferers from such a debacle.

Mr. President, those were the statements of representatives of the three great veterans' organizations. Moreover, they agreed with the Treasury and the Bureau of the Budget upon the proposition.

No one who testified before the committee believed in the proposal which has been submitted by the able Senator from Florida. The Senator from Colorado is correct, in my opinion, in stating that if we do not pass the bill in the form in which it has been reported by the committee the veterans will get nothing at this particular time in the way of legislation on this important subject, because the President of the United States has a program involving the finances of the Nation, and he is not going to take this bill, in my humble judgment, if it provides for payment in cash or payment in negotiable bonds.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], which the clerk will state.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 14, line 25, after the word "thereof", it is proposed to strike out the period and insert a comma and the word, "and shall be redeemable for the face value, plus accrued interest, at any time not less than 6 months after the issuance of such bonds."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it. The noes have it, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Let us have a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. A point of order.

Mr. PEPPER. That is all right. Mr. President, I wish to offer another amendment, on page 14, line 15, after the word "compensation", to insert the words "shall, at the option of the member of the armed services, be in cash."

The effect of that would be that the member of the armed services should have the option to determine whether he would receive cash or whether he would receive bonds, as provided for in the bill itself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I wish to call the attention of the majority leader to what he already knows, that most, if not all, Senators on this side have a 7 o'clock engagement this evening, and we would like very much to keep it. Unless the pending matter can be disposed of promptly, I was going respectfully to suggest that it go over until tomorrow.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am hoping the matter can be disposed of promptly and without further debate. I had in mind the engagement of those on the Republican side of the Senate at 7 o'clock, and I had hoped the bill would have been out of the way long ago. I hope we may now dispose of the amendment.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida does not propose to take more than 2 or 3 minutes, but he does want to have the right to say a word before the vote, and he expects to say it.

The Senator from Illinois made a pertinent observation a few minutes ago, quoting the opinions of the leaders of the veterans' organizations. I found I had inadvertently failed to refer to the same suggestion made by the Senator from Kentucky.

Again to review history for our comparison, Mr. President. The Senate adopted the Russell amendment to another bill over the unfavorable and adverse recommendations of all the major farm organizations. The Farmers' Union, the Farm Bureau Federation, and the National Grange, all recommended that the Senate not adopt the Russell amendment. But the Senate adopted the Russell amendment, because the Senate judged, if I recall correctly, that that was the proper course for it to pursue. I remember my able friend, the Senator from Georgia, saying he would be found by what his judgment led him to believe to be the right course, rather than by what the recommendations of the farm organizations were.

Mr. President, that is what I believe in this matter, that while the veterans' leaders may have said they had no objection, I do not know that they had any specific authority to speak for the millions of veterans involved. At least, that is not binding authority on the Senate, unless we choose to make it binding.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I may say that I feel exactly the same way with respect to this amendment. I propose to vote for the Senator's amendment.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator from Georgia very much. That is characteristic of his usual courageous attitude. I did not insist on the yeas and nays on the amendment a moment ago, but I think the pending amendment is deserving such a vote. I am willing to desist, but I do ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida, who has asked for the yeas and nays. Is the demand sufficiently seconded?

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it. The noes have it, and the amendment is rejected.

The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 4051) was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to grant to personnel of the armed forces equal treatment in the matter of leave, and for other purposes."

AMENDMENT TO RAILROAD RETIREMENT ACTS, RAILROAD UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, AND RELATED PROVISIONS OF LAW

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 1362, to amend the railroad retirement acts, and so forth.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill

(H. R. 1362) to amend the railroad retirement acts, the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, and subchapter B of chapter 9 of the Internal Revenue Code; and for other purposes.

EXTENSION OF PRICE CONTROL—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BARKLEY. I submit the conference report on extending the effective period of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, and ask for its present consideration, with the understanding that it will not be taken up until tomorrow.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

(For conference report, see page 9754 of the House proceedings of today.)

REPORT OF THE SENATE DELEGATION ON THE BERMUDA MEETING OF THE EMPIRE PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. GREEN. I desire to submit a report of the Senate delegation sent to the Bermuda meeting of the Empire Parliamentary Association. I would prefer to make the report orally so as to have it printed in the body of the RECORD, because similar reports have been made in Ottawa and in London. If I may read just a few sentences from it, and obtain permission to include the whole of it in the body of the RECORD as a part of my remarks, I shall be glad to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, this is the report of the Senate delegation sent to the Bermuda meeting of the Empire Parliamentary Association. I shall read some parts of it, and ask that the remainder be placed in the body of the RECORD.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I did not understand the Senator's request. I have no objection to the Senator printing the report in the RECORD. I do object to its being printed in the type which would indicate that the Senator had read it in the RECORD, because he does not intend to read all of it.

Mr. GREEN. Then I shall read it.

Mr. BARKLEY. How much is there of it?

Mr. GREEN. There is not much.

Mr. BARKLEY. Cannot the Senator wait until tomorrow?

Mr. GREEN. No, Mr. President; I have waited the whole afternoon, since 1 o'clock.

Mr. BARKLEY. We have all waited the whole afternoon on something.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report has already been ordered to be entered in the RECORD.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. A point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I understood the Senator from Rhode Island to ask unanimous consent of the Senate to have the report printed in the RECORD, and that the President of the Senate had announced that consent had been granted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The consent was agreed to, and that ends the matter. The objection of the Senator from Wisconsin came too late.

Mr. GREEN. The report has been ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I did not understand the Senator's request until he repeated it as he got up to read the document. I understood him to ask unanimous consent to have the report printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island asked that the report be printed in the body of the RECORD, and his unanimous-consent request was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN. I shall read the report.

Mr. President, on last February 14, the President of the Legislative Council and joint president of the Bermuda branch of the Empire Parliamentary Association, sent to the President pro tempore of the United States Senate, a cordial invitation for four Members of the Senate to visit Bermuda for a period of about 10 days beginning June 10 as guests of the Bermuda branch of the association. A similar invitation for four Representatives was sent to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

On March 27, the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee reported a concurrent resolution accepting this invitation, which was referred to the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, was reported favorably without amendment, considered and agreed to on April 1. The concurrent resolution read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Senate and the House of Representatives hereby accept the invitation tendered by the President of the Legislative Council of Bermuda and joint president of the Bermuda branch of the Empire Parliamentary Association, to have four Members of the Senate and four Members of the House of Representatives attend a meeting to be held in Bermuda, beginning June 10, 1946, at which the Bermuda Branch of the Empire Parliamentary Association will be host to delegations from the Parliaments of the United Kingdom and the Dominion of Canada, and at which it is hoped also to have representatives of the Parliaments of the Australian Commonwealth, New Zealand, and the Union of South Africa, and possibly a representative of the Central Legislature of India. The President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives are authorized to appoint the Members of the Senate and the Members of the House of Representatives, respectively, to attend such meeting and are further authorized to designate the chairmen of the delegations from each of the Houses. The expenses incurred by the members of the delegations appointed for the purpose of attending such meeting, which shall not exceed $5,000 for each of the delegations, shall be reimbursed to them from the contingent fund of the House of which they are Members, upon the submission of vouchers approved by the chairman of the delegation of which they are members.

On June 6, in accordance with said resolution, the President pro tempore of the Senate appointed the following Members as delegates from the Senate: Senator THEODORE FRANCIS GREEN, of Rhode Island; Senator J. WILLIAM FULBRIGHT, of Arkansas; Senator ALEXANDER WILEY, of Wisconsin; Senator HOMER FERGUSON, of Michigan.

The Senator from Rhode Island was appointed chairman of the delegation.

The Speaker of the House appointed the following Members for the House of Representatives: Representative LUTHER A. JOHNSON, of Texas; Representative JAMES P. RICHARDS, of South Carolina; Representative ROBERT A. GRANT, of Indiana; Representative D. EMMERT BRUMBAUGH, of Pennsylvania.

Representative JOHNSON acted as head of the House delegation.

On June 8 the delegation flew to Bermuda, where they were cordially welcomed and taken to the Mid Ocean Club, where they were put up as guests of the Bermuda branch of the Empire Parliamentary Association. The American delegation decided that it was desirable to make it plain at the outset that they were attending the Conference merely as guests and observers. So, although members of the delegation participated in all the sessions of the Conference and all took part in the discussions, yet they did so informally, and without decision or commitment on the part of the American Congress or even of the delegation itself. Each delegate expressed only his own personal views. When matters of procedure arose on which action had to be taken I, as chairman, in behalf of the delegation, declined to take part, stating that we would abide by any decision reached by the association itself.

The first of such sessions was convened at 10 o'clock on the morning of Tuesday, June 11, in the House of Assembly Chamber, Hamilton, Bermuda, with the honorable, the Chief Justice, Sir Brooke Francis, K. C., of Bermuda, presiding. Those attending the opening meeting, in addition to the representatives from the United States, were the following delegates:

For the United Kingdom: The Right Honorable John Wilmot, Member of Parliament, chairman; the Right Honorable Anthony Eden, Member of Parliament; the Honorable A. J. P. Howard, Member of Parliament; Mr. E. M. King, Member of Parliament; Mr. Alfred Robens, Member of Parliament; Mr. J. J. Robertson, Member of Parliament; Wing Comdr. J. R. Robinson, Member of Parliament; Mr. Tom Smith, Member of Parliament.

For the Dominion of Canada: Mr. Gordon Isnor, Member of Parliament, chairman; Senator C. B. Howard; Mr. Elie O. Bertrand, Member of Parliament; Mr. G. H. Castleden, Member of Parliament; Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker, Member of Parliament; Mr. Mark Senn, Member of Parliament.

For the New Zealand Parliament: Mr. K. J. Holyoake, Member of Parliament.

For the Council and Assembly of Bermuda: The Honorable Sir Stanley Spurling; the Honorable F. G. Gosling, MLC; The Honorable W. E. S. Zuill, MLC; Mr. H. St. G. Butterfield, MCP; Mr. A. C. Down, MCP; Mr. Hereward T. Watlington, MCP.

Also in official attendance were the Honorable Sir Howard D'Egville, secretary of the British-American Parliamentary Group in the Parliament of the United Kingdom, Prof. J. Eastman Sheehan as observer, and Darrell St. Claire, observer for the Department of State, Washington, D. C.

Discussions were held on Tuesday morning, June 11, again on the morning and on the afternoon of Wednesday, June 12, and on the morning and afternoon of Friday, June 14. The Conference had been scheduled to end on Tuesday of the week following, but because the American delegation felt obliged to make an earlier return, the meeting on Friday afternoon, June 14 had to be made the final session and the American delegation flew back from Bermuda on Saturday, June 15.

The subjects discussed ranged from aspects of international peace and security to the practical relationships existing between the United States and the British Commonwealth in the matter of trade. An interchange of views was had on these topics leading to expressions from all points of the council chamber by members present. The talks were completely unofficial and resulted in no affirmative or negative action on the part of any delegation.

Apart from the formal meetings, the opportunity was presented for members of the attending delegations to know one another and to learn of their respective national attitudes. This was particularly fortunate in view of the close military and naval collaboration between the United States and the British Empire in the war just closed, and was the first chance which many had had to meet together since the beginning of that struggle.

The visiting delegations were entertained extensively and most hospitably by public officials and private citizens. Receptions were given them by His Excellency the Governor and Lady Leatham, by Vice Adm. Sir Irvine and Lady Glennie, by the President of the Legislative Council of Bermuda, Sir Brooke and Lady Francis, by the Brigadier H. Dunbar McConaghey, the mayor of Hamilton and Mrs. Butterfield, and the American consul general and Mrs. Clay Merrill. These occasions, as well as others still more informal, gave occasion for the members of the respective delegations to get to know each other much better and to talk more freely than they otherwise could have done.

The American congressional delegation returned to the United States on Saturday, June 15. The Canadian, New Zealand, and United Kingdom delegations followed to the United States on Tuesday, June 18, and were greeted that morning at the Capitol by Chairman GREEN and Chairman JOHNSON and the members of the American delegation. At noon of the same day the visiting delegations were taken to the Senate floor and to the House of Representatives by the American participants. For the visit to the Senate that body stood in recess and all were greeted by Senators in attendance. The visitors at the time and since expressed high appreciation of the exceptional honor thus done them. The extract from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date follows:

RECEPTION TO MEMBERS OF THE EMPIRE PARLIAMENTARY CONFERENCE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senate will recall that several months ago an official invitation was received by the two Houses of Congress to send delegations to the Empire Parliamentary Conference which was to be held in Bermuda. By appropriate resolutions the Senate and House accepted the invitation, and sent delegations from the two Houses, which attended the conference in Bermuda all of last week.

The representatives from the Senate were the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY].

The delegation from the House of Representatives consisted of Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON, Mr. JAMES P. RICHARDS, Mr. ROBERT A. GRANT, and Mr. D. EMMERT BRUMBAUGH.

The members of the conference from the British Empire are on their way home from the conference, and they have come by way of Washington. They include the delegations from the British House of Commons, from the Canadian Parliament, and from the Parliament of New Zealand.

Among these gentlemen who attended the conference, and have honored us with their presence this morning, is Mr. Anthony Eden, with whom we are all very pleasantly acquainted, and of whose many visits to Washington we have very happy memories.

In order that the Members of the Senate may meet these gentlemen in person, and assure them of our appreciation of the courtesy they have shown us by calling upon us on their way to their respective homes, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess for a few minutes, and that the members of the three Parliaments be kind enough to come to the front of the Senate so that Members of the Senate may greet them in person.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Thereupon (at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess.

During the recess, the visiting members of the Empire Parliamentary Conference, took positions in the well of the Senate in front of the desk and were greeted by the Members of the Senate who were presented by Senator BARKLEY and Mr. Anthony Eden.

The following is the list of the delegates to the Empire Parliamentary Conference:

United Kingdom delegates: The Right Honorable R. Anthony Eden, Member of Parliament; the Honorable A. J. P. Howard, Member of Parliament; Lt. Col. E. M. King, Member of Parliament; Mr. Alfred Robens, Member of Parliament; Mr. J. J. Robertson, Member of Parliament; Wing-Comdr. J. R. Robinson, Member of Parliament; Mr. Tom Smith, Member of Parliament; Prof. Eastman Sheehan; Sir Howard d'Egville.

Canadian delegates: Mr. Gordon Isnor, Member of Parliament, chairman; Mr. Elie O. Bertrand, Member of Parliament; Mr. G. H. Castleden, Member of Parliament; Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker, Member of Parliament; Senator C. B. Howard; Mr. Mark Senn, Member of Parliament.

New Zealand delegate: Mr. K. J. Holyoake, Member of Parliament.

American Delegates: Senators THEODORE FRANCIS GREEN, J. WILLIAM FULBRIGHT, HOMER FERGUSON, ALEXANDER WILEY; Representatives LUTHER A. JOHNSON, JAMES P. RICHARDS, ROBERT A. GRANT, D. EMMERT BRUMBAUGH.

At 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m., the Senate reassembled, when called to order by the President pro tempore.

Mr. President, the same day the members of the visiting delegations were entertained at luncheon at the Senate by the American delegation and also later at the Blair Lee House by the Department of State. The delegations departed for their homes the next day.

This meeting between Members of the American Congress and members of the various parliamentary bodies of the British Empire was not the first of its sort. The last previous meeting had been held in June 1943 in Ottawa, Canada. It is believed that these meetings served a useful purpose in paving the way for better understanding between the respective lawmaking bodies. These meetings were not of the heads of states or of appointed officials, but meetings of officials elected by the people themselves, and in the discussions about the problems of the different countries, the views of the people themselves could be more readily ascertained.

There is one further comment to add to this report. As chairman of the committee, I at various times took occasion to emphasize the fact, and this was also emphasized by other members of the delegation, that we were very glad indeed to meet with these representatives of the various parliaments of the British Empire and that we would be glad also to meet with similar representatives of other foreign countries under similar conditions.

There is added to this report an extract from the London Times of July 5, giving an account of the Bermuda Conference and the common interests of Britain and the United States:

BERMUDA CONFERENCE—COMMON INTERESTS OF BRITAIN AND UNITED STATES

Mr. Attlee, answering Mr. Grenfell (Gower, Laborite), said: I am very glad to have the opportunity of telling the House something about the conference which, at the invitation of the Bermuda branch of the Empire Parliamentary Association, took place in Bermuda between June 10 and June 19 between delegations from the branches of the association in the United Kingdom, Canada, and New Zealand, and Bermuda. For the second time in the history of these conferences, a notable feature of the meeting was the presence of delegations of four Members from the American Senate and four Members from the American House of Representatives, who, by appropriate resolutions in both Houses of the American Congress, were selected to attend the conference. The discussions in Bermuda afforded an invaluable opportunity of close personal contacts and exchanges of well considered, if necessarily unofficial, opinions on matters of common interest to the great family of English-speaking peoples.

This is the second occasion on which there has been this close association between delegations from both Houses of the American Congress and from the United Kingdom Parliament and Parliaments of the oversea Empire, and I think it would be difficult to exaggerate the good effect on mutual understanding between the American people and the peoples of the British Commonwealth of Nations which may be expected to flow from what, I hope, will be a progressive expansion of these interparliamentary contacts. After the discussions in Bermuda, the delegates went on to Washington, and from there to Ottawa. In Washington the delegates from the British House of Commons, the Canadian Parliament, and the Parliament of New Zealand were invited onto the floor of the Senate, and the Members of that House stood in recess for a few minutes in order that Mr. Eden and the leader of the Canadian delegation might present them personally to each Member of the Senate.

BUSY DAYS IN OTTAWA

In Ottawa three busy days were spent in the forming of contacts, the acquisition of invaluable information, and the mutual strengthening of friendships which proceeds, as so many members of this House are aware, from the generous hospitality which in Canada is invariably accorded to visiting members from the United Kingdom and other parliaments of the commonwealth.

I should like to express our thanks to all those, alike in the United States, in Bermuda, and in Canada, who accorded such ready hospitality to their parliamentary visitors. I hope that, with the progressive resumption of peaceful conditions, opportunities for such meetings will increase, and that we in this House may have our opportunities of returning the cordial hospitality afforded to members of the House both in the United States and the British Empire. [Cheers.]

Mr. Eden (Warwick and Leamington, Conservative): In associating myself with every word of the Prime Minister's answer, might I ask in relation to the very generous gesture extended to members of this House and of the Canadian and New Zealand Parliaments by the United States Senate, which, so far as I know is quite unprecedented, whether he proposes in conjunction with you, sir, to consider sending some message of appreciation to the Senate from this House for their attitude? [Cheers.]

Mr. Attlee: I should like to do that very much if it is the general view of the House and of Mr. Speaker. [Cheers.]

PARTICIPATION BY UNITED STATES IN UNITED NATIONS EDUCATIONAL, SCIENTIFIC, AND CULTURAL ORGANIZATION—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. MURRAY submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 305) providing for membership and participation by the United States in the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization, and authorizing an appropriation therefor, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 to 6, inclusive, and agree to the same.

JAMES E. MURRAY,
JAMES M. TUNNELL,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

SOL BLOOM,
JOHN KEE,
CHESTER E. MERROW,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. MURRAY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana?

There being no objection, the report was considered and agreed to.

RIGHT OF FORMER OWNERS OF COMMERCIAL REAL ESTATE UNDER THE SURPLUS PROPERTY ACT OF 1944

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I may say that I too have waited long today.

Mr. President, there is on the calendar a bill which merely amends the Surplus Property Act. I am speaking on behalf of the Senate Military Affairs Committee. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], who is ill, and who is chairman of the subcommittee, would have made this request and would have originally reported the bill from the committee. A very serious situation exists with reference to the disposal of some real property. The bill in question is House bill 6702. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. It will not take long, because I do not think there will be any possible objection to it. I am asking for unanimous consent, Mr. President, for immediate consideration at this time with the hope of disposing of the bill immediately.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no objection, if it is considered without prejudice to the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6702) to clarify the rights of former owners of real property to reacquire such property under the Surplus Property Act of 1944, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 23 (a) (1) of the Surplus Property Act of 1944 is amended to read as follows:

"(1) The term 'real property' means property consisting of land, together with any fixtures and improvements thereon (including hotels, apartment houses, hospitals, office buildings, stores, and other commercial structures) located outside the District of Columbia, but does not include (A) commercial structures constructed by, at the direction of, or on behalf of any Government agency, (B) commercial structures which the Administrator determines have been made an integral part of a functional or economic unit which should be disposed of as a whole, and (C) war housing, industrial plants, factories, airports, airport facilities, or similar structures and facilities, or the sites thereof, or land which the Administrator determines essential to the use of any of the foregoing; and."

SEC. 2. Section 23 (c) of the Surplus Property Act of 1944 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"The classification of property by the Administrator (including the determination of whether property is 'real property' as defined in this section) shall be based on the highest and best use of the property at the time it is reported as surplus property regardless of its former character or use."

SEC. 3. The Secretary of War and the War Assets Administration are authorized and directed to take such action as may be necessary (A) to reinstate the leasehold covering the Chamberlin Hotel, Fort Monroe, Old Point Comfort, Va., and its appurtenant land, buildings, utilities, and facilities, which leasehold, with all the furnishings and equipment used in connection therewith, was acquired on December 30, 1941, by the Department of the Navy, and on December 20, 1945, declared by the Department of the Navy to be surplus to its needs and responsibilities; and (B) to convey and sell, to the former owner or owners authorized under this section to be the lessee under the reinstated leasehold, all of the right, title, and interest in and to such hotel, land, buildings, utilities, furnishings, and equipment, which existed in the person who was the lessee prior to such acquisition by the Department of the Navy. The former owner or owners for the purposes of this section shall be either (i) those persons who on December 30, 1941, owned bonds to secure payment of which the property was then held by a trustee, and who, within 60 days after the date of first publication of notice is a newspaper of general circulation in the county in which the property is situated, as hereinafter provided, commit themselves in such manner as the War Assets Administrator may prescribe, to participate in the acquisition of the property, the participation by each such person to be in the porportion which the face amount of the bonds owned by such person on December 30, 1941, is of the aggregate face amount of such bonds owned by all of the participants, or (ii) a corporation all of the shares of which (except qualifying shares) are owned in like proportion by the persons making such commitments. Notice of the right of such persons to have the benefits of this section shall be given by publication in the Federal Register, publication in a newspaper of general circulation in the county in which the property is situated, and by any other means which may be deemed appropriate by the War Assets Administrator. The leasehold shall contain the same terms and conditions as that which was in effect immediately prior to the acquisition of the property by the Department of the Navy, and upon the reinstatement thereof shall be subject to all of the provisions of Public Resolution 71, Sixty-seventh Congress (42 Stat. 843), as if such acquisition by the Department of the Navy had not taken place. The consideration to be paid to the United States for reinstating such leasehold and for such conveyance and sale to the former owner or owners shall be a price not greater than that for which the property was acquired by the United States. Such acquisition price being properly adjusted to reflect any increase or decrease in the value of the property resulting from action by the United States, or a price equal to the market price at the time of sale, whichever price is the lower. This section shall cease to be in effect unless, within 6 months from the date of the enactment of this act, the former owner or owners pay or tender the consideration prescribed in this section for the reinstatement of the leasehold and for such conveyance and sale.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. REVERCOMB. I shall be very glad to explain it briefly.

The Surplus Property Act permits prior owners of land taken over by the Government, when such land is declared surplus, to have priority of repurchase. Priority of repurchase is for the original purchase price plus any improvements which may be placed upon the land, or less any reduction in its value. Under the construction placed upon it by the War Assets Administration that provision of the act has been applied only to grazing lands, farming lands, and lands of that type. The purpose of the bill is to clarify the act, so as to apply to other real property, as defined in the bill, and to extend the definition of real property to include hotels and other business properties which have not been built by the Government itself or by agencies of the Government. That is the first part of the bill.

The second section, put in at the request of the War Assets Administration, simply provides that the classification of property by the Administrator shall be based on the highest and best use of the property at the time it is reported as surplus.

The third section deals with the specific instance of the Chamberlin Hotel, which is built upon the Government reservation at Fort Monroe. It had to be dealt with in a separate section because, as the War Assets Administrator pointed out, it is not salable property, but must be leased.

That is a very general explanation of the bill. It must be passed now if it is to become effective at all, and if the War Assets Administrator is to sell the property and give priority to former owners.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REVERCOMB. I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. How long is the priority right to continue?

Mr. REVERCOMB. The former owners are to have 60 days within which to exercise their priorities, except in the case of the Chamberlin Hotel, which involves former bondholders. They are allowed a little more time to assert their right to exercise their priority.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 6702) was read the third time and passed.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on behalf of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. O'MAHONEY, Mr. MURRAY, Mr. MAYBANK, Mr. REVERCOMB, and Mr. WILSON conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. REVERCOMB subsequently said: Mr. President, as a part of my remarks upon House bill 6702, which I discussed a few moments ago, I ask unanimous consent to have the report of the committee printed in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report (No. 1722) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Your committee, to whom were referred the bills (S. 2329, S. 2380, and H. R. 6702) to clarify the rights of former owners of commercial real property under the Surplus Property Act of 1944, after considering the same, unanimously reports favorably the bill H. R. 6702 with an amendment, and recommends passage of the bill as amended.

NEED FOR CLARIFYING LEGISLATION

The purpose of the bill is to permit former owners of commercial real property, such as hotels, apartment houses, hospitals, office buildings, stores, and other commercial structures, which have not been constructed by the Government or made an integral part of a facility or installation, to reacquire their property when it is declared surplus by any Government agency. The need for clarification arises out of the interpretation, placed by the War Assets Administration through its regulations, upon section 23 (a) (1) of the Surplus Property Act of 1944, as amended. Under this interpretation preference to reacquire is not extended to former owners of commercial real estate. Section 3 of the bill deals with a special situation involving the Chamberlin Hotel at Old Point Comfort, Va., which, owing to an involved leasehold, cannot be disposed of without the benefit of additional legislation, and which cannot be satisfactorily handled by means of general legislation.

Your committee, through its subcommittee on surplus property, held hearings on the bills. Representatives of War Assets Administration appeared at these hearings and testified with respect to the interpretation placed by that agency upon section 23 of the Surplus Property Act of 1944.

This section gives to the former owners of real property a preference to reacquire their property following its declaration as surplus by an owning agency. Real property, as defined in the act, excludes "war housing, industrial plants, factories, or similar structures and facilities," thus precluding a former owner of property falling within these categories from exercising a preference to reacquire. It was the contention of the representatives of War Assets Administration that since the legislative history of the Surplus Property Act contains no references to property other than agricultural, forest, grazing, and mineral land, commercial structures such as hotels, apartment houses, office buildings, and stores fall within the category of "similar structures" and are thus excluded from the term "real property." Hence, under the War Assets Administration interpretation, former owners of this type of property are not entitled to preference.

The amendment made by your committee to the first two sections of the bill are designed to safeguard the interests of the Government in real property which has been substantially modified or extended. With these amendments, the War Assets Administration has no objections to the bill. The safeguards added by your committee provide that no priority to former owners shall exist for commercial structures constructed by, at the direction of, or on behalf of any Government agencies, or for commercial structures which the Administrator determines have been made an integral part of a functional or an economic unit which should be disposed of as a whole. These qualifications were added to the bill in view of the large number of instances where the Government has made extensive additions, alterations, or betterments to a property or where the breaking up of a large installation by the sale of portions of the installation to former owners would substantially decrease the over-all value of such property or installation to the Government.

Section 2 of the proposed bill further clarifies the basis upon which property shall be classified in order to assure the highest and best use of the property at the time it is declared surplus, thus assuring the highest return to the Government.

Section 3 of the proposed bill deals exclusively with the Chamberlin Hotel at Old Point Comfort, Va. This hotel was constructed on the military reservation at Fort Monroe, Va., pursuant to a joint resolution passed by Congress in 1922 which authorized the Secretary of War to permit private persons to construct and to operate a hotel on the reservation under a leasehold for a period of 50 years renewable for a further period of 50 years. In December 1941, the Department of the Navy acquired the leasehold through condemnation. At the time, the hotel was in receivership and the bondholders were in effect the owners of the leasehold interest. At the time of the Navy's condemnation of the Chamberlin, the question arose, and is still pertinent, as to whether the leasehold would not become merged in the fee title and thereby become extinguished. There was further question as to whether the joint resolution passed by Congress in 1922 would authorize the Secretary of War to reinstate the leasehold interest. In addition, the State of Virginia had originally ceded the land comprising Fort Monroe on the condition that the land be used exclusively for military purposes. On February 17, 1922, the General Assembly of Virginia enacted a statute which had the effect of preventing the land comprising Fort Monroe from reverting to the State of Virginia if a hotel should be constructed thereon.

Questions arose as to whether this act of the General Assembly of Virginia was still in effect following the condemnation by the Navy and hence whether the reinstatement of the leasehold on the hotel Chamberlin would not cause Fort Monroe to revert to the State. The purpose of section 3 is to reestablish the leasehold and to authorize the return of the property to persons who were bondholders of record on December 30, 1941. In reinstating the original leasehold, the bill avoids further difficulties arising out of these problems.

The bill as passed by the House provides that the leasehold shall be disposed of to a majority of the former bondholders. The amendment added by your committee extends the right to reacquire this property to all former bondholders who may wish to participate, on a proportional basis.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, in addition, I wish to call attention to something which I should have explained at the time; namely, that section 3, on page 5, in line 16 of the bill, as printed, requires the publication by the War Assets Administration of a notice giving the bondholders an opportunity to commit themselves to participate in the acquisition of the Chamberlin Hotel.

It is intended that the newspaper notice shall set forth in detail the terms and conditions under which such commitments are to be made. I am advised that the committee is to receive from the head of the War Assets Administration a statement that this construction will be placed upon the language of the bill.

JOSEPH E. BENNETT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. HUFFMAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2091) for the relief of Joseph E. Bennett, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment to the title of the bill.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the text of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by the Senate amendment with the figures in line 7, page 1, namely, $39,129 stricken out and the figures "$30,000" inserted in lieu thereof; and the Senate agree to the same.

JAMES W. HUFFMAN,
GEO. A. WILSON,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

E. H. HEDRICK,
JOHN JENNINGS, Jr.,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. HUFFMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator if this is a private claim bill?

Mr. HUFFMAN. It is a private claim bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

MEAT AND LIVESTOCK MARKET REPORT

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, in the cattle market today there were just a few head less than 50,000. The prices were from 25 cents to a dollar cheaper per hundred on most of the classes. The prices of cows went even lower.

Hog receipts totaled 51,000 head, and the market was about steady with yesterday's close.

Calf receipts for the first 2 days of this week were up 1 percent from a week ago, and 49 percent larger than for the comparable 2 days a year ago. Sheep and lamb receipts for the first 2 days this week were 17 percent above receipts for the comparable 2 days a year ago.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks the entire market report, together with an article from the New York Times of July 23 entitled "Meat Black Mart Feared Under OPA."

There being no objection, the report and article were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The continued uncertainty as to whether price controls are kept off livestock and meats is causing wide fluctuations in market supplies and in prices than otherwise would exist. This situation may be expected to continue if the conference committee report is adopted by Congress and approved by the President, since nothing definite will be known for another month while a decontrol board is appointed and has attempted to conduct hearings on a complex and involved problem.

Adequate factual information already has been made available to Congress that proves unmistakably that price ceilings on meats and livestock not only are impracticable and unenforceable but also are not needed. Increased production, which is the only answer, can be achieved only if the industry is kept free of artificial, unworkable, and impractical regulations. The country needs increased production of meat and the industry is in a position to achieve it if restrictive legislation can be avoided. For example, the Department of Agriculture announced in a special report yesterday that an all-time record corn crop of 3,500,000,000 bushels and a record wheat crop of well above a billion bushels is in prospect. This prospect of a record production of feed and food grains undoubtedly will cause many American cattle and hog farmers to make every effort to increase and expand their production. Their decisions, however, must be made within the next 30 days or so. The continuing uncertainty, as a result of the pending legislation, however, will continue to confuse them and make it difficult for them to make any positive plans for increasing production.

The unmistakable evidence of what freedom from impractical and unenforceable price regulations will bring is shown by the fact that meat production in each of the past 3 weeks in which no price controls have existed has exceeded production of the preceding week. The increase has been tremendous. For example, meat production under Federal inspection in the week ended July 20 is estimated to have amounted to about 392,000,000 pounds, which was the largest for any week since last February, 224 percent larger than that in the week ended June 29, the week in which OPA controls were eliminated, and 49 percent larger than that for the corresponding week of July 1945. The following table shows estimates of meat production under Federal inspection for the third week in July this year and last year, and for the last week in June, when OPA controls ended.

	Week ended July 20, 1946	Percent change from—		Week ended—
		Last week of June	Year ago	June 29, 1946	July 21, 1945
	Mil. lb.			Mil. lb.	Mil. lb.
Beef	184	+283	+43	48	129
Veal	16	+129	Same	7	16
Lamb and mutton	18	−10	+6	20	17
Pork, excluding lard	174	+278	+72	46	101
Total meat	392	+224	+49	121	263

The foregoing increase in production under Federal inspection has resulted not only from increased marketings of livestock, but also from the ability of long established operators once more to compete with the black market under the free and open competitive natural laws of supply and demand.

A report on the livestock market this morning is summarized as follows: Receipts of cattle at 12 important markets all over the country today amounted to 49,300 head, off 32 percent from the large run of cattle at these markets a week ago, and about 4 percent less than market receipts a year ago. Total cattle supplies at these markets for the first 2 days of this week were 18 percent less than those of a week ago, but 9 percent above the supply for the comparable days a year ago. The United States Department of Agriculture reported yesterday's supply situation as follows: "Last week's late price declines on all classes and grades of slaughter cattle held fresh receipts to moderate dimensions with unloads including a smaller percentage of strictly good and choice fed steers and yearlings. But fresh receipts of grass cows and low-grade steers and heifers piled in on top of a sizable carry-over from late last week when the trade on such cattle hit new low levels for the season."

The Department of Agriculture reported the cattle market in Chicago yesterday as follows: "Compared with last Friday, top, good, and choice slaughter steers sold fully steady, with lower grades still draggy, but at prices about in line with scattered sales made at the recent full decline.

"Good and choice fed heifers held dependably steady at last week's low close, but medium to low-good grass heifers and heiferettes dragged in sympathy with another very dull trade on all grades of cows. Compared with last Friday, canners and cutters fared the best, selling steady to 25 cents lower, while better grade cows and heiferettes suffered additional 25 to 50 cents downturns. Consequently, cows sold at a new low on the crop and as much as $5 under the season's high time. Bulls ruled slow and steady to 25 cents lower following last week's crack-up in prices, and vealers sold about steady with Friday but 50 cents to $1 under the recent high time."

The cattle market in Chicago this morning was reported steady with yesterday's close. The early top paid on a few loads of cattle was $25 per hundredweight which compared with the top of $25.25 paid for only 5 loads yesterday, and with an extreme top of $26.35 last week.

Receipts of hogs at 12 markets this morning, which amounted to 51,000 head, were off 21 percent from a week ago but up 40 percent for the comparable day a year ago. This makes total receipts at those markets this week 24 percent less than a week ago, but 13 percent larger than for the same day a year ago.

A striking example of how uncertainty and fear of price restrictions being reimposed can have on the flow of livestock to market is reflected in the comment made by the Department of Agriculture yesterday in a report of the hog market.

This statement is as follows: "The severe price break in hog values late last week, coupled with the news over the week end that price restrictions may not be replaced for another 30 days, reduced the hog run to the smallest number since July 1."

As a result of this sharp curtailment of supplies over the week end, hog prices today advanced somewhat. The top price yesterday at Chicago was $20.75 for a few selected lots, but the practical top was $20.50, as compared with the top last week of $22. The hog market this morning at Chicago opened slow with an early top of $21.25. Good and choice sows opened at $19.25 to $19.50 per live hundredweight.

Sheep and lamb receipts for the first 2 days this week were off 2 percent from a week ago but up 17 percent for the comparable 2 days a year ago.

Calf receipts for the first 2 days of this week were up 1 percent from a week ago and 49 percent larger for the comparable 2 days a year ago.

Reinstatement of controls on meat and livestock, as threatened by the terms of the conference report on the OPA bill, simply will mean that the wasteful black market which flourished under the OPA again will prevail to undermine public morals, waste vital foods and materials, endanger public health, discourage production, ruin legitimate business, create shortages, and gouge American consumers.

MEAT BLACK MARKET FEARED UNDER OPA—SPOKESMEN FOR RESTAURANTS, HOTELS, AND CLUBS FORECAST ILLEGITIMATE DEALS AGAIN

Restaurant and hotel men of the city and representatives of the meat industry forecast yesterday an immediate return of the black market if Federal controls again were put on meat through revival of Office of Price Administration regulations.

Spokesmen for leading restaurants, chains, cafeterias, Broadway night clubs, and hotels were agreed that in the open and competitive market beef and other meat cuts were becoming plentiful at prices far below those that prevailed in the black market.

Although prices are higher than former OPA ceilings, these spokesmen contend those ceilings were fictional and meant nothing because it was virtually impossible to buy meat legitimately at OPA prices. S. Ernest, assistant to the president of the Hotel Commodore, said that under OPA no hotels were able to obtain more than 5 percent of the meat they needed through legitimate channels.

BLACK MARKET SEEN ON WAY

"If meat controls are restored conditions will be the same as they were before with the black market back and black-market operators doing business at the same old stand," Mr. Ernest said. "At the present time we can buy all the meat we want legitimately."

Robert K. Christenberry, president of the Hotel Astor, said that with the end of OPA controls his hotel was able to serve a variety of meat cuts, something that was impossible under price regulations because we can't and won't compete by paying black-market prices. He also forecast a reblossoming of the lush black market if meat controls were restored.

Butter took another drop of 2¼ cents a pound wholesale on the New York Mercantile Exchange yesterday with Grade AA selling for 68¼ cents a pound, compared with Friday's closing price of 70½ cents. Score 93 or A butter was down to 66¾ cents a pound; grade B, 90 score, was selling at 64½ cents, and class C, 89 score, at 63½ cents. Retail supermarkets were selling butter at 75 cents.

According to Claude B. Rader, assistant manager of the exchange, the market is weak at the moment because the trade is agitated over the final outcome of the new OPA bill on which a Senate and House conference committee has agreed. The bill is expected to be acted upon today by Congress. Many in the trade were of the opinion that if butter again went under price control it would skyrocket in the black market, where it was bringing $1 a pound and up before June 30.

The demand for meat in the wholesale market dropped off sharply yesterday. This was accounted for by the fact that few retailers, with the exception of chains, sold out over the week end as consumers became more discriminatory in their purchases and balked at high prices. Consequently, comparatively few retailers were buying, and trading was described by C. F. House, market news analyst of the United States Department of Agriculture, as very slow, except for lamb. The beef supply, he said, was very liberal.

MORE MEAT IN REFRIGERATORS

With meat in wholesalers' refrigerators increasing daily, there will be an attendant decrease and a general readjustment in prices along the line unless the Government injects itself into the picture again by imposing strangling price controls, representatives of the restaurants and hotels said.

"If meat goes back on an OPA ceiling formula we will have a resurgence of the black market and a return of the same conditions that existed before June 30, when we had to go into the black market if we hoped to get any variety of meat cuts," Paul Henkel, president of the Society of Restaurateurs, said. "This was necessary because our own purveyors could not supply us at ceiling prices."

The same opinion was shared by Samuel Koenigsberg, president of the Affiliated Restaurateurs, composed of cafeterias, and Simon Linz, chairman of the board of the Allied Food and Entertainment Industries, Inc., an organization of restaurants and Broadway and East Side night clubs. Carl Erbe, another spokesman for Allied, said that, generally speaking, all the better-known night clubs were charging the same prices on their menus that they did under OPA and were contemplating no immediate increases.

"The illicit dealers, who mushroomed under OPA ceilings and flourished in the black market, are champing at the bit to get back in business," Mr. Linz said. "They are hoping for a return of the OPA because they know they cannot compete with the legitimate packers and remain in business. Wholesale prices on meat today were down 10 cents a pound. This morning I was offered prime ribs of choice beef at 49¾ cents a pound for the first time in years. The same cut would have cost me 90 cents a pound in the black market.

"If the OPA keeps out of the picture we will be back in business again. Let supply and demand take care of things."

The American Meat Institute, representing 350 companies in the industry, asserted that a return of price ceilings was the only hope for black-market operators to recoup their reported $10,000,000 loss since July 1, with the end of OPA.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask the Senator if this is his final hog and cow report.

Mr. WHERRY. I will say to the distinguished Senator that if OPA comes up for consideration tomorrow, I am afraid that this will be the last market report on meat and livestock, but if the Senator wishes, I can start with weather reports. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. I am sure the Senator would be as accurate with weather reports as he has been with the market reports.

REPORTS BY SENATORS ON SOURCES OF OUTSIDE INCOME

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution and make a brief statement in connection therewith.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will be received and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 306) was received and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, as follows:

Resolved, That every Member of the United States Senate shall, not later than 30 days following the date of agreement to this resolution, and on the 2d day of January of each year thereafter, file with the Secretary of the Senate a report containing a full and complete statement of—

(1) the amount and sources of all income received by such Member during the preceding year, including all fees, salaries, income from trusts or estates, and dividends received or credited to his account, and, if such income is derived from a law firm or partnership, the names of the clients of such firm or partnership from whom fees were received; and

(2) all dealings in securities or commodities by such Member, or by any person acting on behalf of, or pursuant to the direction of, such Member during the preceding year.

SEC. 2. As used in this resolution—

(1) The term "person" includes an individual, partnership, trust, estate, association, corporation, or society.

(2) The term "security" means security as defined in section 2 of the Securities Act of 1933, as amended (U. S. C., title 15, sec. 77b).

(3) The term "commodity" means commodity as defined in section 2 of the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended (U. S. C., title 7, sec. 2).

(4) The term "dealings in securities or commodities" means any acquisition, holding, withholding, use, transfer, disposition, or other transaction involving any security or commodity.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I should like to make a few brief points in support of the resolution.

First. I may say that my resolution is bottomed upon the very sound philosophical principle enunciated by Plutarch that Caesar's wife must be above suspicion. Likewise, I feel that, so far as the public's evaluation of Members of the Senate is concerned, they must be above suspicion. Hence, I think my resolution which calls for the filing with the Secretary of the Senate of all sources and amounts of senatorial income is in keeping with the public's right to know what influences may possibly be brought to bear upon Members of the Senate in the performance of their legislative duties.

Second. I know that Members of the Senate are sometimes criticized because they supplement their salaries with income from other sources. For example, I have been subjected to some criticism from constituents in Oregon because occasionally I deliver speeches for an honorarium. However, I have found that to be necessary in order to take care of a campaign deficit, all of which was not paid by the Republican Party organization.

Third. So long as such compensation is not received in connection with Government contracts or proceedings before a Government agency, it is perfectly legal and, of course, does not violate the criminal code.

It seems to me it is perfectly legal and proper for a Member of the Senate to receive supplementary income; but I also think it is perfectly proper that the voters of the country should know the source of his income.

Fourth. Compensation for outside activities is also, in most cases, entirely ethical and proper; but I believe that a record of such income of Members of this body should be on file with the Secretary of the Senate. Such a record would relieve Members of the Senate from being subjected to unjust criticism.

Fifth. I think it is clear that there is a growing feeling, especially in view of certain charges daily being made in the newspapers with regard to sources of income of certain Members of Congress, that perhaps it is common practice for Members of the Senate to receive income from such sources as are being discussed these days in the public press. I know that that is not true; nevertheless, I feel that the people of the country are entitled to have a record made of such income.

It is for this reason, I understand, that veterans attending the Des Moines convention of the American Veterans Committee inserted the following plank in the domestic platform of this young veterans' organization:

> We urge the registration by Members of Congress of their sources of income, and the registration of all dealings in securities and commodities by Members of Congress and members of their immediate families.

Mr. President, I feel that there is ample precedent for my resolution. After all, existing law requires the filing of information by Members of the Senate so far as campaign contributions are concerned, and the so-called Wherry resolution requires Senate committees to file full information with respect to borrowed personnel being paid by executive agencies. I heartily endorse and support such a requirement. We also have the practice of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and other Government agencies, of having their directors file with the agency any outside financial connections, or any outside contributions or sources of income.

Mr. President, I believe that the resolution is essentially sound on this major premise, namely, that the voters of the country are entitled to know and to have made available to them this fundamental information to help them judge whether their representatives in the Senate are serving the public interest, and whether, insofar as their official acts are concerned, they are in any way influenced or dictated to by the sources of their income.

WORLD CONTROL OF ATOMIC ENERGY—ADDRESS BY W. A. HIGINBOTHAM

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, on the 16th of July I offered for insertion in the Appendix of the RECORD an address delivered by William A. Higinbotham, chairman of the Federation of American Scientists, before the Institute on World Control of Atomic Energy. This was a most thoughtful address on a most important and pressing problem. The address was delivered at a meeting in the Interior Department over which I had the honor to preside as chairman. I received the address back from the Public Printer with the statement that it would cost $165 to print it, and calling attention to regulation No. 10 of the Joint Committee on Printing which requires the consent of the Senate in a case involving more than two printed pages. Inasmuch as atomic energy research has thus far cost us about $3,000,000,000, I think that the expenditure of $165 is well warranted. In view of the importance of the address, I now request that it be printed in the body of the RECORD, immediately following my remarks, instead of in the Appendix of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INSTITUTE ON WORLD CONTROL OF ATOMIC ENERGY—NATIONAL COMMITTEE ON ATOMIC INFORMATION

(Address by Mr. W. A. Higinbotham, chairman, Federation of American Scientists, to be delivered at morning session Tuesday, July 16, 1946, auditorium, Department of Interior)

I can think of no meeting I would rather attend on the anniversary of the Alamogordo test shot, than this Institute on World Control of Atomic Energy.

A year ago today I attended that other meeting—the gathering of scientists and military men in the New Mexico dawn. We all felt very lonely there, very special, very remote. With the world what it is and human nature what it is, we were afraid we might be bringing into being forces which the world might never master. So it is with heartfelt sentiments that I speak for my fellow scientists to welcome you here. I hope we will be able, each of us, to contribute something to this meeting. I hope at its conclusion we can all feel that the institute has contributed something to our understanding of the world in which we live—this strange new age in which we must live, or die.

It seems to me from this first year of confusion in which we did not know which way to turn, this year in which we hesitated between one course or another, that American policy must soon turn decisively down one of two roads.

As a scientist, I know that there is no foreseeable defense in science against the atomic bomb. I also know that the bomb is powerful enough and cheap enough to destroy the cities of the world. Our security must be found outside the field of invention and gadgets. To me there seem to be only two courses offering even partial hopes of security for America in the atomic age.

1. We shall ardently seek and secure a system of world cooperation under law, or

2. We must retreat as a nation into a policy of defense and decentralization.

This is the basic message of the scientists, the basic fact which brought us out of our laboratories and universities, into the political arena, which led some of us to become advisers to Senate committees, to work with diplomats in the State Department and in the councils of the United Nations. There is no foreseeable defense to stop atomic bombs and certain other weapons of mass destruction, weapons which in future wars could in a single night do as much damage to Europe's capitals as was done in 6 years of the last war.

Against such appalling facts the world cries out in wishful thinking for some easy solution. But we scientists add another basic fact to be considered in the problem, and that is that America has no lasting monopoly of atomic bomb production. In 4 years other powers can have these bombs. Our cities may be exposed to sudden death from the sky just as surely as Coventry and Berlin were exposed. Then the average man in the street will not be discussing what a bomb can do to a naval fleet, but what an atomic bomb can do to him, and to his house and to his city.

America must quit kidding itself about defenses. It must choose between a world cooperative security or drastic efforts to minimize the consequences of an atomic war.

Dr. Harold Urey, Nobel prize winner in chemistry, compared the two roads before us when he said: "There never will be a Maginot line against the limitless powers of the universe as developed by the limitless imagination of man. * * * our defense is in control * * * the safety of countries in the future, like our personal safety in cities, must rest on the law and conscience of man."

And Professor Einstein chose the same alternative: "Rifle bullets kill men, but atomic bombs kill cities. A tank is a defense against a bullet, but there is no defense in science against the weapon which can destroy civilization. Our defense is not in armaments, nor in science, nor in going underground. Our defense is in law and order."

Today, to the word of the atomic scientists has been added the word of many others. Many see the facts leading to world peace or world destruction, including military men themselves. According to a story by two well-known writers in the Saturday Evening Post, the experts of the War Department General Staff share this gloomy but realistic conclusion.

Joseph and Stewart Alsop, Washington commentators, write the amazing story of a top War Department board of experts assigned to study the implications of atomic energy. Their final conclusion was summed up in one statement, "The only sure defense of this country is now the political defense." This is one revolution in human thinking already brought about by the irresistible forces of the atomic age. The best professional soldiers now admit that adequate armed forces and military preparations, however well equipped and lavishly financed, cannot provide security for such a large and powerful Nation as the United States. "The only sure defense of this country is now the political defense."

The War Department report also discusses the possibility of dispersing our cities, of placing wartime industries underground or in caverns like Mammoth Cave. This report is not made public. However, there is made public from the White House another War Department report which does discuss these same questions of the road we must take if we do not prove successful upon the road to world cooperation and control. It is obvious that no nation can gain anything by an atomic war, even in victory, for it will be crippled for generations. But it is likewise impossible today for America to throw away her Army and Navy and say that force has disappeared as an instrument of national policy because force has now become catastrophic.

I think it is sensible realism to discuss now the questions which must be raised if attempts to secure world control fail. Furthermore, I believe this realism will show us that ideas of world cooperation which used to be considered idealism are now the coldest realism. Again I quote Einstein, world controls "are not just desirable in the name of brotherhood, they are necessary for survival."

If we do not have political and technical controls against nations of the world making bombs, we could have the largest army in the world and still not protect our cities against atomic attack.

We could have the largest air forces and the largest naval fleets in the world and still not protect our cities against atomic attack.

We shall breathe easily in an atmosphere of world trust and safety, or else we must scatter ourselves against the powers now set loose in the world. We shall give up the concept of separate nations in an atomic arms race or we shall be forced to give up the concept of cities.

This is exactly what is now proposed in the official report of the United States strategic bombing survey issued from the White House just 2 weeks ago. The average man was preoccupied that week end with the termination of OPA or the Bikini test, but the study made by the strategic bombing survey of the damage to Hiroshima and Nagasaki may ultimately mean even more to him than the removal or maintenance of price controls.

This report admits that in any case no defense could prevent appalling damage to our cities, but suggests measures which would permit the Nation to continue fighting after that first terrible surprise destruction. To this end the report speaks of "dispersal, concealment, protection, and constant readiness of * * * forces * * *."

The report states: "Though a reshaping and partial dispersal of the national centers of activity are drastic and difficult measures, they represent a social and military ideal toward which very practical steps can be taken once the policy has been laid down."

The report also suggests that "a national civilian-defense organization can prepare now the plans for necessary steps in case of crisis."

These are not the words of a hysterical fear monger. We are not dealing with astounding fiction. We are dealing with astounding fact. Failing to protect our cities, we may to a large extent have to give up our cities. This is the considered opinion of War Department experts making a survey for the guidance of the Secretary of War and the President of the United States.

Besides the civilian-defense organization, an unheard of proposal for times of peace, the report continues, two complementary programs which should be worked out in advance are those for evacuation of unnecessary inhabitants from threatened urban areas, and for rapid erection of adequate shelters for people who must remain.

This prospect of running for cover and burrowing like moles is so fantastic as to seem almost unbelievable. But it has been repeatedly discussed in private and in the bulletin of the atomic scientists. It was well brought out in the testimony of scientists before the Senate committee—but last December the public's attention was on the inquiry into Pearl Harbor and not on the prospects of a future Pearl Harbor. Again it must be discussed today as a background to a sincere and impassioned effort to bring the world to an understanding of atomic issues.

Particularly must we appreciate what such mass movements of population would mean to the free American way of life. They could not be accomplished without regimentation and discipline such as Americans have never yet tolerated. If we are to go that road, there must be intelligent planning. This would require giving up our freedom.

Our defensive frontiers are gone. So, when this report speaks of evacuation of citizens from "threatened urban areas" they are speaking of every major city in the United States. The threat will exist and will seem very real when other countries have the bomb—and the consensus of scientists places that time as about 5 years after the publication of the Smyth report. The last hours of the first year are slipping away. Four years is little time to plan any such civilian evacuations, which will bring to America larger problems than London found in shipping its children to the country.

There is no sane way of estimating the cost of such a project, for it would mean relocation of industry and disruption of our economy beyond imagination. But we had better begin to evaluate the cost. And our Government owes it to its people, having brought this bomb into existence to make clear just what it means. Do our leaders fully appreciate the alternative to world control? When Senators attack Bernard Baruch for suggesting an abrogation of our sovereignty, do they realize what failure in his mission would mean to the proud sovereignty of our cities?

Do our Government officials realize the psychological factors involved? One may dismiss as the fears of nervous people those who are now going to fortune tellers—and, according to Newsweek magazine, asking "Where can I go to be safe?" Perhaps one may dismiss the opinions of the economist Roger Babson, a man who makes his living out of studying economic trends, who is alarmed about the future of our cities, and actually now recommends investments based on property in rural areas. Perhaps one can dismiss the gloomy potentialities discussed in his newsletter for businessmen, "Atomic Service." But who can dismiss the testimony of General Arnold that the world must give up war? Who can ignore the bill recently introduced in Congress to completely replace the Government should its members be destroyed overnight? What diplomat doubts Cordell Hull's statement that peace is now as essential to civilization as air is to individual life? And what military commentator dares to question the cold-blooded recommendation of this latest report from the White House?

Even were these fears not fully confirmed by others, as an atomic scientist I watched the growing fears of scientists through the years of darkness, when the rest of the world did not know of this coming peril. I know that the longer we lived with this problem the more alarmed we became. In this case, familiarity does not breed contempt. It breeds respect.

The men who calmly watched the Bikini test changed their minds when they came close to the heart of the explosion. As men come ever closer to the heart of this problem they will share the scientists' respect for the atomic bomb. So if our international course continues along the path of an atomic arms race, we shall see a war of nerves such as history does not record. Unless we succeed in establishing world control, Government officials must plan defense and decentralization measures beyond description. I have no hesitation in predicting that if they do not, in a few years metropolitan real estate values will topple, as the average man realizes the disadvantages of living in exposed cities in an atomic age without world law. This is realism.

Viewed in contemplation of that dark road to insecurity and revolution, the road to international cooperation does not seem so dark and forbidding as before. The basic step is not to start with thinking in terms of international relations in the past. The League of Nations is gone but the world of the League of Nations is also gone. Instead of staring at the end—which is international cooperation and diplomacy, I believe we will be more successful if we start with the problem. Then we do not ask what can be done with existing machinery and the traditions and rivalries inherited from the past, from the preatomic era. We must start with atomic energy, and consider, not what would be desirable or easy of achievement or acceptable * * *, we start with the facts, and we follow the facts. In that case, I think we and the other nations of the world will find that their conclusions will consider not what might be done, but what must be done. The bomb has caused many controversies. But essentially the issues of atomic energy are the least controversial issues in the world. In the details will be endless conflicts. But they can be worked out if one looks at the clear alternatives with a clear mind.

The May-Johnson bill for control of atomic energy started at the wrong end—not with the beginners of the problem, but with the circumstances then prevailing. The Senate, however, created a special committee at the suggestion of Senator McMAHON, which decided to begin with the atom and devote itself to a thorough study of the problem in order to draft the best possible legislation.

They began with all the competent authorities on the scientific and political implications. They finished with volumes of testimony. Even today the full story of atomic energy is told in this testimony as nowhere else except in the secret archives of the Manhattan district project. When they reported out the bill, they sent with it a book which concisely gives the story behind the bill. It is interesting to note that outside of a few professor's libraries, there is nowhere in existence a bibliography such as is appended to the McMahon committee report. It is an amazing thing to come from a group of Senators. If the scientists have tried to learn something about politics, certainly they must pay great credit to those politicians who have honestly tried to learn something of science.

* * * * *

The McMahon bill is a good bill, and endorsed by scientists although there are some things in it which we think could be improved. But we are told that judged by legislative standards it is not merely good, it is a miracle. We will have many such miracles as men become familiar with the necessities of our situation.

In the field of world control, the most hopeful single step in the first year was the publication of the Acheson-Lilienthal report. It is particularly significant because of the way in which the five men composing the Lilienthal committee approached their problem. They were five men of different backgrounds and experience who had never worked together before. A Government official, a physics professor, a chemist, and two industrialists. But they realized from the start the importance of the job they had to do and the revolutionary character of the thinking before them. Instead of immediately starting with airing their opinions, they decided first to study the subject of committees. They studied the techniques of committee work because they thought it important to understand why committees so often fail.

Their conclusion was "fairly well agreed that most committees break down because many members come to their job with fully former conclusions, having almost property rights in their own ideas, and spend all their time proposing and exhorting rather than listening and considering. It was inevitable that the old system would make for a clash of personalities even more than for a clash of ideas.

"Our first joint decision, then, was to liberate all our discussions from idea-possessiveness. No point would be argued down; we agreed that we would attack the problem inductively, working from the ground up, assembling all facts pertinent to the problem as a basis for conclusions. * * * We agreed that all questions coming up were to be considered as being brought up by the group rather than by any single member."

According to one member of the Acheson-Lilienthal committee, the aim was to try to create a "collective wisdom." He said that at first it was hard to do this. "Every now and then the discussions would break down just because one of us found it difficult to get used to the science of joint thinking, and would lapse into the role of prosecutor or defendant. But little by little, the preconceived ideas dropped out; the clash of conflicting personalities became less and less apparent."

Now today in the United Nations we are seeing the clash of personalities and preconceived ideas. But if there is one message in our atomic problems which is quite clear, it is that this is a question beyond old ideas and preconceptions, a question far above personalities and even above nations. The staggering complexity of the problem of the State Department Board of Consultants is the problem of the whole world. We shall fail in the United Nations if we do not keep our minds devoted to the central facts and the main issues. But I cannot believe that the whole world and all the peoples of the world cannot be brought to the same conclusions if they are given the proper facts to consider.

We are in a revolution even more far-reaching that the industrial revolution of the early nineteenth century, and it is not possible to determine policy according to established political precepts, nor is it possible to wait and hope that a policy will form itself. We do not have that much time given to us.

Today the atomic arms race is already well under way. This is officially admitted in the report of the State Department Board of Consultants. And daily the newspapers carry stories of yet more deadly weapons being brought to perfection, of missiles traveling faster than sound, of rockets piercing the stratosphere.

International maneuvering to control sources of raw materials for bombs is hidden from view but we may be sure that behind the scenes the search for uranium is being carried out on a scale surpassing that of the Gold Rush of '49. All nations realize there is no substitute for uranium. To scientists, it is plain that the first object of the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission must be to stop the atomic arms race before it is too late. Only then will we be able to go about solving the other major problems.

But if fear beyond description grips the world, it will be impossible for peoples or nations to act with reason.

To date there has been too much emphasis on the difference between the various national proposals for world control. What is most promising is that the Big Three and the Security Council have already declared they believe atomic energy should be controlled on a world scale through the United Nations. The comparison chart recently issued by Mr. Baruch indicates the very wide area of agreement among the great powers. It is heartening, for such agreement was by no means to be taken for granted. It took a year to bring them to this meeting and our time is short, but after meeting they have sketched out an area of agreement very rapidly. Scientists believe their technique should be to build piece by piece, on common agreement, rather than to try to force each other to conclusions. The facts are forceful enough, in themselves.

It will take several years to put into operation any such organization as the Atomic Development Authority proposed by the United States. We should try to realize how complicated are the problems which must be solved. For example, it is clear that some adequate control of mines and raw materials is necessary to any plan. Before this can be fully understood, it is necessary to know where the ores of uranium and thorium can be found; how rich ores must be to be profitably mined now or in the future; how often those ores occur with other ores that are being mined by private companies, and what effect any control scheme will have on them.

There are few problems which so quickly involve so many collateral issues. The atomic bomb is a problem for everyone, and is a life and death problem for everyone. The solution of the main problem should not be obscured by the fact that it involves delicate military and diplomatic questions, and raises many issues concerning freedom of science, freedom of private enterprise, the role of science and government in society, and the problems of the machine age and technology in general. The problems are not just technical. There must be innovations and revolutionary changes in economics, international law, politics, industry, and public administration. As negotiations proceed in the United Nations, we will be quite conscious of the great gap between scientific progress and social progress.

But while we must be patient with the negotiations, and while we have a right to be hopeful because there is already so much common agreement, most scientists believe we must judge all proposals and suggestions in the light of certain definite things which must be accomplished. In the main these criteria of judgment, or standards of the minimum basic action called for in this world emergency, are to be found as the standards listed in the Acheson-Lilienthal report.

Restating the aims which the Acheson-Lilienthal report worked upon, they are essentially simple.

1. The plan must reduce to manageable proportions the problem of enforcement of an international policy against atomic warfare. In this connection they absolutely rejected the idea of a treaty outlawing the bomb, followed up by a simple inspection system to enforce the treaty. The problems of inspection of that kind are too difficult to provide real assurance.

2. The plan must provide clear and unambiguous danger signals if a nation takes steps which indicate the beginning of atomic armament. These danger signals must flash early enough to permit other nations to take appropriate action.

3. The plan must if carried out provide security, but of such a nature that if it fails it does not put any single nation in too disadvantageous position compared to other nations.

4. The plan must not be merely negative, suppressive, and police-like. The plan must be one that will tend to develop the beneficial possibilities of atomic energy, stirring the constructive and imaginative impulses of men rather than merely concentrating on the defensive and negative.

5. The plan must be able to cope with new dangers as they arise—the international atomic authority must be flexible and readily capable of extension or contraction.

6. The plan must minimize national rivalry between nations in the dangerous aspects of atomic development.

These points are stressed again and again in the Acheson-Lilienthal report, and I believe them to be extremely important. When one thinks of the beneficial powers of atomic energy which could be developed for all men's good, it does not seem that the old whipping boy of "human nature" can stand as an insuperable obstacle. They say that you cannot do this or that, because of human nature. But there is no race of human beings in the world which would not prefer the peacetime benefits of atomic energy to being vaporized in an atomic explosion. There may be something in human nature which makes some people want to engage in fist fighting and there may be a lot of personal satisfaction in a duel. But what does this have to do with dying of lingering radioactive illness a mile away from a bomb sent by an enemy 3,000 miles away? What is heroic about pushing a button? We have not changed human nature, but we have changed war. The attitude of humanity to war will therefore change.

The Atomic Development Authority, operating throughout the world, bringing peaceful uses, power plants, medical and biological research, to all people, would be the first world university, the first world industry run for the benefit of all.

What makes us think that human nature, when it understands the facts, will reject such prospects as are offered by these new powers for good, and use them only for evil? Our great concern must be to get the facts to the people, the world over, and to make an honest effort to assist all men to an understanding of the danger to all the world.

Some of what I have said must sound fantastic to the people of our own country, and some of it will sound even more fantastic to those of other countries not sharing our information. Likewise, it seemed fantastic in 1933 that Hitler would overrun all of Europe; who would have predicted Pearl Harbor? But the handwriting was on the wall.

Then we had the refugees who had seen firsthand the potentialities of fascist terror. We did not listen to them. Today I am proud to say that we have at hand the repeated warnings of the scientists, who have seen firsthand the potentialities of this terror.

For the love of humanity, help the scientists and their allies carry to the world this message of fear and this message of hope. Both the fear and the hope are based on the great realities of today.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

The following favorable report of a nomination was submitted:

By Mr. BARKLEY, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Ewin Lamar Davis, of Tennessee, to be a Federal Trade Commissioner for a term of 7 years from September 26, 1946. (Reappointment.)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of George Thomas Washington, of the District of Columbia, to be Assistant Solicitor General of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Raymond W. Starr to be United States district judge for the western district of Michigan.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

JUVENILE COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Fay L. Bentley, of the District of Columbia, to be judge of the Juvenile Court for the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Frank J. Hennessy to be United States attorney for the northern district of California.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of James M. Carter to be United States attorney for the southern district of California.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES MARSHALS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of United States marshals.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of United States marshals be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the postmaster nominations are confirmed en bloc; and without objection, the President will be notified of all confirmations of today.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 39 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, July 24, 1946, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate July 23 (legislative day of July 5), 1946:

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

Harry F. Hawley, of New York, now a Foreign Service officer of class 2 and a secretary in the diplomatic service, to be also a consul general of the United States of America.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

Ewin Lamar Davis, of Tennessee, to be a Federal Trade Commissioner for a term of 7 years from September 26, 1946. (Reappointment.)

IN THE MARINE CORPS

The following-named officers for appointment in the United States Marine Corps in the ranks hereinafter stated:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, July 23, 1946

The House met at 10 o'clock a. m.

Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., pastor of the Gunton-Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Most merciful and gracious God, in these turbulent and anxious days may we have a more radiant vision of the presence and power of the eternal Christ, who alone can redeem our humanity and reconcile all differences and discords and merge them into a joyous harmony.

Grant that we may feel the thrill and throb of a new world in the making. Give us the unconquerable assurance that there will be the dawning of a new day when men everywhere shall be bound together by the same spirit of service and sacrifice and united in one solemn and holy aspiration to fulfill the will of God.

We pray that we may count it our highest wisdom to enthrone Thy will in our own lives and our highest calling to incarnate and reproduce the spirit of our blessed Lord.

To Thy name we ascribe all the praise. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Gatling, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 225. Joint resolution to quiet the titles of the respective States, and others, to lands beneath tidewaters and lands beneath navigable waters within the boundaries of such States and to prevent further clouding of such titles.

The message also announced that the President pro tempore had appointed Mr. MILLIKIN a conferee on the part of the Senate to the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1717) entitled "An act for the development and control of atomic energy," vice Mr. AUSTIN, excused.

LAWS RELATING TO THE PHYSICALLY HANDICAPPED

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, from the Committee on Printing, I report (Rept. No. 2630) a privileged concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 160) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the handbook entitled "Laws Relating to the Physically Handicapped" be printed as a House document, and that 12,000 additional copies shall be printed for the use of the Committee on Labor of the House of Representatives.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HANDBOOK FOR SERVICEMEN

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Resolution 722.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That a revised edition of House Document No. 134, Seventy-ninth Congress, first session, entitled "Handbook for Servicemen and Servicewomen of World War II and Their Dependents, Including Rights and Benefits of Veterans of World War I and Their Dependents," with corrections restricting it to rights, benefits, and privileges of veterans of wars and their dependents, be printed as a public document.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REVIEW OF REPORTS ON PORTLAND HARBOR, MAINE

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Resolution 723.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the letter from the Secretary of War, transmitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives on May 4, 1943, including a report from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated October 26, 1942, together with accompanying papers and an illustration, on a review of reports on Portland Harbor, Maine, with a view to determining whether the removal of Soldier Lodge in Hussey Sound and certain additional shoal areas in Casco Bay, Maine, is advisable requested by resolutions of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, House of Representatives, adopted on December 3, 1941, and March 12, 1942, and subsequent correspondence in relation thereto, be printed, with an illustration, as a House document.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CHANNEL FROM PASS CAVALLO TO PORT LAVACA, TEX.

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Resolution 724.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the letter from the Secretary of War, transmitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives on February 11, 1944, including a report from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated December 10, 1943, together with accompanying papers and an illustration, on a review of reports on channel from Pass Cavallo to Port Lavaca, Tex., requested by a resolution of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, House of Representatives, adopted on January 21, 1942, and subsequent correspondence in relation thereto, be printed, with an illustration, as a House document.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SACKETS HARBOR, N. Y.

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Resolution 725.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

RAILROAD REORGANIZATION

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 687 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5924) to enable debtor railroad corporations, whose properties during a period of 7 years have provided sufficient earnings to pay fixed charges, to effect a readjustment of their financial structure without further proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit. After the passage of the bill H. R. 5924 it shall be in order in the House to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 1253 and to move to strike out all after the enacting clause of said Senate bill and insert in lieu thereof the provisions contained in H. R. 5924.

RAILROAD REORGANIZATION

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 7 minutes and later on I shall yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. Speaker, this rule makes in order the Reed railroad reorganization bill, which is intended to adjust the differences between the Hobbs bill, which we passed with only one dissenting vote, but on which the Senate did not act until a few months ago, when the Senate substituted the Wheeler bill. To adjust the differences between the Hobbs bill, passed by the House, and the Wheeler bill, passed by the Senate, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REED] introduced his bill, H. R. 5924, which was approved by the Committee on the Judiciary by an almost unanimous vote.

SAFEGUARDS INVESTORS' INTERESTS

Application for a rule on the Reed bill was made some time ago, but there were unfortunate delays until about a month ago. The bill is now before us. Evidence presented to the Rules Committee shows that this bill is absolutely necessary to safeguard the interests of thousands upon thousands of American citizens, mostly small investors, men and women who in good faith, in the belief they were following the approval and recommendation of the Interstate Commerce Commission, purchased and paid for stocks and bonds, and now have been appealing for justice because in 1934 or early 1935 shrewd railroad lawyers succeeded in obtaining from the Interstate Commerce Commission a ruling which permitted second and third mortgages and the old preferred and common stocks, which the Interstate Commerce Commission itself had authorized to be issued, to be wiped out, and completely ignored, under the guise of strengthening the mortgages.

RULING BENEFITED POWERFUL INTERESTS

This not only gave big security holders, far better able to withstand any losses than the small independent investor, preferential status, by eliminating second and third mortgage bonds and nonvoting stocks, but directly inured to the speculative benefit of railroad stock manipulators and the Wall Street financial gamblers.

This ruling was made at a time when the railroads were not in good financial position, shortly after the crash of 1929–1932, and before the country and its industries and business had begun to recover from the great crash and depression.

Today, however, conditions have changed. For the last 4 or 5 years nearly all of the railroads still in the hands of receivers or trustees have made money; they have been able not only to pay up back interest charges and declare dividends but to accrue large surpluses—in one case as much as $100,000,000.

ENACTMENT OF THIS BILL NECESSARY TO KEEP ROADS OUT OF MONOPOLISTIC CONTROL

The junior bondholders and the holders of the old common and preferred stocks feel, and I think justly, that their equities have been unfairly wiped out, and that the Interstate Commerce Commission today would not act as the Commission did in 1935.

These thousands upon thousands of small investors have appealed to us for redress, and they urge the adoption of this bill to give them an opportunity of participating in the present prosperity of the railroads—a prosperity due to the high level of business activity and not to any management brilliance by the courts and receivers and trustees.

I am informed, and the evidence shows, that if this bill should fail a few life insurance companies and Wall Street financial manipulators would acquire from a fifth to a fourth of all the railroad mileage in the United States, at the expense of the small people who sank their all in these securities at the urging of the railroads themselves.

REED BILL MERITORIOUS

Mr. Speaker, if ever there was a meritorious bill, deserving the support and vote of every well-intentioned Member, it is this bill. It takes away nothing from the railroads or anyone else. It only restores to thousands of thrifty Americans their life savings, arbitrarily erased by the Interstate Commerce Commission in earlier proceedings. In that light it is not to be wondered at that the railroads, through their lobbies, have been working for weeks trying to misinform and to prejudice Members of the House. Proponents of the bill, without vast financial resources and scores of scurrying minions, have naturally been unable to cope with that vast lobby; and the only way the rights and interests of junior bondholders and stockholders has been protected has been by the stalwart work of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REED] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS]. I want to congratulate both of these gentlemen on the tireless energy and the endless time and study they have given the problem. I know they will shortly explain more thoroughly than I possibly can the need, the urgent necessity, for this legislation.

PART OF OVER-ALL PROBLEM OF RECEIVERSHIPS

I have in my possession hundreds upon hundreds of letters from men and women, many of them widows and pensioners and retired employees who had counted upon their investments in railroad bonds and stocks to sustain them in their old age, who bought these devalued stocks and bonds. Could Members read only 1 in 20 of these touching letters they would conclude that it is their duty to vote for this bill, and disregard the clever misstatements and misrepresentations that have been made by the railroad representatives and lobbyists here.

I myself became thoroughly familiar with this problem as chairman of the special committee investigating the so-called bondholders protective committees, which, instead of protecting the rights and interests of the bondholders, used their powers of attorney for their own special interests, and for the interest of those whom they secretly represented, and against the interest of those that entrusted to them the protection of their equities. In June 1936, the Internal Revenue Service informed me in a letter that more than $11,000,000 had been recovered in taxes as a result of the investigations of my committee; and we knew that a large portion of the more than $20,000,000,000 worth of properties in the hands of "protective" committees, which might better have been called milking committees, was restored to the rightful owners.

RECEIVERS OPPOSE BILL

Naturally, the receivers of some of the railroads are opposed to this bill. I suppose they cannot be blamed, if you take into consideration the thousands and thousands and thousands of dollars the lawyers and the receivers and trustees have been milking from the railroads; they want to hold on to the teats.

If there is anything in the bill that might single out one road for special help, I want it taken out. I am not given to helping out the special interests of any railroads or receivers or trustees. In fact, I strongly urged and advocated enactment of a law that would provide one United States receiver, or conservator of bankruptcies, in all bankruptcy cases. That bill, had it been enacted, would have operated to take the railroads out of the hands of these professional receivers and trustees and their retinue of high-fee lawyers, and it is bound to come eventually. I recollect that our present Speaker helped to pass the Securities Exchange Act and to amend it since; but it still has not proved effective in really ending the unfair manipulations of the securities gamblers and the resulting losses to the public.

We passed an earlier railroad reorganization bill; but unfortunately under section 77 (b) the receivers remained; the trustees remained; and the railroads remained in the courts. Now we must pass the Reed bill, and restore these vast railroad properties to their rightful owners.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the rule under consideration is, I think, one that is easy to understand. It is the usual rule except that after conclusion of debate and the perfection of the bill it will then be in order to take up the Senate bill, which deals with the same subject matter, and substitute this bill in its place.

The reason for this kind of legislation lies in the financial difficulties in which the railroads found themselves during the depression. For many years Congress has had upon its statute books laws relating to bankruptcies, but Congress found it necessary years ago to enact a statute that pertained particularly to bankruptcies as they affect railroads.

We all understand that in the ordinary case of a bankruptcy, the person who has been declared a bankrupt surrenders his property to some trustee or officer appointed by the court. That trustee or that officer collects the estate of the bankrupt. If it was a business, the trustee continues with the business, liquidates it, winds it up, and at the conclusion of his administration pays over to the creditors in the order of their priority, the proceeds which have accumulated, and if anything is left it goes to the bankrupt himself.

A little different situation naturally must obtain as regards railroads. You cannot pull a railroad apart and sell the parts. It would not be in the public interest to do such a thing. Therefore, the Bankruptcy Act as it relates to railroads provides that when a railroad is unable to meet its current obligations it can file a petition in the district court, and the court then turns that railroad over to trustees who manage the railroad during the bankruptcy proceedings.

Now here is how the injustice develops:

After the railroad has come into the district court a plan of reorganization is promulgated, proposed by the railroad itself or by any interested parties. The Interstate Commerce Commission considers this plan and then sends that plan back to the district court for approval. In its plans so far, the Commission has drastically cut the capitalization of the railroads. And the Supreme Court has stated that the limit of capitalization, as fixed by the Commission, is in effect a determination of the value of the properties of the railroad, and that the courts have no authority to redetermine or pass judgment on that valuation. In short, we have "valuation" without judicial determination.

Let us for just a moment consider that we have here all the classes of parties interested in the reorganization of a railroad. Let us say, for instance, that those who sit on these two left sections of the House represent the common stockholders of a railroad; those who sit in these next two sections of the Chamber represent the preferred stockholders of a railroad; here, in the center sections, sit the unsecured creditors; there toward the right sit the creditors who have second-mortgage bonds; and on the extreme right are the creditors who have first-mortgage bonds and have a prior lien upon the properties of the company.

When the Interstate Commerce Commission reduces the capitalization, invariably it draws the line not down this aisle between the common and preferred stockholders; not down the center aisle, but over a little to the right. This means that all on the left of that line are wiped out. It means that all the common stockholders, the preferred stockholders, and a large part of the creditors are wiped out of the picture and from that time on have no participation in the plan. They are not given any opportunity to vote upon the plan, and they receive none of the assets.

I have in mind a particular instance that is very clear to me because the railroad in question goes through my home town. I know men and women, neighbors of mine, who for years cherished their stock in the Chicago & North Western Railway, a railroad that since 1864 never missed paying dividends to its stockholders. Then when the depression came on, this railroad, like most of the large systems, was unable to meet is current interest charges.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. REED of Illinois. The North Western went into bankruptcy, and as a result the common and the preferred stockholders were entirely wiped out, $40,000,000 of unsecured creditors were wiped out, and the railroad itself was turned over to the senior and junior creditors, who now own the railroad. At the time when it was turned over, it had in its treasury over $100,000,000 in cash that had accumulated during the time that it was in the hands of a trustee. The $100,000,000, like all the other assets, went with the railroad, and as a result within 6 months after that railroad had been reorganized and the new owners had taken charge a dividend was authorized, and each of the new preferred stockholders received $20 for each share of stock, and every share of common stock received a dividend of $5—a total sum sufficient to have allowed for a settlement with all the old preferred stockholders and still leave something in the pot for the common stockholders.

I want to prevent that sort of thing, which has happened over and over again.

Let me give you just one example: Let us look at the Cotton Belt Railroad. The Commission valued that railroad at $75,000,000. It found all the securities of this railroad in excess of this valuation to be worthless and not entitled to receive any of the new securities. The old securities, held to be valueless, and thus wiped out, were $19,000,000 of preferred stock, $17,000,000 of common, and $8,000,000 of creditors' claims. The road went into reorganization under section 77. Then what happened? In the 4½ years from 1941 to June 1945, it earned interest on all the old bonds each year and a total of $30,000,000 besides—almost half what the Commission said the whole railroad was worth. That money is in the till. These earnings amounted to $148 a share on the wiped-out preferred stock and $146 a share on the wiped-out common stock. This was after the railroad had paid $21,398,000 in excess-profit taxes in 1944 and $14,000,000 in excess-profit taxes in 1945. These taxes alone, the excess-profit taxes, equaled $175 per share on the preferred stock, or $200 a share on the common stock. In other words, after one arm of the Government declared the stocks of the St. Louis-Southwestern Railroad worthless in 1941, another arm took out this property in cash, for excess profits alone, an amount equal to the entire par value of the stocks declared to be worthless. That is just one example.

What is the reason for this? Well, the Supreme Court some years ago, in construing a statute passed by this Congress, said that the Interstate Commerce Commission had the sole function of determining the value of any of these railroads and that a court could not review the Commission's estimate of the value. When courts have attempted to review these valuations, the Supreme Court has said, quoting from its former decision, that that is the law and that only Congress can change the law.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. REED of Illinois. Only 2 or 3 weeks ago, in the Denver & Rio Grande Western case, Mr. Justice Reed, speaking for the majority of the Supreme Court, reversed the circuit court of appeals, which had ordered sent back to the Commission the plan of reorganization of the Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad because it was unfair and inequitable.

Mr. Justice Reed said:

> Our constructions of the chief provisions of the section were handed down in March 1943. Although the results of reorganizations under the section, as thus construed, have been criticized as unfortunate and changes have been suggested, no different legislation has been enacted.

And there he gives in a footnote to his opinion, quotations from the very report that you have in your hands on this particular bill. The Justice also refers to the fact that the McLaughlin Act, which was passed by Congress in 1939, was allowed by this Congress to lapse, and Congress has not extended it. "This situation," says Justice Reed, "leaves clear the duty of the agencies of the Government entrusted with the handling of reorganizations under section 77, including this Court, to administer its provisions according to their best understanding" as previously given.

So he throws the ball right back into the hands of Congress, and he says you are the only persons who can relieve this situation. You have attempted to do so already. Some time ago, in 1939, you passed the McLaughlin Act. Last fall the Kefauver bill to renew the McLaughlin Act was passed in this House by unanimous vote. You passed the Hobbs bill in February 1945 with only one dissenting vote. The Senate has passed the Wheeler bill unanimously. If this legislation is passed, and it goes to conference, all four of those bills will come before the conferees, and it will give them an opportunity to pick the very best parts of each of them and bring back to this House and to the Senate a bill that will effectively relieve this intolerable situation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REED], has again expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS].

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I assume that, in the main, the mechanics of this bill and of the whole reorganization procedure are generally understood. I believe it was in 1933, legislation emanated from the Committee on the Judiciary, seeking to deal with bankrupt railroads somewhat differently from the way ordinary bankrupts are dealt with. That bill became known as section 77. In 1939 there was the Chandler Amendatory Act, and in 1942 the McLaughlin Act. Later there came the bills by Mr. HOBBS, Mr. KEFAUVER, and Mr. REED. It is the Reed bill which is being submitted for your consideration. The security holders are opposed to this proposed legislation. At least very largely.

The earnings of the railroad companies during the past 7 years have been very much higher than they were during the years which resulted in most of these railroads going into receivership.

This bill is for the purpose of submitting to the judgment of the House whether the processes of reorganization be suspended while a reexamination be made with regard to railroads which have made the net earnings specified in the bill during the period specified. The Committee on the Judiciary has the bill here, the rule is pending, and I appear here as chairman of the committee under a rule which obtains in our committee, asking the House to vote up this rule so that it may consider this proposed legislation.

I believe that is about all that is to be said with reference to this rule which the House is respectfully being asked to approve.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TALBOT].

Mr. TALBOT. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the rule in the Reed bill and to the bill itself.

This bill attempts to protect railroad stockholders, no matter how worthless the stock may be at the expense of bondholders and creditors who are to go partially unpaid for their benefit.

This legislation is class legislation which can make fortunes for fly-by-night speculators in worthless railroad stock.

In the case of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co. the company has approximately $64,000,000 to pay a total indebtedness to creditors and bondholders of more than $102,000,000. Already a plan has been submitted in reorganization, which plan has been approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission and also by the Federal District Court for the District of Connecticut.

After 11 years under bankruptcy the New Haven Railroad was about to come out of bankruptcy under its reorganization plan. The present bill will hold up these proceedings for an additional number of years; in any event, at least an additional 18 months. No possible good can come from this bill so far as the New Haven Railroad is concerned. It will simply delay reorganization for another long period of time.

Mr. Speaker, a vast amount of stock in these railroads is now in the hands of Wall Street, Boston, and Chicago brokerage houses. In the event this bill passes they are the ones who will benefit and they will benefit at the expense of our savings banks and our insurance companies who have invested in the bonds of these railroads. If this is, as claimed, a question and fight between Wall Street and Main Street, it would be well to see which end of the tail Wall Street is holding.

In my opinion, this bill should be defeated.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER].

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, let us not have any misunderstanding about what is proposed to be done here today. This rule makes in order the consideration of a bill that was reported by the Judiciary Committee weeks before the completion of the final work on the bill. Nobody has seen this committee print. As a matter of fact, members of the Judiciary Committee were told that they could not see it. People vitally interested in the securities held by savings banks and insurance companies were informed that this measure was never printed 3 days after it was printed.

I just do not like this atmosphere of suspicion around this measure. If you will remember the provisions of the rule, you will find that it is in order to substitute the Wheeler bill for this bill, a bill that was never considered by any committee of the House of Representatives, and, significantly enough, the rule was granted on this bill a day or two after the Senate passed the Wheeler bill.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield.

Mr. SABATH. Is it not a fact it will make in order the House bill in lieu of the Senate bill? And the rule provides that we should consider——

Mr. WALTER. Oh, yes; I know exactly what the rule provides.

Mr. SABATH. It is a substitute for the House bill.

Mr. WALTER. I understand that.

Mr. Speaker, this is what will happen if the rule is adopted and this bill is passed. A conference committee composed of members of the Judiciary Committee of the House and the Commerce Committee of the Senate will write the bill. It just seems to me to be wrong to permit that to happen because, after all, the bill that will be finally considered by this House contains two other measures referred to the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate and because of what that committee considered good and valid reasons it refused to consider the House bill.

We are going to find ourselves in the anomalous position of being called upon to act on a conference report in the closing few days of this Congress that will contain a law that we must either vote up or down. Who will know what is in that? Frankly, I do not know what is in this judiciary bill right now and it seems to me that if we are going to do those things that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REED] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], talked about, we ought to introduce the kind of a bill and consider it in its entirety so that these insurance companies and savings banks may have the right to be heard.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REED] talked about the earnings of these railroads. In the past seven lush years of the operation of these roads they have been in default $1,240,000,000 in interest and carrying charges. There is nothing to be gained by enacting this legislation today. These roads are in receivership at the present time. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], spoke about the cost of the receiverships, but let me say to you that in the case of the Missouri Pacific, for example, the salary of the president was $150,000 a year before receivership. When the receivers took over that salary was reduced to $35,000 and the salaries of all the other officials were reduced accordingly. So that it cost less in receivership to operate that road than it did before.

It cost less to operate the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad in receivership than it did before. Our committee was told that the New York, New Haven & Hartford had about $64,000,000 in cash. Yes, certainly they did, but they owe $102,000,000. What is going to happen to the $64,000,000 if the debts of the road are paid?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, who are these little stockholders that the distinguished gentleman from Illinois has been shedding tears over? I do not know who they are in the case of all the roads affected, but let me read to you a certified list of the stockholders of the New York, New Haven & Hartford, the people who will take over the ownership and operation of that road:

Pennsylvania Railroad, 205,900 shares.

Pennroad, 14,700 shares.

Francis I. du Pont Co., 32,750 shares.

Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Beane, 27,300 shares.

Then we come to this very significant fact:

Frederick Hatch Co., 63 Wall Street, New York City, 20,180 shares bought this year.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman state to the House just how many subsidiaries of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. have been cornering and garnering the shares during the last year?

Mr. WALTER. One of the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission told me on yesterday that Kuhn, Loeb & Co. bought, either for themselves or for somebody else, every share of stock that has been sold this year in the New York, New Haven & Hartford.

Mr. Speaker, there is nothing to be lost by deferring action on this hybrid legislation. I do not feel like entrusting the writing of a bill to conferees when, after the conference report has been filed, nobody will know what it does to the investments of the savings banks and of the insurance companies of this Nation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, our esteemed colleague on the Committee on the Judiciary who voted for the favorable report of the Reed bill says he does not know what is in it now. The same thing is in it now that was in it when it was unanimously reported favorably by the Committee on the Judiciary except that there have been nine committee amendments approved by the committee which have been set forth in the committee print.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] says it was a "hush-hush" document. Well, it was debated for hours in the full Committee on the Judiciary and there was not a single vote against any one of the nine amendments.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. WALTER. The gentleman is mistaken, because most of those amendments were adopted by a majority of one.

Mr. HOBBS. I refer to the record. I stand on the statement I made, and I challenge any proof whatsoever of the statement just made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

It is true that the New Haven, that railroad that has $64,000,000 in the till to the credit of the common and preferred stockholders which is utterly wiped out by the plan of reorganization—at the instance of the trustees of the New Haven who, under their oaths of office are supposed to be neutral and represent all classes of investors including the common and preferred stockholders that were wiped out completely, now come in with an amendment that they wrote and have introduced in the Committee on the Judiciary to leave them out. They do not want to be reorganized, because if the reorganization plan that has been promulgated stands, then every dollar of the poor folks' investment in their common and prefererd stock goes, with all else, to the bondholders.

I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania said that there were 47 of them, and he read here a certified list of the stockholders, common and preferred, of the New Haven, but he neglected to tell you that that was taken from the report which the Interstate Commerce Commission requires ever so often, I think annually, from every railroad, which report only requires the first 30 large stockholders. They do not require and never saw the list of people we are talking for.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I will be delighted to yield.

Mr. WALTER. The gentleman has stated it contained but 30 names. This is the certified record, not from the Interstate Commerce Commission, but from the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, of the 50 principal stockholders of that road.

Mr. HOBBS. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I thought it was the report they were required to make to the ICC of the first 30. They now have 50. But it does not say a word about the 21,000 little folks, some 7,000 of them widows or orphans, that we are speaking for. Of course, they have 50 stockholders, and they have been buying up more. It is one of the grandest steals that this country has ever seen. Railroad reorganization that we have been fighting for for 12 years, since Walter Chandler became chairman of this subcommittee on bankruptcy has become prostitued for purposes of private gain.

They are selling now every day stocks that have no value, for which nothing is paid, and which they please to call "when issued" new stock under the plan of reorganization. Of course, none of the favored few who are let in on the ground floor have paid anything for this "when issued" stock.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I gladly yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. ERVIN. May I ask the gentleman from Alabama if keeping a railroad in receivership instead of turning it back to the common stockholders for operation does not make it possible for the big bankers to gobble up the stock of the small stockholders?

Mr. HOBBS. Of course, that is exactly what is happening, and I am explaining how. They are selling what they call "when issued" stocks. Some of these reorganizations will not stand the light of day. The big manipulators know that when they wipe out every dollar of common stock, every dollar of preferred stock, when they wipe out the holdings in the New Haven of 21,000 stockholders of that kind plus the 50 Mr. WALTER is talking about, they cannot stand the light of day, so what do they do? They said, "We will give you a bonus. We will let you in on a sure thing. You pay nothing unless you win. Our free warrant will entitle you to buy 'when issued' stock if and when the plan of reorganization becomes effective. If you cannot 'make a killing,' you do not have to exercise your option. It is just that simple—you cannot lose."

The members of the Interstate Commerce Commission are able and estimable, gentlemen. They are expert. They are honest. But they are not infallible. They guessed wrong back in the booming twenties when stock and bond prices knew no upward limits, and when the boom burst, they got scared. The Honorable SAM RAYBURN, now the beloved Speaker of this House, as a Member, in 1920 stood in this well—and we frequently quote in our committee the speech he then made—saying that under 20 (a) of the bill then being sponsored by him, the Interstate Commerce Commission was required to certify before a dollar of any kind of stock or bonds could be issued that the issuance would be in the interest of the public. Every single share in reorganization today has been issued under that certificate from the Interstate Commerce Commission. Now, in their plans of rail reorganizations, they seem to be as sure of the worthlessness of that stock as they were, in the predepression era, of its value and public benefit.

Of course the Interstate Commerce Commission is honest. They believe what they certify. No one questions that, but we plead with those gentlemen: "For God's sake, if you mean to restore railroad credit, and we will need it in the years to come, do not wipe out the little fellows, do not arbitrarily say that the stock that they hold is worthless. You once thought it was good, and that its issuance would be in the public interest. Please let them hold what they have, though it may not be worth as much now as it once was. It may come back. If there be a chance, please let them have it."

As has been truly said before, this is the same old fight of the unscrupulous in Wall Street against Main Street. The rule applies that Portia pleaded in the case that she tried in the Merchant of Venice. Paraphrasing: "You shall have your bond. Your bond gives you a pound of flesh but not one drop of blood." So what we say to the opponents of this bill: "You shall have your bond. Your bond guarantees your loan—principal and interest. That is your due, your right. The preservation of railway credit requires no less. But you should not get that and the railway, too." What does the Reed bill say? The Reed bill says that no road can come under it that has not produced average annual earnings during the preceding 7 years sufficient to pay the fixed charges during those years.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am delighted to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am greatly interested in one of the roads that the gentleman has mentioned. I wish I were in proper fettle to talk about it. But I would remind the House with reference to the profits that are made by going into bankruptcy that there ought to be a clause such as you and I might have if we were going into business that when we fail we should share the profits equally.

Mr. HOBBS. The gentleman may be right—he frequently is.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I would be delighted to yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. WALTER. The gentleman has indicated the small stockholders of these roads can get something out of these earnings. Can the gentleman tell me how, if the New York, New Haven & Hartford owes $102,000,000 and had $63,000,000 in cash, how the small stockholder or any other stockholder is going to get a cent? And if that is the fact, then is not the only thing in issue here the control of the road?

Mr. HOBBS. I wish we could base this fight on the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad. I am glad to answer the gentleman's question. Of course, we do not have the time now to go into details, but I am glad to answer the gentleman's question. When the Interstate Commerce Commission certified that the holders of common and preferred stock—and there are 1,500,000 shares of stock involved there that are being wiped out and not 300,000—you are still talking about your 50 big holders—they do not hold the majority of the stock; it is the little fellow, the men who have gone in the cabs of those engines and who have invested every dollar of their savings for years in that prime stock of the New York, New Haven & Hartford that has paid dividends for 50 years—they are the ones who own it. Now I will answer your question as to how they hope to get anything out of it. When the ICC declared worthless every dollar invested in common and preferred stock of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, there was $4,000,000 in the till at that time.

Mr. WALTER. Yes; but I would like to call attention to the fact that $4,000,000 was not enough to pay even the liabilities because of accidents on the road.

Mr. HOBBS. If the gentleman will excuse me, I want to make my own speech.

There was at that time $4,000,000 to the credit of the stock in the till of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad after paying every bondholder who had a due date and every bondholder was paid every dollar of interest and having paid all the increased operating costs and everything else. They said it was worthless and that it had no hope of coming back and that the earnings of the war years were unusually and abnormally high and could not be considered although by the law we wrote in the Chandler Act we said they should do so as our experts.

Now, after 7 years and more, when the New Haven, that was worthless, certified worthless in 1940, has paid 3.4 times over all of the fixed charges and has accumulated in that till to the credit of the common and preferred stockholders $64,000,000, they still say it is worthless. I say that they were wrong then, they are wrong now, and if they do not owe but $102,000,000, they are lucky, because this case history gives them a guaranty of payment if you enact the pending bill into law.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] has again expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. HOBBS. If you enact this bill into law with the amendments added, the Hobbs bill and the McLaughlin bill, under which the Baltimore & Ohio has been reorganized twice, we will write a bill taking the best of the four, and if you, like the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] do not want to trust the conferees to do that job, then do not give us the rule. Vote down the rule and kill the bill, and who is hurt? Not any member of our subcommittee, not any member of our full committee. They have investigated us through private detectives for seven long years, and we do not own a dime's worth of stock. It will be "no skin off of our backs," but it would kill railway credit and cost Main Street $2,000,000,000.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has again expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JENNINGS].

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this rule. The Committee on the Judiciary of this House, considered this bill, H. R. 5924, word by word, line by line, and paragraph by paragraph.

I am somewhat amazed at the rather excited manner in which the gentleman from Pennsylvania voiced his opposition to the granting of this rule and to the provisions of this bill. A change seems to have come over the spirit of his dreams since we considered this bill in committee, of which he and I are members. He was as unruffled and as placid as a summer sea when we considered it as members of the Judiciary Committee. No such vehement objection was voiced by him to this bill or to any provision of the bill.

This bill simply provides with reference to these railroads that are in the hands of receivers, in the hands of trustees in bankruptcy, if upon the enactment of this measure any one of them can show to a United States district court judge that for a period of 7 years that railroad has been operated by a trustee in bankruptcy and has met all of its obligations in the ordinary course of business as they have accrued and become due, then, for a period of 18 months, and a longer period, if necessary, under the supervision of a United States district judge, the various security holders, stock holders, and parties in interest may submit a plan of reorganization.

If the plan proposed meets the approval of the court as just and fair to all interested parties, then it goes to the Interstate Commerce Commission to pass upon the sort of securities with which it is refinanced.

I say to you that I am in accord with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS], on this matter. In my opinion this is a fight between Main Street and Wall Street, and this proposed measure will restore these railroads to their owners and to operation by their owners. I believe the rule should be adopted and the measure considered on its merits.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 5½ minutes.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I asked and obtained unanimous consent to speak out of order because I want to take this opportunity to express myself on the conference report on price control legislation which will be before this body in a short time, in the space of an hour or so.

In the very beginning I wish to take this opportunity to congratulate my colleagues on the conference committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] and the gentleman from Ohio, Dr. SMITH, for having the good judgment, the common sense, and the courage to refuse to sign this conference report which contains, of course, the administration's compromise price control bill.

No one should vote for this legislative monstrosity blindly or without giving careful thought and consideration as to what is offered him.

A vote for this mongrel bill is a vote to put American free enterprise back into the shackles and strait-jackets of bureaucracy and regimentation, for it gives broad and complete dictatorial powers to a few individuals who are in no way directly responsible to the American people.

A vote for this conglomeration of legislative errors means a vote to put 30,000 political pap-suckers back on the pay roll and into the coming fall campaign.

A vote for this ill-conceived legislative measure is a vote for the return of scarcity, a vote for higher prices next November and December, a vote for the return of the black market, and a vote for fattening the pocketbooks of the favored few.

A vote for this compromise price control bill is a vote against reconversion, a vote for inflation, and a vote in favor of a bigger and quicker "bust."

A vote for this bill is a vote to confound confusion and to bring on greater chaos. It is a vote against the American way of life and another step toward state socialism.

I hope that when the time comes this body will have the courage—and will demonstrate its faith in the free enterprise system—to vote this conference report down.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS. One of the most difficult problems under this bill will be the control committee. What kind of people will administer this order?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I have heard it suggested that probably this special decontrol committee to be set up under this bill may be comprised of Chester Bowles, Leon Henderson, and someone from the Political Action Committee, or, perhaps, even less qualified appointees.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY].

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I do not know yet how I am going to vote upon this rule or bill because frankly I have not had sufficient time to study the bill. However, I would like to know why in the closing days of this Congress legislation of this character is brought to the floor when such bills as the Wagner-Ellender housing bill and the wage-hour bill are still bottled up in committees. I think it is a sad commentary upon this Congress when there is so little interest displayed in legislation which is really for the benefit of the majority of the American citizens and we are adjourning without doing anything to implement those measures into law.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, the two bills referred to by the gentleman are still in committee and the Rules Committee cannot bring in a rule on either of them. I assure the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY] I would be more than pleased to bring in rules on both of those bills.

Mr. Speaker, all I want to say on the rule is that the Interstate Commerce Commission authorized the issuance of these bonds and stocks. Then back in 1935 or thereabouts some gentlemen came in and said, "This is the time to wipe them out because it is suitable to us and can be done easily," and so on the clever misrepresentations of the railroad spokesmen, on the pretense they were wringing out the watered stock, but actually to benefit the big insurance companies and the railroad banking magnates by reducing the liabilities, these bonds and stocks were simply struck out of consideration by a callous bookkeeping entry.

I am not speaking for the railroads or the receivers or the lawyers who have drawn hundreds of thousands of dollars in fees. I am speaking for the hundreds of thousands of small investors who bought their stock on the implied recommendation of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which is now trying to wipe them out. As I remember this matter, the ICC has a formula for determining the financial status of railroads that is not satisfactory to many. It holds that past earnings are not a safe guide as to financial ability, because they have been too low, and present earnings are not a safe guide as to financial ability, because they are abnormally high.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker being in doubt, the House divided; and there were—ayes 120, noes 79.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and fifty-three Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EMERGENCY PRICE CONTROL ACT, 1942

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 371) extending the effective period of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand, the situation is such that under the rules there would ordinarily be 1 hour of debate on the conference report. In view of the fact that the House has never considered this measure and that the conference report has been made available to the Members only this morning, I wonder if we could not agree upon perhaps 3 hours of debate before a vote is taken.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, this subject has been debated at length. I think the issue is very clear and I certainly do not see any reason for 3 hours of debate.

Mr. McGLINCHEY. Mr. Speaker, I object to any extension of time.

The SPEAKER. There has been no request for an extension of time. The question before the House is the request of the gentleman from Kentucky that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Do I correctly understand, Mr. Speaker, that if objection is made to the reading of the statement in lieu of the report, that in that case the joint resolution will be read and then the statement will be read?

The SPEAKER. If the request made by the gentleman from Kentucky is objected to, then the conference report will be read.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If objection is made to that request, will the resolution be read and then the statement be read?

The SPEAKER. The conference report will be read. The only thing before the House now is the conference report.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In view of the fact that there is no additional time, and it is apparent that no additional time will be granted, I think the Members should have an opportunity to read the joint resolution or hear it read. For that reason, I object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 371) extending the effective period of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That section 1 (b) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by striking out 'June 30, 1946' and substituting 'June 30, 1947'.

"SEC. 2. Section 6 of the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by striking out 'June 30, 1946' and substituting 'June 30, 1947'.

"SEC. 3. Title I of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by inserting after section 1 thereof a new section as follows:

"'PURPOSES AND POLICIES IN THE TRANSITION PERIOD

"'SEC. 1A. (a) OBJECTIVES.—The Congress hereby affirms—

"'(1) that because of abnormally excess spending power in relation to the presently available supply of commodities, rapid attainment of production equal to the public demand is one of the necessary and urgent objectives for the prevention of inflation and for the achievement of a reasonable stability in the general level of prices and rents, cost of living and costs of production (including labor costs), for the purposes set forth in section 1 of this Act and for the further purposes of protecting the real value of benefits provided by law for veterans and their dependents, of keeping faith with purchasers of United States War Bonds, and of making possible a successful transition to a peacetime economy of maximum employment, production, and purchasing power under a system of free enterprise;

"'(2) that unnecessary or unduly prolonged controls over prices and rents and use of subsidies would be inconsistent with the return to such a peacetime economy and would tend to repress and prevent the attainment of this and the other goods herein declared; and

"'(3) that adequate prices are necessary stimulants to the production thus desired and the expeditious attainment of said goals.

"'(b) Declaration of decontrol policy: Therefore, it is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress that the Office of Price Administration, and other agencies of the Government, shall use their price, subsidy, and other powers to promote the earliest practicable balance between production and the demand therefor of commodities under their control, and that the general control of prices and the use of subsidy powers shall, subject to other specific provisions of this Act, be terminated as rapidly as possible consistent with the policies and purposes set forth in this section and in no event later than June 30, 1947, and on that date the Office of Price Administration shall be abolished.

"'(c) Recommendations by the President to the Congress: (1) As soon as practicable after the enactment of this section and in any event on or before January 15, 1947, the President shall recommend to the Congress such further legislation as in his judgment is needed to establish monetary, fiscal, and other policies which are adequate to supplement the control of prices and wages during the balance of the fiscal year 1947, and to insure that general control of prices and wages can be terminated by the end of that fiscal year without danger of inflation thereafter.

"'(2) On or before April 1, 1947, the President shall report to the Congress what, if any, commodities or classes of commodities, including housing accommodations, are in such critically short supply as to necessitate, in his judgement, the continuance of the powers granted by this Act as to them after June 30, 1947, together with his recommendations as to esablished departments or agencies of the Government (other than the Office of Price Administration) which should be charged with the administration of such powers.

"'(d) Decontrol of nonagricultural commodities: (1) On or before December 31, 1946, the Administrator shall decontrol all nonagricultural commodities not important in relation to business costs or living costs, and prior to that date shall proceed with such decontrol as rapidly as, in his judgment, will be consistent with the avoidance of a cumulative and dangerous unstabilizing effect. In no event shall maximum prices be maintained after December 31, 1946, for any nonagricultural commodity or class of commodities unless the same has been expressly found by the Administrator to be important in relation to business costs or living costs.

"'(2) The Administrator shall provide for the prompt removal of maximum prices in the case of any nonagricultural commodity whenever the supply thereof exceeds or is in approximate balance with the demand therefor (including appropriate inventory requirements).

"'(3) Whenever, after a reasonable test period, it appears that the supply of a nonagricultural commodity which has been decontrolled is no longer consistent with the applicable decontrol standard, the Administrator, with the advance consent in writing of the Price Decontrol Board established under subsection (h), shall reestablish such maximum prices for the commodity, consistent with applicable provisions of law, as in his judgment may be necessary to effectuate the purposes of this Act. The supply of a nonagricultural commodity shall be deemed inconsistent with the applicable decontrol standard in any case where the prices of the commodity have risen to and after a reasonable test period remain at unreasonable and inflationary levels.

"'(4) Nothing contained in this Act shall be construed to authorize the Administrator to impose or maintain price controls with respect to petroleum or petroleum products processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from petroleum, except that, after August 20, 1946, maximum prices with respect thereto may be reestablished pursuant to the provisions of paragraph (3) of this subsection (d), but only under the standards prescribed in paragraph (8) (C) of subsection (e).

"'(e) AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES.—(1) On the first day of the first calendar month which begins more than thirty days after the date of enactment of this section, the Secretary of Agriculture shall certify to the Price Administrator each agricultural commodity which such Secretary determines to be in short supply. Thereafter, on the first day of each succeeding calendar month the Secretary shall certify modifications of such certification by adding other agricultural commodities which have become in short supply and by removing from such certification such commodities which he determines are no longer in short supply. No maximum price shall be applicable with respect to any agricultural commodity during any calendar month which begins more than thirty days after the date of enactment of this section, unless such commodity is certified to the Price Administrator under this paragraph as being in short supply.

"'(2) (A) Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture determines that maximum prices applicable to any agricultural commodity which is in short supply are impeding the necessary production of such commodity, he may recommend to the Price Administrator such adjustments in such maximum prices as the Secretary determines to be necessary to attain the necessary production of such commodity.

"'(B) The Secretary of Agriculture by December 31, 1946, shall recommend to the Price Administrator the removal of maximum prices on all agricultural commodities, whether or not in short supply, not important in relation to business costs or living costs, and prior to that date shall make such recommendations as rapidly as, in his judgment, will be consistent with the avoidance of a cumulative and dangerous unstabilizing effect.

"'(C) Within ten days after the receipt of any recommendation under this subsection for the adjustment of maximum prices applicable to any agricultural commodity, or for the removal of maximum prices on agricultural commodities not important in relation to business costs or living costs, the Price Administrator shall adjust or remove such maximum prices in accordance with such recommendations.

"'(3) Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture determines that an agricultural commodity with respect to which maximum prices have been removed is in short supply and that the reestablishment of maximum prices with respect thereto is necessary to effectuate the purposes of this Act, the Secretary, with the written consent of the Price Decontrol Board, may recommend to the Administrator, and the Administrator shall establish, such maximum prices with respect to such commodity, consistent with applicable provisions of law, as in the judgment of the Secretary are necessary to effectuate the purposes of this Act.

"'(4) For the purposes of this section (except subparagraph (6) of this subsection (d))—

"'(A) an agricultural commodity shall be deemed to be in short supply unless the supply of such commodity equals or exceeds the requirements for such commodity for the current marketing season;

"'(B) the term "agricultural commodity" shall be deemed to mean any agricultural commodity and any food or feed product processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity; and

"'(C) the term "subsidy" means any subsidy or purchase and sale operations described in the last paragraph of section 2 (e) of this Act.

"'(5) Notwithstanding any other provision of this or any other law, except as provided in subsection (h), the Secretary of Agriculture, in exercising his functions under this Act, shall not be subject to the direction or control of any other appointive officer or agency in the executive branch of the Government, and no such officer or agency shall undertake to exercise any direction or control over the Secretary of Agriculture with respect to the exercise of such functions. The Secretary of Agriculture may at any time withdraw his approval of any action with respect to which his approval is required under this Act, and upon the withdrawal of his approval such action shall be rescinded.

"'(6) No maximum price and no regulation or order under this Act or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, shall be applicable with respect to any agricultural commodity, or any service rendered with respect to any agricultural commodity, unless a regulation or order establishing a maximum price with respect to such commodity had been issued under this Act prior to April 1, 1946.

"'(7) No maximum price and no regulation or order under this Act or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, shall be applicable with respect to poultry or eggs or food or feed products processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part therefrom, or in the case of leaf tobacco or tobacco products processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part therefrom, except that, after August 20, 1946, maximum prices with respect thereto may be reestablished pursuant to the provisions of paragraph (3) of this subsection (e), but only under the standards prescribed in paragraph (8) (C) of this subsection (e).

"'(8) (A) No maximum price and no regulation or order under this Act or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, shall be applicable prior to August 21, 1946, with respect to livestock, milk, or food or feed products processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from livestock or milk; with respect to cottonseed or soybeans, or food or feed products processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from cottonseed or soybeans; with respect to grains for which standards have been established under the United States Grain Standards Act, as amended, or any livestock or poultry feed processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part therefrom.

"'(B) The Price Decontrol Board shall proceed forthwith to consider whether the commodities listed in subparagraph (A) shall continue, after August 20, 1946, to be free from regulation under this Act and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended. Such Board, after due notice of a public hearing and full opportunity for representatives of affected industries and consumers to present their views orally or in writing, shall have power to determine whether or not any commodity listed in subparagraph (A) shall be regulated after August 20, 1946, under this Act and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended. Such Board shall direct that any such commodity shall not be so regulated unless it finds:

"'(i) that the price of such commodity has risen unreasonably above a price equal to the lawful maximum price in effect on June 30, 1946, plus the amount per unit of any subsidy payable with respect thereto as of June 29, 1946, and

"'(ii) that such commodity is in short supply and that its regulation is practicable and enforceable, and

"'(iii) that the public interest will be served by such regulation.

"If in the case of any commodity listed in subparagraph (A) such Board fails to direct, on or before August 20, 1946, that such commodity shall not be regulated under this Act and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, maximum prices and regulations and orders under such Acts shall be applicable with respect to such commodity without regard to this paragraph (8).

"'(C) If in the case of any commodity listed in subparagraph (A) such Board, on or before August 20, 1946, does direct that such commodity shall not be regulated under such Acts, the Board may at any subsequent time direct that such commodity shall be so regulated if it finds:

"'(i) that the price of such commodity has risen unreasonably above a price equal to the lawful maximum price in effect on June 30, 1946, plus the amount per unit of any subsidy payable with respect thereto as of June 29, 1946; and

"'(ii) that such commodity is in short supply and that its regulation is practicable and enforceable; and

"'(iii) that the public interest will be served by such regulation.

Thereafter, the provisions of such Acts and regulations and orders thereunder shall be applicable with respect to such commodity without regard to this paragraph (8).

"'(D) In the case of milk, the Board may consider and determine decontrol or recontrol on a regional basis.

"'(9) The Price Decontrol Board shall also have power to determine, when maximum prices are in effect with respect to any commodity listed in paragraph (8) (A), whether any subsidy or any part thereof in effect prior to June 30, 1946, shall be reestablished in whole or in part; and the powers of the Administrator, the Commodity Credit Corporation, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to pay subsidies in connection with such commodity shall be limited in accordance with any order of the Board.

"'(10) Whenever maximum prices are in effect for any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any commodity listed in paragraph (8) (A) with respect to which maximum prices are not in effect, no maximum price, and no margin, mark-up, or discount, shall be maintained with respect to such processed or manufactured commodity which does not return to the processors, manufacturers, and distributors thereof (A) the raw material cost (which must be computed at least once every 60 days at not less than the current cost), (B) the conversion or distribution cost, and (C) a reasonable profit.

"'(f) SAVING PROVISION.—Nothing in this section shall limit the Administrator's authority to remove maximum prices for any nonagricultural commodity, or any agricultural commodity with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, at an earlier time than would be required by this section, if in his judgment or in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture, as the case may be, such action would be consistent with the purposes of this section.

"'(g) PETITIONS FOR DECONTROL.—(1) If in the judgment of the industry advisory committee appointed by the Administrator in accordance with section 2 (a) of this Act to advise and consult with respect to a commodity, the standards set forth in this section require the removal of maximum prices for such commodity, it may file a petition for the removal of such maximum prices. In the case of any nonagricultural commodity, such petition shall be filed with the Administrator in accordance with regulations prescribed by him. In the case of agricultural commodities, such petition shall be filed with the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with regulations prescribed by him and shall request that he make an appropriate certification or recommendation to the Price Administrator. The petition shall specifically state the grounds upon which the committee believes such action to be required and shall be accompanied by affidavits or other written evidence in support thereof.

"'(2) Within fifteen days after receiving a petition filed in accordance with the provisions of this subsection, the Administrator or the Secretary of Agriculture, as the case may be, shall either grant the petition or inform the committee in writing why in his judgment the standards for decontrol stated in subsections (d) and (e) have not been satisfied with respect to the commodity involved. If the petition is not granted in full, the Administrator or the Secretary, as the case may be, shall, within ten days after the receipt of a request by the committee for further consideration of its petition, hold a hearing before himself or before a deputy administrator (or, in the case of the Secretary, before such officer as he may designate) at which the committee may present its argument in support of the petition. The Consumers Advisory Committee and the Labor Advisory Committee appointed by the Administrator shall be given notice of any such hearing and an opportunity to present their views with respect to the petition and may, not later than five days prior to such hearing, present in writing evidence relating thereto. Within fifteen days after such hearing, the Administrator or the Secretary, as the case may be, shall either grant the petition in full or furnish the industry advisory committee with a statement in writing of his reasons for denying it in whole or in part together with a statement of any economic data or other facts of which he has taken official notice in connection with such denial.

"'(3) At any time within thirty days after the denial in whole or in part, following a hearing, of a petition filed under this subsection, the petitioning industry advisory committee may petition the Price Decontrol Board established under subsection (h) for a review of the action of the Administrator or the Secretary of Agriculture. If the Administrator or the Secretary, as the case may be, fails to act upon a petition within the time prescribed by paragraph (2), the industry advisory committee may, at any time within thirty days after the expiration of the time so prescribed, petition the Price Decontrol Board for the removal of maximum prices on the commodity involved.

"'(4) Nothing in this section shall be construed to take away or impair any right of any person to protest, in accordance with the provisions of sections 205 and 204 of this Act, the further maintenance of maximum prices for a commodity under the standards of subsection (d) or (e): Provided, That the filing of such a protest or of a petition under paragraph 3 of this subsection shall not be grounds for staying any proceeding brought pursuant to section 205 of this Act or section 37 of the Criminal Code, and no retroactive effect shall be given to any judgment setting aside a provision of a regulation, order, or price schedule under the standards set forth in this section.

"'(h) PRICE DECONTROL BOARD.—(1) There is hereby established as an independent agency in the executive branch of the Government a Price Decontrol Board, to be composed of three members appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Not more than two members of the Board shall be members of the same political party. Two members of the Board shall constitute a quorum, and a vacancy in the membership of the Board shall not impair the power of the remaining members to exercise its functions. Members of the Board shall receive compensation at the rate of $12,000 a year.

"'(2) The Board shall appoint and fix the compensation of a secretary for the Board and such other officers and employees as may be necessary to enable it to perform its functions. The Board may make such expenditures as may be necessary for performing its functions. The Board may, with the consent of the head of the department or agency concerned, utilize the facilities, services, and personnel of other agencies or departments of the Government. The Board shall maintain an office in charge of its secretary in the District of Columbia, which shall be open on all business days for the receipt of petitions for review and the transaction of other business of the Board. The Board shall prescribe regulations and procedures for the conduct of its business which will provide for summary disposition, with the utmost expedition consistent with sound decision, of petitions filed with the Board.

"'(3) A petition made under subsection (g) (3) shall specifically state the grounds upon which the petitioning industry advisory committee believes that maximum prices on the commodity involved should be removed. A copy of such petition shall forthwith be served on the Administrator or the Secretary, as the case may be, who shall within such time as may be fixed by the Board certify and file with the Board a transcript of such portions of the proceedings in connection with the petition under subsection (g) as are material. Such transcript shall include a statement in writing of the Administrator's or Secretary's reasons for believing that maximum prices on the commodity involved should not be removed together with a statement of any economic data or other facts of which he has taken official notice. At the earliest practicable time the Board shall conduct a hearing upon the petition, at which the Administrator or the Secretary, as the case may be, and the committee shall be given an opportunity to present their views and argument orally or in writing. If application is made to the Board by either party for leave to introduce additional evidence, the Board may permit such evidence to be introduced or filed with it if it deems it material and determines that such evidence could not reasonably have been offered or included in the proceedings under subsection (g). At the earliest practicable time after the hearing on any petition, the Board shall make and issue an order specifying the extent, if any, to which maximum prices on the commodity involved shall be removed. The Board shall order the removal of such maximum prices if and to the extent that in its judgment the standards of decontrol stated in subsection (d) or (e) have been satisfied with respect to the commodity involved. The Administrator shall remove maximum prices with respect to the commodity in question within such time and to such extent as shall be specified in the order of the Board. Orders of the Board shall not be subject to modification or review by any other department or agency or by any court.

"'(4) No petition may be filed with the Board with respect to any commodity within a period of three months after the issuance of an order of the Board with respect to the same commodity.

"'(5) The members of the Board may serve as such without regard to the provisions of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code (18 U. S. C., secs. 198 and 203) or section 19 (e) of the Contract Settlement Act of 1944, except insofar as such sections may prohibit any such member from receiving compensation in respect of any particular matter which is within the jurisdiction of the Board.

"'(6) If the number of petitions filed with the Board should at any time become so great as to prevent the Board from promptly conducting hearings upon such petitions, the Board shall appoint such hearing commissioners as it deems necessary in order to expedite the transaction of its business. The Board may authorize one or more of the hearing commissioners so appointed to conduct the hearing upon any petition under this subsection and to exercise the authority of the Board with respect to such hearing. After a hearing conducted before a hearing commissioner, the commissioner shall make recommendations consistent with this subsection to the Board concerning its action with respect to the petition. If the Board approves such recommendations, it shall issue an order in conformity therewith. If the Board does not approve such recommendations, the Board may issue such order as it deems proper upon the record or may conduct a new hearing upon the petition before the Board.'

"SEC. 4. Section 2 (a) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: 'In administering the provisions of this subsection relating to the establishment of industry advisory committees, the Administrator, upon the request of a substantial portion of the industry in any region, shall promptly appoint a regional industry advisory committee for such region.'

"SEC. 5. Section 2 (b) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"'After the date upon which this paragraph takes effect, the Administrator, when establishing rent ceilings on hotels or when passing upon applications for adjustments of rent ceilings on hotels, is authorized to take into consideration the distinction between transient hotels and residential or apartment hotels, including the difference in the investment, operation, expenses, and mechanical details of operation between the transient hotels and the residential and apartment hotels, and is directed to classify separately by regulation (1) transient hotels, (2) residential and apartment hotels, and (3) tourists' courts, rooming houses, and boarding houses.

"'While maximum rents are in effect under this Act with respect to housing accommodations in any defense-rental area, such housing accommodations shall not be subject to rent control by any State or local government.'

"SEC. 6. (a) The last paragraph of section 2 (e) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended by the Stabilization Extension Act of 1944, shall not apply with respect to operations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation: Provided, That with respect to such corporations and such operations, the making of subsidy payments and buying for resale at a loss shall be limited as follows:

"Payments and purchases may be made with respect to operations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, which involve subsidies and anticipated losses, as follows:

"(1) With respect to rubber produced in Latin America and Africa for which commitments were made before January 1, 1946, $31,000,000.

"(2) With respect to copper, lead, and zinc, in the form of premium price payments, $100,000,000: Provided, That (A) premiums shall be paid on ores mined or removed from mine dumps or tailing piles before July 1, 1947, though shipped and/or processed and marketed subsequently thereto; and that (B) the premium price plan for copper, lead, and zinc shall be extended until June 30, 1947, on terms not less favorable to the producer than heretofore and (i) adjustments shall be made to encourage exploration and development work, (ii) adequate allowances shall be made for depreciation and depletion, and (iii) all classes of premiums shall be noncancelable unless necessary in order to make individual adjustments of income to specific mines.

"(3) With respect to purchases by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, of such tin ores and concentrates as it deems necessary to insure continued operation of the Texas City tin smelter.

"(4) With respect to noncrop programs, 1946 crop program operations and the 1947 crop program operations relating to sugar, flour, petroleum, petroleum products, and other domestic and imported materials and commodities, $869,000,000: Provided, That the operations authorized under this subparagraph (4) shall be progressively reduced, shall be terminated not later than April 1, 1947, and shall not cost more than $629,000,000 during the last six months of the calendar year 1946. Operations shall not be carried out under authority of this subparagraph (4) with respect to any commodity for any period occurring after the date of the enactment of this Act during which maximum prices on such commodity are not in effect under the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended: Provided, That subsidies with respect to petroleum produced from stripper wells shall be continued at not to exceed the existing rates. No subsidy or purchase and sale operation shall be undertaken under authority of this subparagraph (4) with respect to any commodity unless a subsidy or purchase and sale operation with respect to such commodity was in effect on June 29, 1946; and no such operation shall be undertaken under authority of this subparagraph (4) which will increase the rate of subsidy paid or the rate of loss incurred with respect to any commodity above that which would be paid or incurred if the operations in effect on June 29, 1946, had been continued on the same basis.

"(b) When any direct or indirect subsidy to an industry is reduced or terminated, or upon recontrol is not restored or is restored only in part, any maximum price applicable to the product affected shall be correspondingly increased, except in the case of transportation subsidies, differential subsidies to high-cost producers, and premium payments under authority of the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act of 1946.

"(c) Where roll-back subsidies have previously been or presently are in effect, and have been discontinued, or shall hereafter be discontinued, the industries which have received such subsidies shall be permitted to increase their ceiling prices at least an amount equivalent to the amount of the discontinued roll-back subsidy. Such price increase shall become effective either upon discontinuance of the roll-back subsidy or upon passage of this Act, whichever date is the later. For the purposes of this paragraph, the term 'roll-back subsidies' means subsidy payments, or purchases and sales of a commodity at a loss by the Government of the United States (including any Government-owned or controlled corporation), or contracts therefor, which resulted directly or indirectly in the lowering of ceiling prices below the maximum price levels established by the Office of Price Administration prior to the institution of the subsidy payments or purchases and sales at a loss, or the execution of the contracts therefor, whichever date is the earlier.

"(d) Nothing in this section shall be construed to affect the provisions of Public Laws 30, 88, 164, and 328 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, or to prevent the use of the sums authorized in such laws to fulfill obligations incurred prior to July 1, 1946, with respect to operations prior to such date.

"(e) Notwithstanding any of the foregoing provisions of this section 6, 1946 and 1947 crop program operations with respect to sugar, may, while maximum prices are in effect with respect to sugar, be continued until such crops are processed and distributed, and the cost of 1946 crop program operations with respect to sugar may be charged to the funds authorized by Public Law 30, Seventy-ninth Congress, as amended by Public Law 328, Seventy-ninth Congress. For the purpose of this section 6, no subsidy program operation on sugar shall be considered to be a new subsidy: Provided, That Commodity Credit Corporation or any other Government agency shall not absorb any increase in the price paid for Cuban sugar over 3.675 cents per pound, raw basis, f. o. b. Cuba, as being paid for such sugar, in Cuba, on June 30, 1946.

"(f) Nothing in this section shall be construed as a limitation upon operations authorized by the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act of 1946; and nothing in this act or in any other act shall prohibit the establishment of maximum sales prices or maximum rents for housing accommodations for which materials of facilities are allocated, or priorities for delivery thereof issued, under said Veterans' Emergency Housing Act of 1946.

"SEC. 7. Section 2 (i) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'(i) For the purposes of this act and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, fish and other sea food shall be deemed to be agricultural commodities, and commodities processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from fish or other sea foods shall be deemed to be manufactured in whole or substantial part from agricultural commodities: Provided, That the provisions of section 3 of the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, shall not be applicable with respect to fish and other sea foods and commodities processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part therefrom, but the maximum price established for any fish or sea food commodity or for any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part therefrom shall not be below the average price therefor in the year 1942.'

"SEC. 8. Section 2 (j) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a semicolon and the following: 'or (5) as authorizing any regulation or order of the Administrator to fix a quantity or percentage of any product which any seller may sell to the buyer.'

"SEC. 9. Section 2 (k) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by inserting the words 'or any operator of any service establishment after the words 'seller of goods at retail.'

"SEC. 10. Section 2 of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"'(o) No maximum price shall be applicable to any item served in any restaurant or other eating establishment if such item consists in whole or major part of a commodity to which no maximum price is applicable with respect to sales to restaurants and other eating establishments, unless the maximum price of such item, when sold by such restaurant or other eating establishment, is determined, under the applicable maximum price regulation or order, by the addition of a customary margin to the acquisition cost of such item.

"'(p) After July 1, 1946, no maximum price regulation or order shall be issued or continued in effect requiring any seller to limit his sales by any weighted average price limitation based on his previous sales.

"'(q) In the case of any retail industry, the principal sales of which consisted during the calendar years 1939 to 1941, inclusive, of sales of a commodity or commodities the production or retail distribution of which has been reduced, for a period of three years beginning on or after March 2, 1942, by 75 per centum or more below such production or retail distribution for the calendar years 1939 to 1941, inclusive, as a result of the operation of any governmental regulation or restriction, the Administrator shall not, in establishing maximum prices under this section, reduce established peacetime retail trade discounts or mark-ups or dealer handling charges for any such commodity before the retail unit sales of such commodity for a period of six months shall have reached the average annual retail unit sales thereof for the calendar years 1939 to 1941, inclusive.

"'(r) In the case of any wholesale industry, the principal sales of which consisted during the calendar years 1939 to 1941, inclusive, of sales of a commodity or commodities, the production or wholesale distribution of which has been reduced for a period of three years beginning on or after March 2, 1942, by 75 per centum or more below such production or wholesale distribution for the calendar years 1939 to 1941, inclusive, as the result of the operation of any governmental regulation or restriction, the Administrator shall not in establishing maximum prices under this section reduce established wholesale trade discounts or normal wholesale markups for any such commodity prevailing on March 2, 1942, before the wholesale unit sales of such commodity for a period of six months shall have reached the average annual wholesale unit sales thereof for the calendar years 1939 to 1941, inclusive.

"'(s) No maximum price regulation or order shall require the reduction of the established peacetime discounts or mark-ups for the sale of any manufactured or processed commodity (treating as a single commodity for the purposes of this paragraph all commodities in a line of related commodities which, for the purpose of establishing manufacturers' and processors' maximum prices, have been placed by the Office of Price Administration under a single regulation) if the retail, wholesale, or other distributive trade selling such commodity shows that the commodity constituted approximately one-half or more of the gross sales incomes of a majority of the persons engaged in such trade in 1945 and that, in the first quarter of 1946, the deliveries of such commodity to such distributive trade were less than 100 per centum of the deliveries thereof in the corresponding quarter of 1945.

"'(t) In establishing maximum prices applicable to wholesale or retail distributors, the Administrator shall allow the average current cost of acquisition of any commodity, plus such average percentage discount or markup as was in effect on March 31, 1946.

"'(u) After the date upon which this subsection takes effect, no maximum price shall be established or maintained, under this Act or under any other provision of law, with respect to any new commodity when the Administrator upon application finds that its use, in the production, manufacturing, or processing of any commodity or commodities, without increasing the cost to the ultimate user, either increases the life or reduces the cost of production, manufacture, or processing of the commodity or commodities produced, manufactured or processed. As used in this subsection the term "new commodity" means a commodity which was not commercially or industrially available prior to January 30, 1942.

"'(v) In the case of softwood logs and lumber, the maximum prices shall be established at a level which will permit producers of at least 90 per centum of the production of softwood logs and lumber to recover their current costs of production.

"'(w) In establishing maximum prices for sales of finished woven or knitted fabrics made primarily of cotton fiber or for the sales of apparel made therefrom it shall be unlawful for the Administrator to establish or maintain differentials in the method of determining the basic grey-goods cost or the finished-woven-fabrics or finished-knitted-fabrics cost to which a mark-up is to be applied based on the degree of integration of the seller.

"'(x) Whenever the world price of a commodity essential to the economy of the United States (average price at which such commodity could be purchased when landed duty paid at any United States port of entry) exceeds the maximum purchase price established by the Administrator, and results in—

"'(e) an actual reduction of the importation of such commodity into the United States in an amount substantial in relation to the total consumption of the commodity in the United States; or

"'(2) the substantial curtailment or restriction of the domestic trade in such commodity or products processed directly therefrom, the Administrator shall, in order to maintain and increase domestic production and employment and to make possible the balancing of supply and demand, promptly remove maximum purchase prices from imports of such commodity and maximum prices from products processed directly therefrom, or increase the maximum prices of imports of such commodity and of products processed directly therefrom to the extent necessary to prevent such reduction in importation or curtailment of domestic trade.'"

"SEC. 11. The Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by inserting after section 5 thereof the following new section:

"'SEC. 6. (a) For the purposes of this section the base period shall be the calendar year 1940, or in the case of an industry customarily keeping its accounts on a fiscal year basis, the industry's fiscal year 1940.

"'(b) In order that adequate general price levels shall be established for all commodities to bring about maximum production and employment, no maximum prices shall be established or maintained for any product of a producing, manufacturing, or processing industry (including any industry furnishing service or transportation the charges for which are subject to the Administrator's control) which do not return on the average to the industry not less than the average dollar price of such product during the base period, plus the average increase in cost of producing, manufacturing, or processing the same accruing since the base period, but the maximum prices for a product shall be deemed in compliance with this standard if such prices on the average are equal to the average current total cost of the product plus the industry's average over-all profit margin on sales in the base period.

"'(c) For the purpose of determining costs under this section, currently or for the base period, the Administrator shall ascertain the costs of a reasonable number of typical producers, manufacturers, or processors and shall follow accepted methods of accounting and such fair and reasonable methods of calculation as he shall establish by regulation, including adjustments for temporary cost abnormalities which may be reasonably anticipated to be eliminated within the three months following the Administrator's determination, and adjustments for increases in the volume of production which may be reasonably anticipated to be experienced within such three-month period.

"'(d) Maximum prices established hereunder shall not be held invalid on account of their failure to return his costs to any particular member of any group involved.

"'(e) Nothing herein shall nullify the power of the Administrator to make reasonable adjustments and exceptions in individual cases under the provisions of section 2 (c) of this Act.

"'(f) If the maximum prices of a product on the average equal its average current total cost plus a reasonable profit, nothing herein shall require any further adjustment of such maximum prices for any period with respect to which it appears that a substantial expansion in the production or use of the product would not be practicable or would be practicable only by reducing the production of at least equally needed products.

"'(g) As used in this section, "product" shall mean any major item, or any article different in character from other products of the industry; but all the styles, models, or other varieties of any such item or article shall be considered as one product.

"'(h) The provisions of this section shall not apply with respect to any maximum price applicable to manufacturers or processors in the case of products made in whole or major part from cotton or cotton yarn or wool or wool yarn.

"'(i) Nothing in this section shall be construed to require any adjustment in maximum prices except pursuant to an application filed under this paragraph, or be construed to invalidate any maximum price unless there is a failure to make adjustments, in accordance with the procedure prescribed in this paragraph, to such extent as may be required to comply with the standards set forth in this section. Any industry advisory committee may apply to the Administrator for the adjustment of the maximum prices applicable to any product in accordance with the standards set forth in this section, and shall present with the application comprehensive evidence with respect to costs and prices. The Administrator shall consider the evidence so presented and all evidence otherwise available to him and, within 60 days after the receipt of such application, he shall make the adjustments in maximum prices required by this section, or, if he finds that no such adjustments are required, he shall deny the application. If the Administrator neither makes the adjustments in the maximum prices for any product required by this section, nor denies the application for such adjustments, within the 60-day period prescribed in this paragraph, the industry advisory committee concerned may petition the Emergency Court of Appeals, created pursuant to section 204, for relief; and such court shall have jurisdiction by appropriate order to require the Administrator to make such adjustments or deny such application within such time, not to exceed 30 days, as may be fixed by the court. If the Administrator fails to make such adjustments or deny such application within the time so fixed, no maximum price shall thereafter be applicable with respect to any sale of such product by any seller.'

"SEC. 12. (a) The second sentence of section 205 (e) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended to read as follows: 'In any action under this subsection, the seller shall be liable for reasonable attorney's fees and costs as determined by the court, plus whichever of the following sums is greater: (1) Such amount not more than three times the amount of the overcharge, or the overcharges, upon which the action is based as the court in its discretion may determine, or (2) an amount not less than $25 nor more than $50, as the court in its discretion may determine: Provided, however, That such amount shall be the amount of the overcharge or overcharges if the defendant proves that the violation of the regulation, order, or price schedule in question was neither willful nor the result of failure to take practicable precautions against the occurrence of the violation.'

"(b) Section 205 (e) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"'The Administrator may not institute any action under this subsection on behalf of the United States, or, if such action has been instituted, the Administrator shall withdraw the same—

"'(1) if the violation arose because the person selling the commodity acted upon and in accordance with the written advice and instructions of the Administrator or any regional administrator or district director of the Office of Price Administration; or

"'(2) if the violation arose out of the sale of a commodity to any agency of the Government, or to any public housing authority whose operations are supervised or financed in whole or in part by any agency of the Government, and such sale was made pursuant to the lowest bid made in response to an invitation for competitive bids.

"'The Administrator shall not institute or maintain any enforcement action under this subsection against any manufacturer of apparel items where the Administrator shall determine (1) that the transactions on which such proceeding is based consisted of the manufacturer's selling such an item at his published March 1942 price list prices instead of his March 1942 delivered prices, and (2) that the seller's customary pricing patterns for related apparel items would be distorted by a requirement that his ceilings be the March 1942 delivered prices. The Administrator's determinations under this paragraph shall be subject to review by the Emergency Court of Appeals in accordance with sections 203 and 204.'

"SEC. 13. The third sentence of paragraph (2) of section 205 (f) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended to read as follows: 'If any such court finds that such person has violated any of the provisions of such license, regulation, order, price schedule, or requirement after the receipt of the warning notice, such court shall issue an order suspending the license to the extent that it authorizes such person to sell the commodity or commodities in connection with which the violation has occurred, or to the extent that it authorizes such person to sell any commodity or commodities with respect to which a regulation or order issued under section 2, or a price schedule effective in accordance with the provisions of section 206, is applicable; but no suspension shall be for a period of more than twelve months, and if the defendant proves that the violation in question was neither willful nor the result of failure to take practicable precautions against the occurrence of the violation, then in that event no suspension shall be ordered or directed.'

"SEC. 14. Section 3 of the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"'On and after the date of the enactment of this paragraph, it shall be unlawful to establish, or maintain, any maximum price applicable to manufacturers or processors, for any major item in the case of products made in whole or major part from cotton or cotton yarn or wool or wool yarn, unless the maximum price for such major item is fixed and maintained at not less than the sum of the following:

"'(1) The cotton or wool cost (which must be computed at not less than the parity price or the current cost, whichever is greater, of the grade and staple of cotton or wool used in such item, delivered at the mill);

"'(2) A weighted average of mill conversion costs; and

"'(3) A reasonable profit (which shall not be less than a weighted average profit for each unit of such item equal to the weighted average of the profit earned on an equivalent unit of such item during the period 1939 to 1941, both inclusive.'

"SEC. 15. The Secretary of Agriculture, through the Commodity Credit Corporation or otherwise, is hereby authorized to allocate feed which he controls to feeders of livestock and poultry in domestic areas which he may determine to be in an emergency shortage condition with respect to animal and poultry feed.

"SEC. 16. (a) In the event producers of wheat are required by an order issued pursuant to the Second War Powers Act, 1942, as amended, to sell all or any part of wheat delivered to an elevator prior to April 1, 1947, the Commodity Credit Corporation shall offer to purchase the wheat so required to be sold at a price determined as follows: The purchase price paid for the wheat shall be the market price at the point of delivery as of any date the producer may elect between the date of delivery and March 31, 1947, inclusive: Provided, however, That only one election may be made for each lot of wheat: And provided further, That the producer may not elect a date prior to the date on which he mails a written notice to Commodity Credit Corporation of his election. In the event the producer does not notify Commodity Credit Corporation in writing by March 31, 1947, of his election of a date for determining the market price, such date shall be deemed to be March 31, 1947.

"(b) Any producer of wheat who, prior to the date of enactment of this Act, has sold any wheat pursuant to the requirements of paragraph (ee) (1) of War Food Order Numbered 144, may, at any time within thirty days after the date of enactment of this Act, pay to the Commodity Credit Corporation a sum equal to the amount for which he sold such wheat. Any producer paying any such sum to the Commodity Credit Corporation shall be deemed to have sold and delivered to the Commodity Credit Corporation as of the date he pays such sum a quantity of wheat equal in grade and quality to the quantity sold by him pursuant to such requirements and the purchase price to be paid to him for such wheat shall be determined in the same manner as in the case of a sale of wheat to the Commodity Credit Corporation pursuant to the provisions of subsection (a) of this section.

"SEC. 17. This Act may be cited as the 'Price Control Extension Act of 1946.'

"SEC. 18. (1) The provisions of this Act shall take effect as of June 30, 1946, and (2) all regulations, orders, price schedules, and requirements under the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended (except regulations or requirements under section 2 (e) thereof relating to meat, flour, or coffee), and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, which were in effect on June 30, 1946, shall be in effect in the same manner and to the same extent as if this Act had been enacted on June 30, 1946, and (3) any proceeding, petition, application, or protest which was pending under the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, on June 30, 1946, shall be proceeded with and shall be effective in the same manner and to the same extent as if this Act had been enacted on June 30, 1946: Provided, That in any case in which the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended (except sections 204 and 205), or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended (except sections 8 and 9), or any regulation, order, or requirement under either of such Acts, prescribes any period of time within which any act is required or permitted to be done, and such period had commenced but had not expired on June 30, 1946, such period is hereby extended for a number of days equal to the number of days from July 1, 1946 to the date of enactment of this Act, both inclusive: Provided further, That no act or transaction, or omission or failure to act, occurring subsequent to June 30, 1946, and prior to the date of enactment of this Act shall be deemed to be a violation of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, or of any regulation, order, price schedule, or requirement under either of such Acts: Provided further, That insofar as the provisions of this Act require the Administrator to make any change in any maximum price, such provisions shall not be deemed to require such change to be made before the thirtieth day following the date of enactment of this Act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 371) extending the effective period of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

THE JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED BY THE HOUSE

The joint resolution as passed by the House contained only four sections, and its purpose was to provide retroactively for a brief extension of the Price Control Act and the Stabilization Act, without other change, in order to give time for Congress to work out further legislation on the subject.

Sections 1 and 2 provided for continuing the Price Control Act and the Stabilization Act until July 20, 1946.

Section 3 provided for authority in the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to continue subsidy and purchase and sale operations until July 20, 1946, subject to the limitation that no new operations should be undertaken, and subject to the further limitation that no change should be made in the basis of operations existing on June 29, 1946, which would increase the rate of any subsidy or the rate of loss incurred with respect to any commodity.

Section 4 provided that the joint resolution should take effect as of June 30, 1946, the purpose being to insure that the provisions of the two acts and the regulations, orders, and other actions issued or taken thereunder should be considered as not having ceased to be in effect on June 30, 1946; but the section contained an exception to insure that no person would be subject to any suit, action, or prosecution on account of offenses committed subsequent to June 30, 1946, and prior to the date of the enactment of the joint resolution.

THE SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is a substitute for all after the resolving clause of the joint resolution passed by the House.

The Senate amendment differs from the joint resolution as passed by the House in that, instead of providing for a temporary extension with a view to working out further legislation, it proposes extension until June 30, 1947, and proposes numerous substantive changes to govern the operation of price controls during the period of extension. Since the substitute agreed to in conference follows the pattern of the Senate amendment, with exceptions, hereinafter explained, the provisions of the Senate amendment are outlined in detail below:

Sections 1, 2, and 16—extension of Price Control Act and Stabilization Act

Sections 1 and 2 of the Senate amendment amend the Price Control Act and the Stabilization Act so as to continue such acts in effect until June 30, 1947. By section 18 these amendments, as well as the other amendments proposed, are made effective as of June 30, 1946, so as to insure that the provisions of these acts will not be considered to have ceased to be in effect on June 30, 1946, and it is provided in section 18 that all regulations, orders, price schedules, and requirements under the Price Control Act and the Stabilization Act which were in effect on June 30, 1946, shall be in effect in the same manner and to the same extent as if this legislation had been enacted on June 30, 1946; but a saving provision is included that no act or transaction occurring after June 30, 1946, and prior to the date of enactment of this legislation shall be deemed to be a violation of the Price Control Act or the Stabilization Act, or of any regulation, order, price schedule, or requirement under either of such acts. A provision is also included in section 18 to preserve the status of proceedings, petitions, applications, and protests which were pending on June 30, 1946, but providing, in appropriate cases, that where any period of time was prescribed within which any act was required or permitted to be done, and such period had commenced but had not expired on June 30, 1946, such period shall be extended for a number of days equal to the number of days from July 1, 1946, to the date of enactment of this legislation.

Section 3—Decontrol of commodities; price adjustments and administration in case of agricultural commodities

The Senate amendment (by sec. 3) proposes to add after section 1 of the Price Control Act a new section 1A containing declarations of congressional policy regarding termination of price controls and related controls, and prescribing particular standards or requirements with respect to termination of price controls. In addition to its decontrol provisions, it relates to price adjustments and price administration in the case of agricultural commodities. The proposed new section 1A is explained below.

Objectives: Subsection (a) of this new section states that the rapid attainment of production equal to the public demand is one of the necessary and urgent objectives for the prevention of inflation and for the achievement of a reasonable stability in the general level of prices and rents, cost of living, and costs of production; that unnecessary or unduly prolonged controls over prices and rents and use of subsidies would be inconsistent with the return to a healthy peacetime economy and would tend to repress and prevent the attainment of the goals stated in the act; and that adequate prices are necessary stimulants to the desired production and the expeditious attainment of said goals.

Declaration of decontrol policy: Subsection (b) of the new section declares the policy of Congress that the Office of Price Administration, and other agencies of the Government, shall use their price, subsidy, and other powers to promote the earliest practicable balance between production and demand in the case of commodities under their control, and that the general control of prices and the use of subsidy powers shall be terminated as rapidly as possible consistent with the policies and purposes set forth in this section and in no event later than June 30, 1947, and that on that date the Office of Price Administration shall be abolished.

Recommendations by the President: Subsection (c) of the new section provides, in paragraph (1) thereof, that the President shall recommend to the Congress as soon as practicable and in any event on or before January 15, 1947, such further legislation as in his judgment is needed to establish monetary, fiscal, and other policies which are adequate to supplement the control of prices and wages during the balance of the fiscal year 1947, and to insure that general control of prices and wages can be terminated by June 30, 1947, without danger of inflation thereafter. Paragraph (2) of this subsection provides that on or before April 1, 1947, the President shall report to the Congress what, if any, commodities or classes of commodities, including housing accommodations, are in such critically short supply as to necessitate, in his judgment, the continuance of price control or rent control as to them after June 30, 1947, together with his recommendations as to established departments or agencies of the Government which should be charged with the administration of such control.

Decontrol in case of nonagricultural commodities: Subsection (d) of the new section 1A relates to the decontrol of nonagricultural commodities. First, paragraph (1) of this subsection provides for the removal of maximum prices on nonagricultural commodities not important in relation to business costs or living costs. The Price Administrator is directed to proceed with the decontrol of these commodities as rapidly as, in his judgment, will be consistent with the avoidance of a cumulative and dangerous unstabilizing effect. Maximum prices on all such commodities are to be removed on or before December 31, 1946, and after that date no maximum price may be maintained for any nonagricultural commodity or class of commodities unless the same has been expressly found by the Administrator to be important in relation to business costs or living costs.

Paragraph (2) of subsection (d) states a general rule for the removal of maximum prices in the case of nonagricultural commodities, whether or not such commodities are important in relation to business costs or living costs. This rule is that maximum prices shall be promptly removed whenever the supply of a commodity exceeds or is in approximate balance with the demand therefor (including appropriate inventory requirements). Under this subsection, it is the duty of the Administrator to remove maximum prices upon his own initiative when the applicable decontrol standards are satisfied; however, provision is made in the later parts of this section for industry advisory committees to petition the Administrator for decontrol when such committees believe that the applicable decontrol standards have been satisfied and, in case of adverse action by the Administrator upon such a petition, further provision is made for an appeal to an independent Price Decontrol Board which may order the Administrator to remove maximum prices.

Paragraph (3) of subsection (d) provides that the Price Administrator, with the advance consent in writing of the Price Decontrol Board, may reestablish maximum prices for a nonagricultural commodity which has been decontrolled, if the supply of such commodity is no longer consistent with the applicable decontrol standard.

Paragraph (4) of subsection (d) prohibits the imposition or maintenance of price controls with respect to petroleum or petroleum products processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from petroleum unless the Price Decontrol Board first determines and certifies in writing to the Administrator that the supply of crude petroleum, or the particular product on which controls are to be imposed or maintained, is insufficient to meet the domestic demand therefor.

Decontrol and other requirements in case of agricultural commodities: Subsection (e) of the proposed new section 1A contains provisions relating to the removal of maximum prices on agricultural commodities, the adjustment of such maximum prices, and other provisions relating to the administration of maximum prices on agricultural commodities.

Paragraph (1) of this subsection provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall certify to the Price Administrator each agricultural commodity which the Secretary determines to be in short supply. An agricultural commodity will be in short supply for the purposes of this section, unless the supply of such commodity equals or exceeds the requirements for such commodity for the current marketing season. No maximum price may be applicable to any agricultural commodity during any calendar month which begins more that 30 days after the enactment of this section, unless such commodity is certified by the Secretary of Agriculture as being in short supply.

Paragraph (2) of subsection (e) provides that whenever the Secretary of Agriculture determines that maximum prices on any agricultural commodity which is in short supply are impeding the necessary production of such commodity, he may recommend to the Price Administrator such adjustments in such maximum prices as the Secretary determines to be necessary to attain the necessary production of such commodity; and the Price Administrator is required to adjust such maximum prices in accordance with such recommendations. This paragraph (2) also contains a provision relating to the decontrol of agricultural commodities not important in relation to business costs or living costs. The Secretary of Agriculture is directed to recommend to the Price Administrator the removal of maximum prices on such commodities as rapidly as, in the judgment of the Secretary, will be consistent with the avoidance of a cumulative and dangerous unstabilizing effect, and he is to recommend the removal of maximum prices on all such unimportant commodities by December 31, 1946. The Administrator is required to remove maximum prices in accordance with such recommendations.

Paragraph (3) of this subsection provides that whenever the Secretary of Agriculture determines that an agricultural commodity with respect to which maximum prices have been removed is in short supply and that the reestablishment of maximum prices with respect thereto is necessary to effectuate the purposes of the Price Control Act, the Secretary, with the written consent of the Price Decontrol Board, may recommend to the Administrator, the reestablishment of price controls with respect to such commodity, and that the Administrator shall reestablish such controls upon such recommendation.

Paragraph (4) of this subsection defines the term "agricultural commodity" to mean (except for purposes of subsection (d) (6)) any agricultural commodity and any food or feed product processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity.

Paragraph (5) of this subsection (e) provides that the Secretary of Agriculture, in exercising his functions under the Emergency Price Control Act, shall not be subject to the direction or control of any other appointive officer or agency in the executive branch of the Government, except to the extent that a review of his decisions by the Price Decontrol Board is provided for in this section, and that no such officer or agency shall undertake to exercise any direction or control over the Secretary of Agriculture with respect to the exercise of such functions. This paragraph also provides that the Secretary of Agriculture may at any time withdraw his approval of any action with respect to which his approval is required under the Emergency Price Control Act, and that upon the withdrawal of his approval such action shall be rescinded. This provision is related to section 3 (e) of the present law, which requires that written approval of the Secretary of Agriculture be obtained for actions taken under the Price Control Act with respect to agricultural commodities and with respect to regulations, orders, price schedules, and other requirements applicable to processors with respect to food or feed products processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from agricultural commodities.

Paragraph (6) of this subsection (e) provides that no maximum price and no regulation or order under the Price Control Act or the Stabilization Act shall be applicable with respect to any agricultural commodity, or any service rendered with respect to any agricultural commodity, unless a regulation or order establishing a maximum price with respect to such commodity had been issued under the Price Control Act prior to April 1, 1946. This provision will not prevent the restoring of maximum prices in the case of a commodity upon which maximum prices had been in effect prior to April 1, 1946, even though maximum prices upon such commodity had been removed and were not in effect on April 1, 1946, nor will it prevent the maintenance of maximum prices upon a commodity if a regulation or order establishing maximum prices upon such commodity had been issued prior to April 1, 1946, even though such regulation or order did not take effect until after that date. On the other hand, the provision will prohibit other types of regulations and orders as well as maximum prices in the case of any agricultural commodity unless a regulation or order had been issued prior to April 1, 1946, establishing a maximum price on such commodity. Thus, in the case of cotton, the recent order relating to margin requirements for futures trading, although not a maximum price regulation or order, will be made inapplicable because maximum prices with respect to cotton were not established prior to April 1, 1946.

Paragraphs (7) to (11), inclusive, of such subsection (e) specifically decontrol certain specified commodities. They provide that no maximum price and no regulation or order under the Price Control Act or the Stabilization Act shall be applicable with respect to the following commodities:

(1) Livestock, poultry, or eggs, or food or feed products processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from livestock, poultry, or eggs.

(2) Cottonseed, soybeans, or products processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from cottonseed or soybeans.

(3) Milk or food or feed products processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from milk.

(4) Grains for which standards have been established under the United States Grain Standards Act, and any livestock or poultry feed processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part therefrom.

(5) Leaf tobacco and tobacco products processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part therefrom.

Paragraph (12) of such subsection (e) makes it unlawful for the Administrator, in establishing maximum prices for sales of finished woven fabrics made primarily of cotton fiber or of apparel made therefrom, to establish or maintain differentials in the method of determining the basic grey-goods cost or the finished-woven-fabrics cost to which a mark-up is to be applied based on the degree of integration of the seller.

Saving provision: Subsection (f) of the proposed new section 1A provides that nothing in this section shall limit the authority to remove maximum prices at an earlier time than would be required by the section.

Petitions for decontrol: Subsection (g) of the proposed new section provides that the industry advisory committee appointed under the Price Control Act with respect to a commodity may file a petition for the removal of maximum prices on such commodity, if in the judgment of the committee the standards set forth in this section require the removal of maximum prices for such commodity. Such petitions are to be filed with the Price Administrator in the case of nonagricultural commodities and with the Secretary of Agriculture in the case of agricultural commodities. The petition is to state the grounds upon which the committee believes the removal of maximum prices to be required and is to be accompanied by written evidence in support of the petition. The Administrator or the Secretary of Agriculture, as the case may be, must act upon the petition within 15 days after it is filed. If the petition is not granted in full, the Administrator or the Secretary, as the case may be, must, upon the request of the industry advisory committee, hold a hearing for the further consideration of the petition, and must within 15 days after the hearing make a decision upon the petition. If the petition is denied in whole or in part, such decision must be accompanied by a written statement of the reasons for denying the petition in whole or in part. If the Administrator or the Secretary has not granted the petition after the hearing, the petitioning industry advisory committee may petition the Price Decontrol Board, established under this section, for a review of the action of the Administrator or the Secretary. The special method which is provided in this section for the consideration of petitions for decontrol made by industry advisory committees does not take away or impair any right of any person subject to a maximum price regulation to protest the continued maintenance of maximum prices in accordance with the regular protest provisions of the Price Control Act.

Price Decontrol Board: Subsection (h) of the proposed new section establishes a Price Decontrol Board as an independent agency in the executive branch of the Government. The Board is to be composed of three members appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. This Board is to have jurisdiction to review decisions of the Price Administrator and the Secretary of Agriculture in cases where those officers have failed or refused to remove price controls upon the petition of industry advisory committees. Upon such review the Board is to order the removal of maximum prices if and to the extent that in its judgment the standards of decontrol stated in subsections (d) and (e) have been satisfied with respect to the commodity involved. Also, as indicated above, price controls may be reestablished with respect to a commodity from which price controls have been removed only if the Price Decontrol Board gives its written consent to reestablishing such controls. This subsection contains provisions giving the Board such authority as is necessary to enable it to perform its functions and prescribing procedure to be followed with respect to petitions made to the Board.

Section 4—Establishment of regional industry advisory committees

Section 4 of the Senate amendment amends section 2 (a) of the Price Control Act by adding a new sentence requiring that in administering the provisions of such section 2 (a), relating to the establishment of industry advisory committees, the Price Administrator, upon the request of a substantial portion of the industry in any region, shall promptly appoint a regional industry advisory committee for such region.

Section 5—Rent ceilings in case of hotels

Section 5 of the Senate amendment proposes to add a new paragraph to section 2 (b) of the Price Control Act authorizing the Administrator, when establishing rent ceilings on hotels or when passing upon applications for adjustment of rent ceilings thereon, to take into consideration the distinction between transient hotels and residential or apartment hotels, including the difference in investment, operation, expenses, and mechanical details of operation. The provision contains a requirement that the Administrator classify separately by regulation (1) transient hotels, (2) residential and apartment hotels, and (3) tourist courts, rooming houses, and boarding houses.

Section 6—Subsidy operations

Section 6 of the Senate amendment contains provisions relating to subsidy operations (including buying for resale at a loss) in the case of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Subsection (a) provides that the last paragraph of section 2 (e) of the Price Control Act, as amended, shall not apply with respect to such operations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, but such operations are limited as to purpose, amount, and duration by the following provisions:

"Payments and purchases may be made with respect to operations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, which involve subsidies and anticipated losses as follows:

"(1) With respect to rubber produced in Latin America and Africa for which commitments were made before January 1, 1946, $31,000,000.

"(2) With respect to copper, lead, and zinc, in the form of premium price payments, $100,000,000: Provided, That (A) premiums shall be paid on ores mined or removed from mine dumps or tailing piles before July 1, 1947, though shipped and/or processed and marketed subsequently thereto; and that (B) the premium price plan for copper, lead, and zinc shall be extended until June 30, 1947, on terms not less favorable to the producer than heretofore and (i) adjustments shall be made to encourage exploration and development work, (ii) adequate allowances shall be made for depreciation and depletion, and (iii) all classes of premiums shall be noncancelable unless necessary in order to make individual adjustments of income to specific mines.

"(3) With respect to purchases by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, of such tin ores and concentrates as it deems necessary to insure continued operation of the Texas City tin smelter.

"(4) With respect to noncrop programs, 1946 crop-program operations and the 1947 crop-program operations relating to sugar, flour, petroleum, petroleum products, and other domestic and imported materials and commodities, $869,000,000: Provided, That the operations authorized under this subparagraph (4) shall be progressively reduced, shall be terminated not later than April 1, 1947, and shall not cost more than $639,000,000 during the last 6 months of the calendar year 1946. Operations shall not be carried out under authority of this subparagraph (4) with respect to any commodity for any period during which maximum prices on such commodity are not in effect under the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended: Provided, That subsidies with respect to pertoleum produced from stripper wells shall be continued at not to exceed the existing rates. No new subsidy or purchase and sale operations shall be undertaken under the authority of this subparagraph (4), and no change shall be made in the basis of any existing operations for which funds are made available under this subparagraph, which will increase the rate of any subsidy or the rate of loss incurred with respect to any commodity."

The premium price plan for copper, lead, and zinc, and the stripper well subsidies on petroleum would be retroactive to June 30, 1946.

Subsection (b) provides that when any direct or indirect subsidy to an industry is reduced or terminated, any maximum price applicable to the product affected shall be correspondingly increased, except in the case of transportation subsidies and differential subsidies to high-cost producers.

Subsection (c) provides that when rollback subsidies have been in effect, and have been or shall be discontinued, equivalent price increases shall be permitted.

Subsections (d) and (f) contain saving provisions to make it clear that nothing in the section is to affect the operation of certain provisions of law, previously enacted, granting authority to engage in subsidy operations. These are Public Laws 30, 88, 164, 328, and 388 of the Seventy-ninth Congress.

Subsection (e) provides that notwithstanding other provisions of the section, 1946 and 1947 crop program operations with respect to sugar may, while maximum prices are in effect with respect to sugar, be continued until such crops are processed and distributed, and the cost of 1946 crop program operations with respect to sugar may be charged to the funds authorized by Public Law 30, Seventy-ninth Congress, as amended by Public Law 328, Seventy-ninth Congress. It is provided that for purposes of the section no subsidy program operation on sugar shall be considered to be a new subsidy. A proviso is included that neither the Commodity Credit Corporation nor any other Government agency shall absorb any increase in the price paid for Cuban sugar over 3.675 cents per pound, raw basis, f. o. b. Cuba, as being paid for such sugar, in Cuba, on June 30, 1946.

Section 7—Fish and sea-food commodities

Section 7 of the Senate amendment amends section 2 (i) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, which now provides that no maximum price shall be established for any fishery commodity below the average price of such commodity in the year 1942. Under the proposed amendment, this subsection will provide that for the purposes of the Price Control Act and the Stabilization Act, fish and other sea foods shall be deemed to be agricultural commodities, and commodities processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from fish or other sea foods shall be deemed to be manufactured in whole or substantial part from agricultural commodities. However, instead of making applicable to fish and other sea foods the provisions of section 3 of the Stabilization Act of 1942, which establishes for agricultural commodities pricing standards based on parity or the highest price prevailing between January 1, 1942, and September 15, 1942, the amendment provides that the maximum price for any fish or sea-food commodity or for any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part therefrom shall not be below the average price therefor in the year 1942. The amendment will have the effect of making applicable to fish and other sea foods the provisions of section 3 (e) of the Price Control Act relating to securing the written approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, and will also have the effect of making applicable to fish and other sea foods the decontrol standards which are provided for agricultural commodities.

Section 8—Limiting quantity of products sold to any buyer

Section 8 of the Senate amendment adds to section 2 (j) of the Price Control Act a provision to the effect that nothing in such Act shall be construed as authorizing any regulation or order of the Administrator to fix a quantity or percentage of any product which any seller may sell to any buyer. This provision would have the effect of discontinuing and prohibiting such limitations as that contained in Maximum Price Regulation 602, which provides that a manufacturer of nylon hosiery may not distribute a larger percentage of his product to wholesale outlets than he did in the base year, 1941.

Section 9—Highest price line in service establishments

Section 9 of the Senate amendment amends section 2 (k) of the Price Control Act so as to make applicable with respect to service establishments the provisions of that subsection which provide that no seller of goods at retail shall be required to limit his sales with reference to any highest price line offered for sale by him at any prior time.

Section 10—Subsections added to section 2 of the Price Control Act

Section 10 of the Senate amendment proposes to add new subsections (o) to (u), inclusive, at the end of section 2 of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942.

Control of certain items in restaurants: The new subsection (o) provides that no maximum price shall be applicable to any item served in any restaurant or other eating establishment if such item consists in whole or major part of a commodity which is not under price control with respect to sales to such restaurant or other eating establishment, unless the maximum price of such item, when sold by such restaurant or other eating establishment, is determined by the addition of a customary margin to the acquisition cost of such item.

Maximum average price plan: The new subsection (p) provides that no maximum price regulation or order shall be issued or continued in effect requiring any seller to limit his sales by any weighted average price limitation based on his previous sales. This provision will have the effect of eliminating the maximum average price plan under which manufacturers subject to it are restrained from delivering for sale in any quarter goods averaging in price more than the weighted average price of the goods which he delivered for sale in a corresponding previous quarter.

Discounts in certain retail industries: The new subsection (q) provides that the Administrator shall not reduce established peacetime retail trade discounts or mark-ups or dealer handling charges in the case of certain commodities whose production was discontinued or restricted during the war. This restriction would apply in the case of any retail industry whose principal sales during the calendar years 1939 to 1941, inclusive, consisted of sales of a commodity or commodities whose production or retail distribution was reduced for a period of 3 years beginning on or after March 2, 1942, by 75 percent or more below such production or retail distribution for the calendar years 1939 to 1941, inclusive, as a result of the operation of any governmental regulation or restriction. The restriction contained in this subsection would no longer apply after the retail unit sales of an affected commodity for a period of 6 months have reached the average annual retail unit sales thereof for the calendar years 1939 to 1941, inclusive.

Discounts for certain wholesale industries: The new subsection (r) makes the same kind of provision, except as to dealer handling charges, for wholesalers dealing in the commodities described above in subsection (q) as that subsection makes for retailers dealing in such commodities.

Discounts for certain commodities: The new subsection (s) provides that no maximum price regulation or order shall require the reduction of the esablished peacetime discounts or mark-ups for the sale of any manufactured or processed commodity if the retail, wholesale, or other distributive trade selling such commodity shows that the commodity constituted approximately one-half or more of the gross sales income of a majority of the persons engaged in such trade in 1945 and that, in the first quarter of 1946, the deliveries of such commodity to such distributive trade were less than the deliveries thereof in the corresponding quarter of 1945. For the purposes of this subsection, all commodities in a line of related commodities which, for the purpose of establishing manufacturers' and processors' maximum prices, have been placed under a single regulation are to be treated as a single commodity. The effect of this provision is to require the dealers in farm implements and farm machinery, or in any other commodities to which the subsection may be applicable, be given maximum prices which will allow them the same discounts or mark-ups which they enjoyed during peacetime.

Maximum prices applicable to wholesale or retail distributors: The new subsection (t) provides that in establishing maximum prices applicable to wholesale or retail distributors, the Administrator shall allow the current cost of acquisition of any commodity, plus such percentage discount or mark-up as was in effect on June 29, 1946.

Certain new commodities: The new subsection (u) provides that no maximum price shall be established or maintained with respect to any new commodity the use of which, in the production, manufacturing, or processing of any commodity or commodities, without increasing the cost to the ultimate user, either increases the life or reduces the cost of production, manufacture, or processing of the commodity or commodities produced, manufactured, or processed, but the exemption provided for in this subsection is to apply only when the Price Administrator upon application finds that the standards prescribed in the subsection are met. The term "new commodity" is defined to mean a commodity which was not commercially or industrially available prior to January 30, 1942.

Section 11—Maximum prices in the case of products of a producing, manufacturing, or processing industry

This section of the Senate amendment proposes to add a new section 6 after section 5 of the Price Control Act, as amended.

Subsection (a) of the new section provides that for purposes of the section the "base period" shall be the calendar year 1940, or, in the case of an industry customarily keeping its accounts on a fiscal year basis, the industry's fiscal year 1940.

Subsection (b) prescribes the basic pricing standard to be applicable, in those cases where the procedure specified in subsection (i) is complied with, in the case of any product of a producing, manufacturing, or processing industry (including any industry furnishing service or transportation the charges for which are subject to the Administrator's control). This standard requires that no maximum prices shall be established or maintained for any such product which do not return on the average to the industry not less than the average dollar price of such product during the base period, plus the average increase in cost of producing, manufacturing, or processing the same accruing since the base period. It is provided, however, that the maximum prices for a product shall be deemed in compliance with the standard if such prices on the average are equal to the average current total cost of the product plus the industry's over-all profit margin on sales in the base period. A proviso is included requiring, in the case of logs, lumber, and lumber products, that maximum prices shall be established at a level which will permit producers of at least 90 percent of the production of such logs, lumber, or lumber products to recover their current costs of production. It is provided that the ceiling price of timber used or the current market price shall be considered the cost of such timber.

Subsection (c) provides that for purpose of determining costs the Administrator shall ascertain the costs of a reasonable number of typical producers, manufacturers, or processors and shall follow accepted methods of accounting and such fair and reasonable methods of calculation as he shall establish by regulation, including reasonable adjustments for conditions resulting from abnormal volume of production.

Subsection (d) provides that maximum prices established under the section shall not be held invalid on account of failure to return his costs to any partciular member of any group involved.

Subsection (e) is included to insure that nothing in the section will nullify the power of the Administrator, under section 2 (c) of the Price Control Act, to make reasonable adjustments and exceptions, in individual cases, to prevent undue hardship.

Subsection (f) specifies circumstances under which the section is not to be deemed to require adjustment of maximum prices in accordance with the basic pricing standard set forth in subsection (a). It provides that where the maximum prices of a product on the average equal its average current total costs, adjustment of maximum prices to accord with the standard shall not be required for any period during which it appears that a substantial expansion in the production or use of the product would not be practicable or would be practicable only by reducing the production of at least equally needed products.

Subsection (g) defines "product" to mean any major item, or any article different in character from other products of the industry; but all styles, models, or other varieties of any such item or article shall be considered as one product.

Subsection (h) provides that the provisions of the section shall not apply with respect to any maximum price applicable to manufacturers or processors in the case of products made in whole or major part from cotton or cotton yarn or wool or wool yarn.

Subsection (i) prescribes the procedure to be followed before the section, in any particular instance, is to require any adjustment in maximum prices or invalidate any maximum price. Any industry advisory committee is authorized to apply to the Administrator for the adjustment of maximum prices applicable to any product in accordance with the standards set forth in the section, and must present with the application comprehensive evidence with respect to costs and prices. The Administrator, on the basis of all evidence available to him, must within 60 days either make the adjustments in maximum prices required by the section or, if he finds that no adjustments are required, deny the application. If within the time specified the Administrator neither makes the adjustments nor denies the application, the industry advisory committee may petition the Emergency Court of Appeals for relief, and such court is given jurisdiction by appropriate order to require the Administrator to make the determination and announcement within such time, not to exceed 30 days as may be fixed by the court. It is provided that if the Administrator fails to make the determination and announcement within the time fixed no maximum price shall thereafter be applicable with respect to any sale of such product by any seller.

Section 12—Enforcement amendments

Section 12 of the Senate amendment relates to the enforcement provisions of section 205 (e) of the act. Subsection (a) prevents the cumulation of the Administrator's claims, except for three times the actual overcharges, where he brings a treble damage action based on overcharges to a number of buyers. Under the present law the Administrator might sue a grocer for $5,000 because of 100 overcharges of 10 cents each to 100 different buyers. Under the amendment the maximum recovery in that lawsuit would be $50. Had the overcharges been 20 cents each, the maximum recovery would be three times the overcharges, or $60.

This subsection also provides that if the defendant in a treble damage action proves that his violation was neither willful nor the result of failure to take practicable precautions against its occurrence the damages assessed shall be the amount of the overcharge. The effect of the amendment is to eliminate in such cases the $25 minimum prescribed by the present law.

Subsection (b) forbids the Administrator from instituting or maintaining an action if (1) the violation arose because the seller acted upon and in accordance with the written advice and instructions of the Administrator or any regional administrator or district director of the Office of Price Administration or (2) if the violation arose out of a sale to an agency of the Federal Government or to any public housing authority supervised or financed by such an agency if the sale was made pursuant to the lowest bid made in response to an invitation for competitive bids.

The last paragraph of this subsection is designed to forbid the institution or maintenance of an action by the Administrator in a situation like that which has arisen in the work-glove industry. The amendment forbids enforcement action where the Administrator determines (1) that the violation consisted of an apparel manufacturer's selling an item at his published March 1942 price list prices instead of his March 1942 delivered prices, and (2) that his customary pricing patterns for related apparel items would be distorted by a requirement that his ceilings be the March 1942 delivered prices.

Section 13 of the Senate amendment amends section 205 (f) of the Emergency Price Control Act, relating to suspensions for violations of the act. The amendment made by this section provides that no suspension of a license shall be ordered or directed if the person charged with the violation proves that the violation in question was neither willful nor the result of failure to take proper precautions against the occurrence of the violation.

Section 14—Products made from cotton and wool

Section 14 of the Senate amendment proposes to add a new paragraph to section 3 of the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended. This paragraph relates to maximum prices applicable to manufacturers or processors of products made in whole or major part from cotton or cotton yarn or wool or wool yarn. Under existing law the price standards established in the law must be applied separately to each major item in the case of products made in whole or major part from cotton or cotton yarn. This amendment makes it clear that when the current cost of cotton is higher than parity, the current cost must be used in applying such price standards separately to each major item. The amendment also specifies that as to each such major item there shall be added to the cotton cost the weighted average of mill conversion costs and a reasonable profit. This amendment also provides that the pricing standards applicable to major items made in whole or major part from cotton or cotton yarn under this paragraph shall also be applicable to major items made in whole or major part from wool or wool yarn. It contains a provision defining the reasonable profit as not less than a weighted average profit for each unit of the item in question equal to the weighted average of the profit earned on an equivalent unit of such item during the period 1939 to 1941, both inclusive.

Section 15—Relief of feed shortages

Section 15 of the Senate amendment provides that the Secretary of Agriculture, through the Commodity Credit Corporation or otherwise, is authorized to allocate feed which he controls to feeders of livestock and poultry in domestic areas which he determines to be in an emergency shortage condition with respect to animal and poultry feed.

Section 16—Government purchases of wheat

Section 16 of the Senate amendment provides that when producers of wheat are required by the Government, pursuant to the Second War Powers Act of 1942, as amended, to sell all or any part of the wheat delivered to an elevator prior to April 1, 1947, the Commodity Credit Corporation shall offer to purchase the wheat which the producers are required to sell. The purchase price to be paid by such corporation in these cases is to be the market price at the point of delivery as of any date the producer may elect between the date of delivery and March 31, 1947. The producer may not elect a date which has occurred prior to the time he makes his election. In this manner the producer is given an opportunity to decide whether or not he wishes to retain the right to profit from any increases which may occur in the market price of wheat before April 1, 1947; but, if he does so, he must assume the risk of loss which will result from any decrease in the market price of wheat prior to such date. Subsection (b) of this section in effect makes the provision described above retroactive until May 24, 1946, when the Government's present wheat purchase program was put into effect. Producers who have sold their wheat under that program prior to the date the provision above described takes effect may, by returning or paying to the Commodity Credit Corporation the sum which they received for their wheat when it was sold, place themselves in the same position as if the provisions of subsection (a) of this section had been in effect at the time when the wheat was sold.

Section 17—Short title

Section 17 of the Senate amendment contains a short title for the proposed legislation.

Section 18—Saving provisions

The provisions of section 18 of the Senate amendment have for the most part been explained hereinbefore in the discussion of sections 1 and 2 of such amendment. This section contains, in addition to the provisions there explained, a provision to the effect that in cases where the provisions of this legislation require the Price Administrator to make or permit changes in maximum prices, the Administrator shall have a period of 30 days from the date of enactment within which to comply with such requirements.

Section 19—Rent control under State law

Section 19 of the Senate amendment provides that whenever a State has established or establishes provisions for control and regulation of the rent of housing accommodations and the governor of the State notifies the Price Administrator that such regulation and control are in effect, no provision of the Price Control Act or regulations, orders, or requirements thereunder (except as to offenses previously permitted) relating to the establishment and maintenance of maximum rents under such act shall be applicable within the State. The section also directs the Administrator to cooperate with any such State to the fullest extent, and directs him to make available to the proper officials of the State records and other information requested by the State to enable it to effectively control and regulate such rents.

Section 20—Maximum prices in the case of pulpwood

Section 20 of the Senate amendment proposes to add a proviso at the end of section 3 (a) of the Price Control Act providing that no maximum price shall be imposed on pulpwood in any State at a price less than 100 percent of the highest maximum price established for pulpwood derived from trees of the same genus in any other State, zone, or region; but it is provided that fair and equitable differentials may be established between peeled and rough pulpwood.

THE SUBSTITUTE AGREED TO IN CONFERENCE

The substitute agreed to in conference amends the Price Control Act and the Stabilization Act, as of June 30, 1946, so as to provide for extension of such acts until June 30, 1947, and the provisions included in the conference substitute are similar, in general, to the provisions of the Senate amendment. The conference substitute differs from the Senate amendment in a number of respects, however, and these differences, except for minor and clarifying changes, are explained below:

Decontrol: As has been explained above, the Senate amendment provided for specific decontrol in the case of certain commodities. Except in the case of petroleum and petroleum products, there would have been no authority for the reestablishment of controls in the case of these commodities. While specific decontrol of all these commodities is retained in the conference substitute (except for products of cottonseed and soybeans other than feed or food products), the standard for recontrol in the case of petroleum and petroleum products is changed, and provisions have been included which would permit the reestablishment of controls in the case of the other named commodities under specified circumstances.

A special provision is included with respect to the following commodities: (1) Livestock, milk, or food or feed products thereof, (2) cottonseed and soybeans, and food or feed products thereof, and (3) grains for which standards have been established under the United States Grain Standards Act, and livestock or poultry feed produced therefrom. This special recontrol provision is contained in paragraph (8) of subsection (e) of the proposed new section 1A of the Price Control Act. Subparagraph (A) of this paragraph provides that price controls shall not be applicable to such commodities prior to August 21, 1946, but it directs the Price Decontrol Board to proceed forthwith to consider whether such commodities shall continue, after August 20, 1946, to be free from price controls. The Board, after opportunity for hearing to affected industries and consumers, is empowered by subparagraph (B) to determine whether or not any such commodity shall be subject to price controls after August 20, 1946. The Board is to direct that such commodity shall not be so regulated unless it finds (1) that the price of such commodity has risen unreasonably above a price equal to the lawful maximum price in effect on June 30, 1946, plus the amount per unit of any subsidy payable with respect thereto as of June 29, 1946, and (2) that such commodity is in short supply and that its regulation is practicable and enforceable, and (3) that the public interest will be served by such regulation. If in the case of any such commodity the Board fails to direct, on or before August 20, 1946, that such commodity shall not be subject to price controls, it is provided that maximum prices and regulations and orders under the Price Control Act and the Stabilization Act shall be applicable with respect to such commodity. If the Board directs, pursuant to subparagraph (B), that any such commodity shall not be so regulated, the Board may, pursuant to subparagraph (C), subsequently direct that the commodity shall be subject to price controls upon a finding on the basis of a standard similar to that which governs the Board's determination under subparagraph (B). Subparagraph (D) contains a provision permitting the exercise of the Board's decontrol and recontrol powers on a regional basis in the case of milk.

In the case of petroleum and petroleum products, poultry and eggs and food or feed products thereof, and leaf tobacco and products thereof, dealt with in subsection (d) (4) and subsection (e) (7), recontrol is not permissible until after August 20, 1946, and then only under the recontrol standards provided in paragraph 8 (C) of subsection (e).

By paragraph (9) of subsection (e) the Price Decontrol Board is empowered, where maximum prices are in effect with respect to a commodity listed in paragraph (8) (A), to determine whether any subsidy or any part thereof in effect prior to June 30, 1946, shall be reestablished in whole or in part.

Paragraph (10) of subsection (e) provides that whenever maximum prices are in effect for a commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any commodity listed in paragraph (8) (A) with respect to which maximum prices are not in effect, no maximum price, and no margin, mark-up, or discount, shall be maintained with respect to such processed or manufactured commodity which does not return to the processors, manufacturers, and distributors thereof (a) the raw material cost (which must be computed at least once every 60 days at not less than the current cost), (b) the conversion or distribution cost, and (c) a reasonable profit.

Maximum prices in the case of products of a producing, manufacturing, or processing industry: Section 11 of the conference substitute adds a new section 6 to the Price Control Act establishing standards applicable with respect to maximum prices for any product of a producing, manufacturing, or processing industry. This section 6 as included in the conference report is in general similar to the section 6 which the Senate amendment proposed to add to the Price Control Act, but certain important modifications have been made.

An explanation is made elsewhere in this report of the disposition made of the proviso contained in the Senate section relating to maximum prices in the case of logs, lumber, and lumber products.

Subsection (c) of the section in the Senate amendment relating to the determination of costs would have authorized the Administrator to make "reasonable adjustments for conditions resulting from abnormal volume of production." In the conference substitute this authority is modified so that in lieu thereof the Administrator would be authorized to make "adjustments for temporary cost abnormalities which may be reasonably anticipated to be eliminated within the three months following the Administrator's determination, and adjustments for increases in the volume of production which may be reasonably anticipated to be experienced within such three-month period."

Subsection (f) of the section as it appeared in the Senate amendment specified certain circumstances under which the Administrator would not be required to apply the general pricing standard established by the section. It provided that if the maximum prices of a product on the average equal the average current total costs, nothing in the section should require the adjustment of maximum prices for the product for any period during which it appears that a substantial expansion in the production or use of the product would not be practicable or would be practicable only by reducing the production of at least equally needed products. In the conference substitute this subsection has been modified so that failure to make the adjustments required by the general pricing standard of the section would be permitted, under the circumstances specified, only in cases where the maximum prices of a product, on the average, equal its average current total cost plus a reasonable profit.

Distributor discounts and mark-ups: The new subsection (t) of section 2 of the Price Control Act added by section 10 of the conference substitute, instead of requiring, as did the Senate amendment, that maximum prices applicable to wholesale or retail distributors shall allow the current cost of acquisition of any commodity plus such percentage discount or mark-up as was in effect on June 29, 1946, requires that such maximum prices shall allow the average current cost of acquisition plus such average percentage discount or mark-up as was in effect on March 31, 1946.

Subsidy operations: Except for clarifying changes the only differences between section 6 of the Senate amendment and section 6 of the conference substitute, which relate to subsidy and purchase and loss operations of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, are as follows:

(1) The last sentence of section 6 (a) (4) has been rewritten so that instead of expressing the limitations contained therein in terms "new" operations and "existing" operations it provides that "no subsidy or purchase and sale operation shall be undertaken under authority of this subparagraph (4) with respect to any commodity unless a subsidy or purchase and sale operation with respect to such commodity was in effect on June 29, 1946; and no such operation shall be undertaken under authority of this subparagraph (4) which will increase the rate of subsidy paid or the rate of loss incurred with respect to any commodity above that which would be paid or incurred if the operations in effect on June 29, 1946, had been continued on the same basis."

(2) In subsection (b), relating to price increases required in case of reduction or termination of subsidies, an additional exception is made with respect to subsidies in the form of premium payments under the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act of 1946. Also, the requirement as to increases in maximum prices is made applicable to the case where a commodity is recontrolled and subsidies are not restored or are restored only in part.

(3) A new clause has been added at the end of subsection (f), as follows: "and nothing in this Act or in any other Act shall prohibit the establishment of maximum sales prices or maximum rents for housing accommodations for which materials or facilities are allocated, or priorities for delivery thereof issued, under said Veterans' Emergency Housing Act of 1946."

Section 6 of the conference substitute, by imposing limitations on the amounts which may be used for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, for the operations referred to therein, prescribes maximum amounts which will be controlling over any other provision of law which might be construed to authorize the use of funds for such operations.

It is intended, and it is believed to be clear, that the provisions of section 6 shall not limit or affect payments or losses incident to such of the operations of the Commodity Credit Corporation as sales of commodities for export at competitive world prices pursuant to section 21 (c) of the Surplus Property Act of 1944, sales of farm commodities for new or byproduct uses pursuant to section 2 of the act of April 12, 1945 (59 Stat. 50), sales of commodities pursuant to section 2 of the act of April 12, 1945 (59 Stat. 50), which have substantially deterioriated in quality, or of nonbasic perishable commodities where there is danger of loss through waste or spoilage, and loans, purchases, or other price support operations which do not involve supporting prices to producers of agricultural commodities at levels above those reflected by price ceilings, or prevent parity payments or soil conservation payments under existing law or benefits under title III of the Sugar Act of 1937.

That part of the saving provisions of section 18 of the conference substitute providing that regulations, orders, and other requirements under the Price Control Act shall be in effect as though this legislation had been enacted on June 30, 1946, contains a provision, not included in the Senate amendment, to make clear that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is not required to pay subsidies with respect to meat, flour, or coffee for the period between June 30, 1946, and the date of enactment of this legislation.

Maximum prices in case of woven fabrics of cotton fiber: Paragraph (12) of subsection (e) of the proposed new section 1A of the Price Control Act, in the Senate amendment, relating to maximum prices in the case of woven fabrics made primarily of cotton fiber, and apparel made therefrom, has been modified to apply also to knitted fabrics made primarily of cotton fiber and apparel made therefrom, and has been placed in section 10 of the conference substitute as new subsection (w) of section 2 of the Price Control Act.

Maximum prices in the case of logs, lumber, and lumber products: In section 6 of the Price Control Act as proposed to be added to present law by section 11 of the Senate bill there was a proviso requiring, in the case of logs, lumber, and lumber products, that maximum prices shall be established at a level which will permit producers of at least 90 percent of the production thereof to recover their current costs of production. At the end of this provisio was a sentence providing that the ceiling price of timber used or the current market price shall be considered the cost of such timber. The sentence has been omitted from the conference substitute. The remainder of the provisio has been placed in section 10 of the conference substitute as new subsection (v) of subsection 2 of the Price Control Act, and it has been modified so that it applies only in the case of softwood logs and lumber.

Maximum prices in the case of pulpwood: Section 20 of the Senate amendment, relating to maximum prices in the case of pulpwood, has not been included in the conference substitute.

Maximum prices in case of certain imported commodities and products processed therefrom: There has been included in section 10 of the conference substitute, as new subsection (x) of section 2 of the Price Control Act, a provision making it the duty of the Price Administrator, under specified circumstances, to remove or increase maximum prices in the case of certain imported commodities and products processed directly therefrom. This action is required to be taken, in order to maintain and increase domestic production and employment and to make possible the balancing of supply and demand, whenever the world price of a commodity essential to the economy of the United States (average price at which such commodity could be purchased when landed duty paid at any United States port of entry) exceeds the maximum purchase price established by the Administrator, and results in (1) reduction of importation in an amount substantial in relation to the total consumption of the commodity in the United States, or (2) the substantial curtailment or restriction of the domestic trade in such commodity or products processed directly therefrom.

State rent control: Section 19 of the Senate amendment, intended to provide for discontinuance of Federal rent controls in any State prepared to operate under its own rent control law, has not been included in the conference substitute.

In the amendment to section 2 (b) of the Price Control Act made by section 5 of the conference substitute a new paragraph has been included providing that while maximum rents are in effect under the Price Control Act with respect to housing accommodations in any defense-rental area, such housing accommodations shall not be subject to rent control by any State or local government. One effect of this provision is to make it clear that in any case where, since June 30, 1946, any State has put its own rent control law into operation, the rent provisions of the Price Control Act and the orders and regulations thereunder, within the field of their operation, will supersede such State law.

BRENT SPENCE,
PAUL BROWN,
WRIGHT PATMAN,
WILLIAM B. BARRY,
RALPH A. GAMBLE,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. O'NEAL (interrupting the reading of the conference report). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the conference report be dispensed with.

Mr. COLE of Missiouri. Mr. Speaker, I object.

(The Clerk concluded the reading of the conference report.)

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read.

Mr. SPENCE. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 233]

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 345 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

EMERGENCY PRICE CONTROL ACT, 1942

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] is recognized.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, would a motion be in order that the time be extended beyond the time allowed under the rule?

The SPEAKER. That motion would not be in order at this time.

There was no objection.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, the issues are so clear in this matter that there is no room for any extended debate. The question is whether or not we shall extend the Price Control and Stabilization Acts for another year from June 30, 1946. We had a clear-cut issue on July 1 as to whether the House wanted to continue the Price Control and Stabilization Acts, and by a vote of 219 to 155 expressed the view that these acts should continue in force and passed the resolution which bears the same number as the present resolution we are considering. This resolution extended the time to July 20 in an endeavor—and it was solely for that purpose—that the Senate and the House might enact a bill that would serve the purposes which we are struggling to achieve. We are considering a resolution which I think in many respects is an improvement upon the first bill passed by the Congress and vetoed by the President. The issue is clear whether you want to continue price control and rent control or whether you want to abandon them.

It would be highly impracticable to continue rent control if you did not continue effective price control. There are so many elements of price and cost that enter into rents that it would be unjust to regulate one without the other. It seems to me there is a very great responsibility and a great burden upon the Congress at this time.

I heard the gentleman from Ohio this morning call the resolution a mongrel bill. Unfortunately price control is something that is not in accordance with the general views and convictions of the American people. It is restrictive in its nature. It compels the people to give up some rights in order that they may obtain more important ones. It is a shining mark for ridicule and derision. The gentleman called it a mongrel bill.

Eleven of the fourteen conferees signed the conference report. They signed it after long and laborious activity and study. It is a highly involved matter. I do not profess to be an expert in the intricacies and technicalities of price control, but we have brought a resolution back here which I think expresses in many ways the desires of the Congress. There is a Decontrol Board. That is a separate agency of the Government, entirely independent of the price-control organization.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself two additional minutes.

It has within it the power and the authority of the Decontrol Board to decontrol products for which ceilings have been set by the Price Administrator. It has been stated that the price control agencies, being jealous of their authority, did not abandon their control even though it was justified, but certainly that will not be applicable to the Decontrol Board.

I want you to approach this in the light of the importance of the question and the responsibility that is yours. This is an important issue to all the people of America. Looking alone to the interests of my party, I wish you would make it a political issue.

Of course, it is hard to arrive at a just conclusion between the producer and the consumer. The producer knows what he wants, he knows how to obtain it, and he ought to be considered. But there is an unorganized and nonvocal majority of the American people, the consuming public. If you fail to enact this law, they will rise up, I think, in their wrath if prices go where we may expect them to go.

I hope price control may soon be abandoned. I hope we may go back to the old ways of life and that we will need none of these emergency measures. But while we need them, let us maintain them and let them have an opportunity to keep the prices in such a state that the dollar of the American laborer and those who earn their living in the sweat of their brow may buy what they expected to buy, and will prevent in that way labor unrest and an indescribable train of evils.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, we started out some weeks ago to correct a situation which was disrupting and very harmful to the economy of the Nation. It was our objective then to get full production as the only panacea for economic chaos. We succeeded in the bill which the President vetoed in providing that price controls be continued, and provided also that even though price controls were continued we would get a maximum amount of production of all commodities. When the President vetoed that bill, he, of course, eliminated all price controls which were in existence at that time or would have been put into effect under the bill which he vetoed.

I objected to the immediate consideration of a continuing resolution for 20 days, thinking that the Committee on Banking and Currency might have an opportunity to sit and do something with it. That was objected to. The Committee on Banking and Currency was bypassed and a rule was granted for the consideration of that bill. It passed and went to the Senate, and the Senate wrote in not only the specific decontrols which were deleted from the original bill but many others. So the bill has gone to conference and has come back to us. It is my studied opinion that this bill which is before the House today cannot be administered without very serious consequences to our economy generally. For that reason I did not sign the conference report. Prices cannot be controlled under this bill and production cannot be assured under the bill. I might say that briefly it may be put this way.

This is a bill not to control prices but to continue the control of our economy. I do not want to have any part of the inevitable economic confusion which will result from even an attempt to put this law into effect. In 10 minutes I cannot begin to cover one-third of the points which could be brought out in proof of the statement I have made. But I sat up rather late last night trying to get some things together which I thought might be helpful to the House. I found that in respect to recontrol there were three different standards. I do not have the time to name them. You can read them in the bill. The bill was read and you probably picked them out as the Clerk was reading. I found there were six standards in the bill for the fixation of prices. I do want to call your attention to some of these, but before I do so for fear that my time will run out I want to say that one of the most disrupting influences in our economy is the uncertainty under which agriculture and industry will be forced to operate if this bill is signed by the President. First, the agricultural prices can be adjusted every 30 days so that no farmer and no processor of an agricultural commodity and no wholesaler or distributor will know from one 30-day period to another what the prices of any agricultural commodity are going to be. The prices of agricultural commodities and the supplies of agricultural commodities have a direct bearing upon whether the wheels of industry turn. If industry does not know from one month to the next what they have to pay for their raw materials which go into the finished products, then, of course, industry will hesitate to buy, and you confuse further the economy of our country by confusing the man in industry on what he may expect in raw material prices.

Then as August 20 approaches you are bound to dry up your sources of supply for all of the agricultural commodities which have been decontrolled by the Senate and which automatically go back under control by August 20 unless the decontrol board acts to the contrary. Who is going to buy meat and dairy products and the other things mentioned in the categories starting with meat on August 10 or August 5 without any assurance that he is going to empty his shelves of that commodity at a higher price before August 20? Of course, you cannot expect them to buy and fill up their shelves and fill out their inventories under a high price unless they are absolutely sure they are going to be able to get rid of them by the 20th of August. Those are just a couple of things. Let me tell you what has been done with respect to the confusion incident to the fixation of prices. Products manufactured and processed from meat, if the meat is not controlled, are determined by the current raw material price plus conversion and distribution costs plus a reasonable price. That is the formula we wanted to apply right straight across the board, but which they have applied to processed articles, meat, and so forth, provided the meat is not under control. The fact as to whether a processed article is a major item or not does not make any difference. In respect to the major items of cotton and woolens, we apply another price—the current cost or parity, whichever is higher, plus a weighted average of mill conversion costs, plus a reasonable profit. That applies to only the major items.

That is the formula which was contained in the original Wolcott amendment, but it is applied now to cotton, and it is applied to woolens. It is not applied to industrial commodities, which will result, of course, in a great deal of confusion, because the fabrics, in some instances, upon which certain phases of our industry are wholly dependent are included. But when meat, and commodities in the categories of meat, is under control, then those processed commodities manufactured from such products shall have still another formula. That is the formula under the so-called Barkley amendment, of the average cost of production plus the average increase in production costs and, in some cases, plus the average mark-up on top of that.

I wish I might have time to explain that the Administrator, nothing to the contrary notwithstanding, is given discretion as to whether he shall apply the Barkley standard, and it, therefore, gives him discretion to wholly nullify the standards contained in the so-called Barkley amendment.

Then we have another one in respect to restaurants, the price of meals to be fixed by adding the customary margin to the acquisition cost.

Next is the Barkley formula for all commodities not included in the items decontrolled in the Senate bill. To the average dollar price during the basic period you add the average increase in cost of production. You have to do that, or you add the average current total cost to the industry and thereafter the profit margin on sales in the base period. What are you going to apply? Industry does not know. Industry has no way of knowing which of these formulas will be applied by the Administrator.

Then, in the case of soft wood logs and lumber you apply another formula for price fixation. That price must be above the current cost of production. Nothing in respect to profit; nothing in respect to anything else except cost of production, as determined by the Price Administrator.

If I had time I would like to point out one of the very basic points in dispute in section (f) on page 13 of the conference report. That is in the application of the so-called Barkley amendment. If you read the first three lines and then stop, you may be reasonably satisfied, but if you read the last three lines in connection with the first three lines you would surely come to the conclusion that that language gives the Administrator of the OPA new and unusual powers to determine the quantity of production in every industry in the United States.

I think this conference report, in fairness to the American public, should be voted down.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, we had a very difficult task in the conference, but we brought back to the House the best bill that we could obtain. As a matter of fact, I think we ought to have control on food for a while longer. Many of you members who do not want control on food ought to be pretty well satisfied with this report. We set up a decontrol board that is supposed to be fair. The members of the board will be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. They are to go into the facts relative to each commodity and comply with the formula set out in the conference report. They must follow the formula and find that the facts justify a recontrol under the formula before putting control on.

We set up standards and a yardstick, so to speak, which the decontrol board must follow in decontrolling or recontroling commodities. I prefer this board, who will have plenty of time to go into the merits of each commodity to have controls taken off, than for Congress to act without having all the facts.

Here is a bill that will do that.

I am for this report and for this bill chiefly for this reason: I have always maintained that the producers in this country were entitled to cost and a reasonable profit. I say today that this is the spirit of the original act, and if OPA had carried out the spirit of the law you would have had more production and less complaint. I say to you, and I will prove it before I take my seat, that we have accomplished for all the producers of this country in this bill cost of production, current cost, and a reasonable profit. I say this will increase production. It may increase prices a little in some instances but it will increase production, the very thing that kills inflation.

Suppose it does increase prices a little bit, that is much better than turning everything loose with people bidding against each other and running commodities sky high.

The Bankhead-Brown amendment, as you know, was passed in 1944. The reason it was passed at that time was because cotton was bringing only 92 percent of parity while other commodities were bringing much more than parity. The Bankhead-Brown amendment said to the OPA that they must place a ceiling on textile items to reflect parity on cotton, because cotton was one of the basic crops and therefore you could not under the then existing law place ceilings so low as not to reflect parity on this commodity.

No one doubts the fairness and justice of the Bankhead-Brown amendment. The OPA did not, because in 1945 they had it in the bill they prepared, and in 1946 they had it in the bill they prepared. That is just exactly what we have done for practically everybody else. Let me show you how, and this will interest the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] who just preceded me.

We have modified the two provisions which the President said caused him to veto the original bill. One was the Taft amendment and the other was the Wherry amendment. We do not have the Taft amendment but we do have the Barkley amendment and an amendment introduced by me to the Barkley amendment which produces the same results, and at the same time makes it workable and unobjectionable to the President and OPA; that is, producers must have the cost of production plus a reasonable profit. Who wants more? Why should anybody object to control in wartime—and this is still war, because the war has not been brought to an end, only the shooting has stopped—who wants more than a reasonable profit during this emergency?

Senator TAFT and the other Senate conferees accepted it. I subscribe to it.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] objected to it. Senator TAFT signed the report, and he knows the amendment accomplishes the purpose which the Taft amendment undertook to accomplish but in such form as not to be objectionable but workable.

In the new section 6 of the Price Control Act added by section 11 of the bill, providing a general pricing standard in the case of products of any producing, manufacturing, or processing industry, except products covered by the revised Bankhead-Brown amendment, the principle of assuring an average price at least equal to the average costs of a product plus a reasonable profit has been included in subsection (f), in place of the provision as it appeared in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield one additional minute to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Section F of the Barkley amendment was hotly contested in the conference, and it looked as if we would never reach an agreement on account of the wording of section F.

The amendment which I offered as a compromise giving cost of production and a reasonable profit satisfied Mr. TAFT and the other Senate conferees. It is the thing I have been fighting for and had we had this principle heretofore we would have had more production.

Also, in paragraph 10 of subsection (e) of the new section 1A added to the Price Control Act, the standard of costs plus a reasonable profit has been made specifically applicable in the case of products produced from livestock, milk, cottonseed, soybeans, and grains, and certain products thereof, when these latter items are not themselves under price control.

The question is, Shall we take a reasonable attitude? This is the best bill we can now obtain and I think it will be helpful and bring on production, and still be fair to the producer, giving him a reasonable profit and at the same time be helpful to the consumer as it will prevent the price of certain commodities going sky-high. It is either this or nothing. I cannot believe that Members in this Chamber are going to turn down this report.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, for several years the average citizen was deprived of meat. Then came the President's veto June 29 of H. R. 6042, which snapped the bureaucratic chains that had been binding the meat industry hand and foot, and almost overnight that citizen could again supply himself with meat.

What is this august body, the Congress of the United States, doing now? Nothing less than contriving to again take meat away from that citizen, or at least the power to do so.

Why? Surely not because the price has risen so high that the public in general cannot afford to buy meat. The volume of sales belies any such conception.

The public in general abhors black markets, or at least the necessity for them. The OPA pronounced a malediction upon them. Black markets disappeared into the thin void when the dead hand of OPA was removed from the economy.

Yet, here is the National Legislature deliberating on a measure which will, if it passes, as surely as the sun rises in the east and sets in the west, restore the great mass of black markets that prevailed before the President's veto, or certainly vest in the President the power to do this.

Suddenly OPA and black-market operators find themselves in full agreement on the issue now before this body. Both want the OPA restored with full power to control all prices. Strange bedfellows, you may say, but not so when we look at the record. We had it in prohibition days, when we saw bootleggers striving with all their might for the retention of prohibition. The story is as old as corrupt government, which goes back to the birth of government itself.

Why does the OPA want controls put back on meat and other food products? There is but one answer, namely, control for control's sake. A power-mad political machine might be hampered by competition, the liberty of the individual to use his own brain, to plan, to choose, to judge, to compare. As Bastiat would put it, the New Deal seeks nothing less than to annihilate intelligence, thought, and man himself. Fascism under Hitler had, and communism under Stalin has, the same end in view. Basically, New Dealism identifies itself with both of these regimes.

This bill restores all the powers to the OPA which it had before the President's veto. Make no mistake about that. The OPA will possess power to order the economy at will. Some relief, such as that given to the automobile dealers, is provided but by and large this bill provides no relief whatever for American industry. It introduces and makes operative the most vicious policy conceivable, that of alternately removing ceiling prices and reestablishing them without end.

Industry will be without a base. It will be unable to program its activities from one day to the next.

Disorder of the economy will progress at an accelerating tempo and dictatorship continue in its march.

I am against collectivism in any form or degree. That is why I withheld my sanction to the conference report.

I refused to sign this death decree for free enterprise and liberty.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KOPPLEMANN].

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, the provisions of this bill are thoroughly inconsistent with its purposes. The only reason for continuing price control through law is to have the machinery for orderly control of, or resistance to, a higher price trend which is inevitable in a period when the supply of goods is short of the demand. Prices are higher; there are no if's but's, or and's about that. Undoubtedly prices will go even higher, but the question that we must answer is whether prices will go up so far out of reach that economic disruption of all kinds will ensue—first in labor unrest because current wages will not be sufficient to purchase even the minimum necessary things that millions of families need; second in a disruption of markets which can cause a deflation to result and prices to go through the floor instead of through the ceiling. And so we would have boom and bust.

This bill is not the answer. We need effective control through law, and adequate authority to the agency—in this case the OPA—administering the law to apply the controls as needed or to remove them as conditions permit.

No law is any better than its administration. Obviously the provisions of this bill, in assigning to a decontrol board and to the Secretary of Agriculture the power to veto or overrule the decisions of the OPA, say very definitely that there is no confidence in the OPA, that its decisions are not to be taken seriously, that another authority must be called on to decide whether the OPA is right or wrong. That in itself makes for confusion. It ridicules the OPA and this law itself. If there is no confidence in the OPA, then cut it out. Under this bill opponents of inflation and price control would divide and conquer.

The proponents of this bill are attempting to make two wrongs equal a right. They are with one hand decrying the OPA, withdrawing authority from the OPA to make and enforce its decision; on the other hand they are continuing its existence, retaining its thousands of employees on the public pay roll, while to all intents and purposes this conferees' bill says out with the OPA.

Is any other agency of the Government subject to the veto of another agency of the Government? Is any other agency of the Government trussed up, able to speak, but not to act?

I speak as one who is for effective and full control of prices, so long as that control is needed—and this surely is no time to abandon the controls. But there will be no effective control if we give authority to the OPA with one hand and take it away simultaneously with the other.

How long the consumers will continue to battle against higher prices by refusing to buy depends on how long can they continue to do without necessary commodities. There has been sincere effort on the part of some retailers to hold their prices down to June 30 levels, but they cannot hold down those prices to June 30 levels much longer. Retail stocks on hand as of that date have been about exhausted, and as the stocks are replenished the retailers must pay the higher wholesale price. Consequently prices to the consumer must go up.

Now, what does this bill do. It says that until August 20 there may be a further holiday on price ceilings for essential meats, dairy products, grains, and so forth. If the price ceilings are restored by then, they will be put back but not by the OPA. It will be up to the Decontrol Board to decide whether the ceilings will be put back on these essential commodities—and when and how much.

In the meantime what is going to happen? Prices have risen considerably on these commodities since the paralysis of OPA on June 30. The report just issued by the Commerce Department indicates that the prices would have risen higher had there not been a deliberate effort to hold them down. Despite that effort prices on essential market-basket goods have gone up. With this further holiday decreed at least until August 20, the lid will be completely blown off. Prices will spurt up, and when the ceiling is clamped down, if it is, the price level to be set will not be that of June 30, nor of today, July 23, but somewhere between today's price and whatever price will have been reached by August 20 or whenever they may decide to restore the ceilings.

Ceilings on other essential commodities are lifted indefinitely. If they are to be put back, it will not be on authority of OPA, but on the decision of the Decontrol Board. OPA may say ceilings should be restored; the Decontrol Board can say no. OPA may recommend a protective ceiling. The Decontrol Board can fix another ceiling.

The intent is obvious. OPA has taken the brickbats because of its insistence on protecting the consumer. This bill would remove from OPA its authority to protect the consumer, if the consumer protection should conflict with the profit opportunities of private interests.

The rank and file of the people are complaining now that they cannot meet the higher cost of living with their wages. People of fixed incomes are complaining. People working in the shops and factories are complaining. Numerous letters have come to me from people who relate while their wage scale is higher, their wages are lower because they are working shorter hours. So with this provision the purpose of the bill to continue price control on essential commodities is negated.

The one saving provision of the bill is the rent-control feature. But it is inconceivable that the landlords will stand for their commodity being under control while the ceilings are relaxed or abandoned on all other commodities. They will indulge in wholesale violations of the law, and if the violations come before the courts, the courts will be compelled to uphold them, on the grounds that class legislation has been enacted against the landlords.

For the purpose of continuing price control as a lever against inflation this bill is no better than the one that was vetoed on June 29. It legalizes inflation just as surely as did that one. The public will be lulled into thinking that they are being protected by a price-control law, and will wonder why prices jump.

Where a commodity is properly entitled to an increase, the discretion, or authority for granting that increase should rest in the hands of the agency supposed to administer the law. I strongly oppose that authority being taken from the OPA and transferred to either the Department of Agriculture or this Decontrol Board. For again the OPA will be the goat, and innocently take the blame for higher prices which it protested but which will have been put over on the people by these two vetoing authorities.

Passage of the bill in this form will result in greater confusion, higher prices and will subject the needs of the people to the profit desires of the special interests which have already played so large a part in scuttling the entire price-control program.

This conference bill is neither agreeable nor satisfactory. I cannot in all honesty by my vote say to the people that we have given them price control with this measure. I cannot compromise with principle.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, this resolution does not satisfy the proponents of an OPA bill or an effective price-control law. Although it is not good enough for the proponents of an effective price-control law, it is not bad enough for opponents of price control. Any Member who wants an excuse for voting against this conference report can very easily find it, whether he is for price control or against it.

It is not a perfect resolution by any means. It is not intended to be perfect. It represents a compromise. It is typical of major legislation that passes the Congress. Practically every major law represents a compromise of view or a sacrifice of opinion on the part of almost every Member of Congress.

You conferees, seven from the House and seven from the Senate, spent 6 hard days and sometimes at night trying to iron out the differences between the resolutions passed by the two Houses. We have done the best that we could. As evidence of the fact that we satisfied most of the conferees, all except one of the seven conferees of the other body signed the report and all but two conferees on this side signed the report. We did the best that we could.

Now then, let us see what this resolution actually does. No. 1, it preserves the wage stabilization program and it permits the Wage Stabilization Board to function as it has in the past. It is worth preserving. It is not going to hold prices down; I do not claim that. Some prices will be increased in order to get increased production. Other prices will be increased in order to remove inequalities. They are perfecty justified, but I believe that the prices will be held down sufficiently to where another run of strikes will be unjustified and will not occur. It we turn prices loose, we know that then the working people will want more wages, and they will be entitled to more wages, and after they get more wages then prices will have to be increased and then we will have a race between wages and prices which brings on ruinous or runaway inflation in any country in the world. So this bill will not hold prices down to where they were, no, yet it is sufficient to prevent runaway prices. Therefore, I believe the bill is justified.

It provides for effective rent control.

The gentleman from Michigan mentioned the fact that there are six formulas for determining the prices on different commodities and products under this bill. I think he is correct, and I think it is amazing that we could deal with 8,000,000 different prices and have only 6 formulas. I think it is a most amazing thing that the conferees would have so few formulas in arriving at and determining the millions of prices in our economy.

This bill means much to the American people. We have duties and obligations to many people in the United States. The Members of Congress have obligated the Congress that Congress would extend certain benefits and privileges and opportunities to certain people who have made a great sacrifice for our country in time of war. We are paying them a certain amount of money. Will that money buy a dollar's worth? No, we know it will not. It will buy only 76 cents' worth on today's market. Will it buy 50 cents' worth tomorrow or next week, or 25 cents' worth? It is a matter of what this Congress does with price-control legislation. If we do not have price control on scarce commodities, commodities that are in short supply, the dollars we are paying out will be worth very, very little. So the question of the value of the dollar is here. Let us vote for this conference report. It is 50 percent better than the bill the President recently vetoed.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA].

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, the compromise bill before us proposes two main things. One is to establish new policies to govern the OPA in fixing prices, and the other is to reestablish price control and provide for its liquidation partially by the 31st of December and completely by next July.

I do not find particular fault with the standards set up by the bill for the control of prices. Generally speaking, I think they reflect the desire of Congress. The administration of this act, however, is left to those who are not in sympathy with the policies this bill establishes. To that extent it will have unfriendly administration.

One important phase of this bill as proposed by the conferees, is the uncertainty it creates, the difficulties of administration, the confusion, and the instability that may result. Complaints from producers to me have been particularly directed at the instability and uncertainty, including the difficulty of financing operations where the investment is susceptible to such uncertain hazards.

What is the present situation as to price control? The war has been over nearly a year. During the war period price control was necessary. The country pretty generally so regarded it. Now most of our military forces have been demobilized. America has regained a strong productive capacity for peacetime purposes. We have reached a situation where we may well question if price control has in the main ceased to be useful or necessary to this country. We can inquire whether its benefits outweigh its burdens.

We have had difficulties, it is true, in reconversion but those difficulties have been primarily artificial.

Yesterday the Department of Agriculture reported that we have the greatest corn crop in the history of this Nation, 3,487,000,000 bushels, and the greatest wheat crop of all time, 1,090,000,000 bushels. These two crops provide our basic food and feed supplies. They now offer us a very cheering prospect for both food and feed supplies for the coming year. They forecast improvement in our livestock supply. That means more meat and less reason for price control. It means less black market.

We have a tremendous crop of fruits and vegetables. The largest canned pack ever in the history of this country is now contemplated. Sixty million crates of fruit are now in prospect of being canned for the coming year. We have an abundance of poultry and eggs. We have a great supply of beef. All these things testify to the fact that the time is near if not already here when in the main price control is no longer necessary.

I voted for the continuance of price control in June. Now the situation is different. Price control has ended and the question as to what extent, if at all, should we revive it. It is not a question of continuance, but of revival. It has been off for 3 weeks. It is proposed by this bill to keep the basic agricultural products without control until the 21st of August. That means 7 weeks without price control.

Some day we must readjust ourselves from a price-control economy to the natural economy of competition. In my judgment, that time has in the main arrived. The productive capacity of America is such that it can meet the future on a competitive basis and I believe to the betterment of every segment of our population. Of course, it is inevitable whenever we make that change from a controlled to a competitive basis we are going to have some trouble. There will be great differences in the economy of the United States when you change from a system of almost universal price control to a system of free competition.

It involves a release from the rules and regulations of a central controlling body exercising its power over innumerable activities of the American people. It returns our people to the freedom, the initiative, and the conflicts of free competition. Business will respond to the impulse of its new-found freedom. Changes and fluctuating prices will create some hardships, but as long as we have our normal productive capacity we need not long fear those hardships. These fluctuating prices are simply a natural accompaniment of the adjustment period. We must count that adjustment period not so much as one to be welcomed as, rather, one to be certainly endured. We have now been passing through 3 weeks of a readjustment period. Here is a proposal that by the 21st of August we shall resume price control in full. To do that means that later we must go through another adjustment period and suffer its consequences until we can reach normal adjustments.

Now that we have already embarked upon an adjustment period, are the conditions such that we should revert to control and then later face the necessity of another adjustment period? It may be more convenient to delay than to meet the issue today, but in the end the aggregate disadvantages of delay may be greater.

Price control should be maintained only as a necessity. It is an expensive remedy. Its full subsidy program would cost the Treasury $2,000,000,000 a year. We have its expense of administration. We have the expense, the time, burdens, and annoyances of complying with the rules and regulations of the OPA. The full extent of that burden cannot be measured, but I dare say that no responsible person would estimate the burden of compliance to the American people in time and expense as less than a billion dollars a year.

Price control has incited the black market as almost a natural accompaniment where there is, naturally or through artificial means, a shortage of supply. Meat and lumber are two notable examples.

The administration of the OPA carries difficulties that are beyond the capacity, perhaps, of any man or organization to cope with without resulting hardships.

During the war the country was under the necessity of restricted production for civilian purposes in order to centralize on supplying our war needs. As soon as the war was over the great economic need of the country was to secure production in abundance. It seems as if the Office of Price Administration was so geared to the control of scarcity that it was unable to adjust itself to the country's need of abundance.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL].

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, when the last conference report on OPA was before the House, I strongly favored its adoption. It contained some weaknesses and some objectionable features. There was such strong opposition to so many phases of price control that I was absolutely convinced it was the most workable and effective bill that could be obtained under the circumstances. No one could expect to secure a price control bill exactly according to his own wishes. We were confronted with a practical situation, not a theoretical one. Similarly, when the vote came up on the President's veto I urged the Members to override that veto for the same reasons. I also pointed out that the overriding of the veto was the only way we could insure continuous control over prices and create certainty throughout the country. In view of the long period of service spent by Mr. Truman in the United States Senate, it is difficult to understand how he could veto the bill and throw the country into the consequent confusion. He must have known that just what did occur, would occur.

This bill is not as effective and workable a one as that which the President vetoed. Nevertheless, in my opinion it is still necessary to keep as much control over prices as we can so as to prevent any complete run-away. If we do not approve this conference report, then there is no control at all under any circumstances whatever unless and until new legislation should be enacted. So I intend to vote in favor of this conference report. If the President vetoes it, I will do my best to work out some new bill which may satisfy him. If he adheres to the statements in his last veto message he certainly will veto this one. It is worse than the other bill in the loopholes it leaves. It will be far more difficult to administer. Apparently it is this or nothing.

The greatest harm to the price levels in this country has been caused by the more than 3 weeks' gap when there was no price-control law at all. The dislocation of prices during this period and the uncertainty existing in the minds of producers and consumers during that time will make it most difficult to reinstitute controls at the levels formerly existing. That, of course, could not be helped after the President destroyed OPA by his veto. It was an inevitable consequence of the veto.

Our problem here today is to do the best we can to create some method of keeping a checkrein on prices. Unless we do so, we may well drift into an extremely serious situation. While I feel this bill is much less desirable than the previous one, I recognize the great difficulties faced by the conferees. I am sure they did the best they could under the circumstances.

There is a good deal of difference of opinion on just what this bill does. The lack of price control for more than 3 weeks presents an added problem. I do not wish to put myself in the position of urging anyone to vote for this conference report as I did in connection with the last one and in connection with voting to override the veto. I am not as certain of the future course of events now as I was then. I did want to give briefly the reason for my support of it. My support is not based on any particular approval of the way this bill handles this problem but purely on the ground that it is the most practical step at present available to safeguard the welfare of the country and the great majority of its citizens.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY].

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, this bill today adds frustration to confusion. I was interested in hearing our distinguished colleague from Georgia assure us that all the benefits we could expect to have under the Taft amendment are provided in this bill. If that is true, I am sure that President Truman's veto speech was a political veto speech. There is a very marked tendency all through all these discussions and these debates and the assumption of responsibilities that go with such legislation, to note that when it is all said and done we are right back where we started. Under the Second War Powers Act and under this act we are going to tell the small businessmen of this country that we are going to put them right back into the same straitjacket where they have always been; that the war may be over but it is not over as far as they are concerned.

As far as the farmers of this country are concerned, I am pretty sure they will be able to take care of this situation in their own way and I think they will do so when the time comes.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CORBETT].

Mr. CORBETT. Mr. Speaker, in a government of the people perfection is seldom or ever possible. We can only seek the best attainable as a result of discussion and compromise.

As we recall the conflicting economic, sectional, political, and selfish producers' and consumers' interests seeking to affect the price situation and as we recall the sharp and honest differences of opinion regarding price control it is somewhat surprising that the conferees could have presented us with as good a report as the one before us.

Perhaps the best general proof that it is a fair compromise is the fact that it is unsatisfactory to extremists on all sides. It apparently gives no one a sufficient advantage to arouse their enthusiasm.

In fact the bill before us now is not exactly as any one of us would have it if we were to write it alone. But it does provide some of the objectives of most everyone concerned and most important it provides in the decontrol-recontrol provisions a two-way safety valve on the siamese twin boilers of supply and demand. To me it seems the most sensible thing possible that a body of legislators lacking the ability to accurately predict the future and preparing to leave their posts would set up such a board to protect the public and themselves against the dangers of inflation and shortages.

To the degree that the Decontrol Board functions as it is intended, to that degree prices will be kept within bounds and shortages will be reduced. It is my studied opinion that under the terms of this bill we can settle down to a period of sound price regulation that will definitely point the way to an orderly elimination of all price controls as production and demand reach a normal balance.

Oh, I know that some of you are fearful that the restrictions placed upon the decontrol-recontrol powers of the new board permit too much discretion, and I know that some of you are sincerely concerned about the economic philosophy of the yet-to-be appointed Board members. I share that concern, but once this bill is law the responsibility is the President's. If he elects to appoint anyone to the board who does not inspire the confidence of the public, labor, and management—if he fails to remove any Board member who does not administer the law according to its letter and spirit he will be held accountable by the American people. And I am quite sure that the President is smart enough to know that, particularly after hearing the storm of protest that howled around the ears of the late unlamented OPA, and after witnessing the sound thrashing it received at the hands of the people's representatives.

I am confident that the need for price regulation has not ended; I know it is desirable to most of the people; and I believe that this bill before us will result in the kind of price regulation we need and desire, not the arbitrary, unrealistic kind we remember so vividly. I sincerely hope this bill is agreed to by a big majority on both sides of the aisle.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. MERROW].

Mr. MERROW. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will be courageous today, will exercise the leadership so needed in this country and vote down the conference report on OPA.

I began voting against OPA on the 17th of last April and I have continued to do so ever since. At that time I supported every crippling amendment and then opposed the passage of the bill. I voted against OPA in April and I have continued to vote against it ever since for three reasons. First, by killing OPA we will kill the black market. Second, OPA has retarded production. Third, I have no confidence in those who have been administering OPA.

What has happened since the 1st of July? We have had freedom in the United States and we ought to continue this freedom. Prices have not risen as rapidly as many expected. In New Hampshire I am glad to report that the butter lines are now gone. There is plenty of meat in the stores throughout the State. We are able to buy the grain to feed our livestock and poultry. People are again beginning to breathe the air of freedom.

I hope we vote down this conference report and return to the system of free enterprise which has made America great.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Hampshire has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN].

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, President Truman killed price control on June 29, when he vetoed the price-control bill sent to him by the Congress. His veto of price control, which was done at the demand of leaders in the Political Action Committee, did away with rent control and other controls over scarce commodities. It also set forces in motion to restore a free economy in this country. His veto was the beginning of the end for the black-market operators. But when the President asked Congress to pass another price control, which resulted in the measure being considered in the House today, he gave encouragement to the black-market operator, who has spent millions of dollars during the past 3 weeks to bid up prices on meat and other commodities in order to create a public demand for the renewal of price control.

If this conference report is approved by Congress, we will again return to a period of scarcity, the black-market operator will resume his nefarious operations, and the country's economy will be thrown into chaos. It is estimated that black marketers in meat have spent at least $10,000,000 to bid up cattle and hog prices during the past 3 weeks to make a showing for the renewal of price control, but primarily to keep themselves secure in this criminal business. In this effort they have worked hand in hand with Washington bureaucracy that seeks to retain permanent control over the lives and business of every American citizen. Your vote today on this conference report will determine if the Nation's economy is to be permanently controlled from Washington, or if the people are to remain free to work and produce in abundance for the general welfare of all.

Let us examine the bill when it comes to the matter of prices. The bill provides that meat, dairy products, and grains be automatically placed under control at midnight on August 20, 1946, and section 18 of the bill definitely reinstates all regulations, orders, price schedules which were in effect on June 30, 1946. While some prices may be out of line and too high, facts disclose that most prices on meat, milk, butter, and grains, at the wholesale level, are either at or below the former OPA ceiling plus the subsidy. Of course, if it is to be a permanent proposition that the Government shall spend nearly two billions a year to help pay on everyone's grocery bill, we had better find out about it soon, and before we go bankrupt. As of July 1, 1946, the Government paid 14.58 cents subsidy on every pound of butter sold, $1.03 on every hundred pounds of flour which amounted to from 1 cent to 2 cents on each loaf of bread, and from 6 cents to 10 cents on every pound of meat sold to each consumer. No doubt, before long, some New Deal bureaucrat will propose that the Government pay the entire grocery bill for every citizen as a reward for the sale of individual freedom to a permanent bureaucracy in Washington.

The Department of Agriculture has today estimated that we will have the largest wheat and corn crop in all history. Our livestock population is greatly in excess of normal times. Corn is the main food for beef cattle, dairy cattle, hogs, and poultry. With an abundance of feed in prospect, we should have an abundance of meat, dairy products, and poultry. But, with the threat of rolling back prices on these vital products to June 30 schedules when control is automatically resumed on August 20, I am convinced that within a week or 10 days from now, as a result of the chaos created by the reenactment of this type of legislation, meat, butter, and scarce grains will disappear from legitimate channels of distribution, and the black market will take over. In other words, the sources of supply will dry up, unless the Secretary of Agriculture, in his wisdom, with the aid of a competent Decontrol Board promptly announces that controls will not be resumed on August 20. The Secretary and the Decontrol Board are given this power in the bill before us.

Most intelligent individuals are fully aware of the fact that certain policy makers in the OPA and the Office of Economic Stabilization have sought to create a scarcity of vital foods and goods. They succeeded very well in their effort up to the time President Truman vetoed the price control law on June 30 and, mark you, if this bill is approved the same forces will again go to work to create a scarcity situation unless they are stopped by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Decontrol Board. I trust that the Secretary will use the power conferred upon him by this bill without interference from sources outside of his department. He can save the country from collapse and chaos, if he will make up his mind to let farmers and industry produce food for the people at reasonable prices and without subsidies from a nearly bankrupt Treasury.

Of course, if our social world planners decide to ship another 100,000,000 pounds of canned pork and other foods to Russia, it will not take very long before an actual scarcity will exist in this country. This is especially true, when one considers that the Truman administration has directed the shipment of 14,000 tractors to Russian areas this year, at a time when American farmers are unable to buy tractors with which to till the soil for the production of food on our farms.

I do not claim to be a prophet, but I venture to predict that before October 15 of this year, a few weeks before the congressional elections, all vital foods and most civilian goods will be removed from controls as an appeasement to the people, solely with the expectation that grateful citizens will cast their votes for PAC-endorsed candidates for Congress. Do not forget that the PAC and all New Dealers want to gain control over your Congress, so they can continue to direct the destiny of the American people.

I am urging that this conference report be returned to the conference committee. It is against the interests of the American people. It will cause scarcity of supplies in vital foods and civilian goods. It will create economic chaos for all legitimate producers in agriculture, industry, and business. It will reinstate the black market and cause suffering for law-abiding citizens who are unable or refuse to pay black-market prices. Above all, it will destroy the faith of our people in their Government. Given a little time, under a free economy, all vital foods will be available for the consumers in abundance at reasonable prices.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Illinois [Miss SUMNER].

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Just take a look at the vacant seats up in the gallery where there used to be a crowd. They are running out on you. They are home eating meat and butter. Give them two more weeks of freedom and they will love you so much they will want to send you back to Congress.

This bill is going to be hated more than people have ever hated any other bill, and I will tell you why: It has much more drastic controls. For instance, it gives this recontrol board or decontrol board, which is OPA under a new facade, the power to take these people into jail again any time that the board decides: "That public interest will be best served."

In other words, you are delegating to this board the general-welfare clause of the Constitution which has been stretched all around the world and back again. And then what is on page 13? I want you to know that you never passed a law that gives fuller Hitlerish power to one board than this one. It will be run by some little bureaucrat. And the smaller the bureaucrat the more he thinks he is God or Goering. On page 13, section 11, subsection (d), it deliberately states that a man does not even have to get his cost under his price ceiling. This new OPA does not have to give a man his cost, and it even says of lumber that not even 90 percent of the industry have to have cost. With this thing you can just run a complete Hitlerian economy and get no production at all.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentlewoman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have permission to extend their remarks on this bill at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I voted for the original OPA, for a limited time, as a war measure. I have voted for each extension and on each occasion for more specific direction to the Administrator.

On June 30 last, price-control law expired. Preceding that, the President had asked for 1 year's extension. After months of committee hearings and study, the Congress passed and sent to the President a bill which in no way changed rent control but which did contain needed amendments to existing law. This was a compromise on the part of everybody interested. However, the President vetoed the bill, thereby killing all price and rent control, and insisted that he be given a whole loaf or none at all. In other words, he made it clear that he would not accept any bill extending price or rent control which attempted to limit the power of Chester Bowles, or any Administrator, as provided in the compromise bill. He asked for a 20-day extension of the OPA law in order that the Congress might reconsider, and in the hope that it would give to him the authority which he demanded.

The House granted this request and voted the 20-day extension. However, the Senate, after deliberate consideration, passed a new bill which is now before the House. In many respects this bill is like the bill which the President vetoed. In some particulars, it is certainly more obnoxious from his standpoint. If he meant what he said when he vetoed the first bill, certainly he cannot consistently approve this bill. The majority leadership in the House has been unable to give any assurance that the President wants this bill, and this notwithstanding their conference with him on yesterday after its terms were made public.

The compromise has been spectacularized in the press. The high lights of this new bill are about like this:

First. Restores price and rent control until June 30, 1947, but with sharply curtailed OPA discretion, and divided authority.

Second. Sets up a new three-man Decontrol Board, which will have powers to reestablish controls. The Board could override OPA and the Secretary of Agriculture to remove controls on any commodity. It could restore controls on any of the basic foods and other items previously exempted by the Senate.

Third. Ceilings on five of these commodities—meat, dairy products, grains, cottonseed, and soybeans—will go back August 21 unless the Board decides otherwise. These items must remain ceiling-free until that date.

Fourth. No controls can be imposed on poultry, eggs, petroleum, or tobacco unless the Board orders. In no event can the Board recontrol these before August 21.

Fifth. In addition, the Board has the same broad powers to order removal of ceilings on other commodities it was granted in the recently vetoed bill.

Sixth. Subject to the Board's final say, the Secretary of Agriculture, rather than OPA, would decide what farm commodities can be controlled.

Seventh. OPA's rent control authority is continued unchanged.

Eighth. Subject to the Decontrol Board's over-all orders, OPA would continue to set ceilings on industrial goods. But its discretion would be sharply curtailed by the bill's new pricing formula.

Ninth. Both rent controls and industrial price ceilings would be restored on the day the President signs the bill. OPA is expected to issue interim regulations covering the 30 days allowed for working out the higher ceilings required by the new pricing formula.

Tenth. This formula requires OPA to set ceilings for manufacturers on an industry-wide basis, reflecting their average 1940 price for each product, plus increases in cost since. OPA could refuse the increase to manufacturers already receiving cost plus a reasonable profit if the increase would not aid production, or if it would reduce production of equally needed items.

Eleventh. OPA still would retain considerably more discretion than under the Taft amendment. For example, it could make "reasonable adjustments for conditions resulting from abnormal volume of production."

Twelfth. OPA would have to give wholesale and retail distributors ceilings reflecting their "current cost of acquisition of any commodity plus such average percentage discount or mark-up as was in effect March 31, 1946."

Thirteenth. Subsidies largely for holding down food prices trimmed from the $2,000,000,000 asked by OPA to about $1,000,000,000. No food subsidies could be paid after next April 1.

Mr. Speaker, can you conceive of our farmers, our businessmen, our manufacturers, and all the rest, being compelled to conform to the new swarm of rules, regulations, and directives following the passage of this law?

Even if the President does have the temerity to sign this monstrosity, it is impossible of administration. A three-man Board, selected by the President, is brought into the picture. Now, if these were supermen, or were all practical, common-sense businessmen, and functioned as such, possibly this new proposal could be made to work. If they were all men like Chester Bowles the confusion would be just three times as bad as it was when he had a one-man Administration. Under this new bill there will not only be uncertainty, but the chances are a hundred to one that there will be chaos. Imagine the task of going back to June 30 and starting all over again. Who would know what or when?

Mr. Speaker, the very idea of controlling the price of agricultural products, for instance, with a declaration in the beginning that there can be, which means that there probably will be, a readjustment of these prices every 30 days. What in the world is the farmer going to do if he knows that some bureau in Washington may change his selling price every 30 days? Will this get food and the things we need and the production we must have? Surely, no one familiar with agriculture can entertain any such belief. This is just one of the many incongruous possibilities inherent in this conference report.

Today there is no price-fixing control at all. Under this bill there will be selective control, entirely in the discretion of the new three-man bureau set up. On some commodities there cannot be any control before August 21. On other commodities there can be no control at all. The words control and decontrol are used carelessly and promiscuously. It is a case of going and coming at the same time. The old story about "on again, off again, gone again, Finnegan," has nothing on this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I have received literally hundreds of letters and telegrams from constituents demanding that the price-control law which was in effect be continued without any crippling amendments. These groups and individuals protested bitterly about the action of the House in passing the bill which the President vetoed. Certainly they do not want this pending bill with these additional crippling amendments.

Because I voted for the bill which the President vetoed, I was severaly condemned by these advocates of OPA. If I follow their instructions today, I certainly cannot vote for this bill. In short, I doubt if a single Member of the House has been asked by one of his constituents or one group from his district to support this proposal now before us. I shall, therefore, vote to recommit the bill to the conference committee in the hope that the glaring inequalities, impossibilities, and inequities may be eliminated if price control is to be continued. If the majority of the House refuses to make such request, then I shall be constrained to vote against this conference report.

I have taken the position from the beginning that OPA control should be eliminated just as soon as the economy of the country would permit. However, I have felt that the best interests of a majority of the people required that it be removed gradually. When the President permitted wages and the cost of production to rise, then the line was broken. When he purposely discontinued all price control, the result on our economy was not at all as he had predicted. Yes; there were increases in some prices. When subsidies were removed and the consumer paid his own grocery bill, he necessarily paid about 12 cents more a pound for round steak and about 18 cents a pound more for butter, if the producer was to get the same price he received when the Federal Government paid the producer these amounts in subsidies; that is, the taxpayer paid the subsidy, or a part of the consumer's grocery bill. Few of our people expect these subsidies to be continued permanently. Yes; prices in many instances are much higher and there are profiteers, but not nearly so many as we who believed in the efficacy of OPA, as a war measure, anticipated.

If this conference report is not accepted, it will mean the conferees must work out a bill not so intricate, not so involved, and one that has a possibility of accomplishing the purpose for which the original OPA law was enacted. There is no hope of such benefits coming from the bill now before us. Its enactment will but add to the uncertainty.

Mr. SAVAGE. Mr. Speaker, we cannot have free enterprise without a public to patronize it. Unless we control inflation the public's purchasing power will be wiped out. Some of this Republican talk about free enterprise, while completely ignoring the welfare of the people, reminds me of Mr. Chesty D. Breathedeep in this article from the Southern Teamster of July 3, as follows:

ONLY ENTERPRISE IS FREE

(By John Payne)

Congressman Stumblebum loudly cleared his throat. "The meeting will come to order," he said.

"We are privileged to have appearing before our committee today," the Congressman continued, "Mr. Chesty D. Breathedeep, who is national president of the Fresh Air Supply Corp. of America. Mr. Breathedeep will now do our committee the honor of answering whatever questions you gentlemen may care to ask him."

Mr. Breathedeep looked expectantly around the room.

"Ask me any questions at all, gentlemen," he invited. "The Fresh Air Supply Corp. of America keeps no secrets from the public."

"Is it true, Mr. Breathedeep," asked Congressman Gravestone, "that your corporation plans to sell air for breathing to the people of America?"

"Yes," said Mr. Breathedeep, wiggling with pride. "The Fresh Air Supply Corp. aims to be of service to each and every American from the cradle to the grave. We will sell air suitable for breathing to young and old at moderate rates, payable on the first of every month."

"Does this mean, Mr. Breathedeep," asked Senator Foghorn, "that everybody will henceforth have to purchase his or her supply of air from your corporation?"

"Quite so," answered Mr. Breathedeep, continuing to wriggle. "Our corporation will render service to the American people in much the same manner as the water companies do when they sell water or the power companies when they sell electricity. In other words, we plan to operate in the true spirit of free enterprise."

"But doesn't the Fresh Air Supply Corp. expect competition from other companies?" asked Congressman Frogface.

"No," answered Mr. Breathedeep. "Our corporation has taken the trouble to buy up exclusive rights to the invention which rations the air. And the original inventor, poor chap, died of a mysterious ailment a short time ago."

"Isn't your corporation operating in violation of antitrust laws, Mr. Breathedeep?" asked Congressman Fishcake.

"No, indeed," answered Mr. Breathedeep quickly. "Our corporation is not a monopoly. We merely are the only business enterprise in our own particular field. We take pride in serving the public. Why, in addition to providing our customers with pure, unadulterated air without gasoline fumes, obnoxious odors, and flying insects, we also supply each and every client with a free air meter which locks easily to the nose and shows at a glance how much fresh air each person has consumed for a given period."

"But, Mr. Breathedeep," asked a Congressman from the far end of the room, "wasn't the air we breathe meant to be free just like the sunshine?"

An angry murmur spread through the room. Congressman Stumblebum rapped for order.

"You don't have to answer that question, Mr. Breathedeep," advised Congressman Stumblebum with an apologetic look.

Mr. Breathedeep ran a finger between his collar and his perspiring neck.

"Gentlemen," he said, "the Fresh Air Supply Corp. is proud that it is ending the wasteful practice of careless breathing of air. If air and water and electricity were free to everybody, gentlemen, I ask you, what would happen to our system of free enterprise?"

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, this bill will bring neither price control nor full production. Instead it will bring utter chaos, black markets, scarcities, higher prices, inflation. I will vote against the bill, and in doing so, I am voting in the interest of people of small means.

Mr. RABIN. Mr. Speaker, I have often stated that I am for a strong OPA. I voted against the last conference report because I did not think that under the bill then proposed, price ceilings could have been enforced. I believe the Congress would do best if it would extend the OPA for 1 year without change, leaving it to the OPA to lift controls in the meantime on such commodities when it deems it safe to do so. The majority of the Congress, it seems, does not wish to do that.

The present conference report proposes the passage of an OPA bill which I am informed can be enforced. To be sure, it is not as good a bill as I would like to see enacted. However, it is the best that we can possibly get from this Congress, and much as I do not like it, I think it is in the best interests of our country that it be passed. I shall, therefore, vote for it.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, in considering the present conference report on price control, the membership is required to accept this legislation or nothing. When this bill was before the House several months ago, I opposed the crippling amendments which were adopted. I later upheld the President's veto of the emasculated bill which he was called upon to sign or veto.

This legislation is a slight improvement over the bill which the President vetoed, but it is the only protection the consuming public can expect, to keep down the cost of living.

Since OPA was discontinued on July 1, slightly over 3 weeks ago, prices have risen rapidly. This increase has taken place in spite of the fact that manufacturers, wholesalers, retailers, and so forth, through propaganda and otherwise, urged everybody to keep prices down. One would infer that their campaign was carried on for the purpose of holding down prices until Congress recessed with the hope that no price control legislation would be enacted.

According to a survey conducted on over 900 commodities, the following index reveals:

First. In all of 1945 the general price index rose 2.4 points, from 104.6 to 107. That is a 2.3 percent increase.

Second. In 6 months of 1946 before OPA died the index jumped from 107 percent to 112.7 percent of the 1926 base. That rise was at a rate five times as great as in 1945.

Third. In 1946 after OPA, in the first two control-free weeks, prices of these 900 commodities at wholesale shot up from 112.7 to 120.7—4.5 points in the first week and 3.5 in the second. That rise was at a rate more than 80 times as fast as the 1945 rate.

Food prices lead the increase. One can easily understand the effect this will have on over 9,000,000 families in America whose income is under $1,000 a year—12,000,000 families whose income is under $2,000 a year—10,000,000 families whose income is under $3,000 a year.

I hope this legislation will be sufficiently effective to revert to the July 1 prices on rents, food, clothing, and other necessary commodities.

OPA NOT NEEDED

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, the American people have had 3 weeks without price control. The shackles have been removed from industry and the food-producing sections of our economy. It is interesting to note just what has happened during these 3 weeks without OPA.

It is only natural that some foods in short supply, because of previous OPA actions, should go up in price. The price increases have not been as much as the Bowles-Porter administration machine said they would be. In the case of poultry and eggs, the price has actually declined under the original OPA prices. Butter today is slightly below the OPA ceiling of 3 weeks ago. It should also be remembered that there was a subsidy of 12 to 17 cents a pound on butterfat. Many people in the country did not realize that they were not paying their entire grocery bill when they bought meat and butter over the counter.

In the case of meat, we have seen the largest run of cattle and hogs since the pig-killing days of 1934 and the drought years for cattle in 1936. Yesterday the stockyards of Kansas City and other leading markets had the largest run of cattle that they have had in a quarter of a century. The supply of cattle surpassed the all-time high in the Kansas City market, which was in 1920. Meat, under a free market, is filling up the supply lines, the cooling rooms, and the lockers of the country. No longer do we see meat and butter lines. These products are abundant in all stores of the country.

It is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that all of the large metropolitan stores of the country are having clearance sales on many staple articles. Many other items in the stores are priced far below the original OPA price. For the first time it is possible to buy white shirts and many articles that were formerly not to be found. It is true that there are some merchants that have boosted the price of meat and butter and other necessary items of living. They have taken advantage of a public hungry for meat and butter. They have found, as have the black-market boys, that free competition soon asserts itself and prices come down. It is estimated that the black-market operators have lost more than $10,000,000 in meat alone since the 1st of July.

It is only natural that there will be some maladjustments and some shock to our economy by the immediate termination of OPA. This would happen whenever the Congress decided to stop OPA and the subsidies involved.

Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the reading and the discussion of the conference report on the OPA. It is my considered opinion that the bill as written is unworkable. It will add chaos to confusion. It is a Frankenstein monstrosity that cannot be administered. The people already have nullified OPA as they did the old NRA and national prohibition when they were in effect. The bill is confusing and will cause more and more unrest not only in the agricultural section but the industrial sections of the country.

It is only natural that the black-market boys are now lobbying in the halls of Congress asking that OPA be continued. They know that with the passage of this bill that the legitimate market will dry up and they again will come into their lush untaxable profits.

I am certain, Mr. Speaker, that if the controls are placed back upon cattle, dairy and other products that the market will dry up and these products can only be found at black-market prices.

How can you expect the man who feeds cattle, for instance, to buy and place in the feed lot cattle when the price can be changed every 30 days? The provisions for a Decontrol Board would require the employment of thousands of decontrol boards in order to handle the requests for price changes. The prices are subject to change every 30 days. This is an impossible situation.

I note, Mr. Speaker, that there is a section of the bill which provides that the Decontrol Board can operate on a regional basis. I am wondering if we might expect this Board, controlled by the administration, just a few weeks before election to remove all the controls on meat, butter, and agricultural products in the areas that produce them, but at the same time keep price controls to satisfy the CIO and other radical groups, in the large industrial centers. Controls were removed first before the elections in 1944 and I would expect the same maneuvering again.

If I were selfish, I would secretly hope that OPA would continue because I am satisfied it will make more Republicans than the National Republican Committee or any other group could possibly make. If this bill is enacted, it will certainly mean that the Republicans will control this House after January 1947.

I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that this bill will cause so much confusion in the agricultural and industrial centers that production will drop and food and scarce articles will again be hard to find in the legitimate markets of the country.

Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for rent controls in areas where needed, but I cannot support a bill which places the shackles of bureaucracy back upon a free enterprise which to date has demonstrated beyond the question of a doubt that it can produce and sell items needed by a hungry public below the original OPA ceilings and without the bureaucratic regimentation and red tape which must follow the enactment of this bill.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, the present bill which is under consideration at this time and sent to us under a parliamentary situation which prohibits amendments on the floor of the House is in my opinion much worse from an administrative standpoint than the price control bill which was sent to the President and which received his veto on June 29. Mr. Speaker, his action in vetoing the previous OPA extension bill places me in a position for the first time of voting to permit controls to be taken off specific items for any length of time. My voting record on the amendments to the bill which he vetoed June 29 will show that I voted against the elimination of controls on any specific items such as meat, poultry, dairy products, and so forth. However, this bill permits these items to remain uncontrolled until August 20, 1946.

The controversy over the extension of price control has never been a question of what Senator TAFT wanted or what Chester Bowles wanted, but it has been a question of whether or not a law enacted by Congress and signed by the President can be ignored by those who are placed in charge of its administration and their own judgment substituted for the terms of law.

As of July 15, 1946, I wired the President as follows:

Present OPA controversy calls for frank statement from you to the American public as to whether you condone the administrative disregard for statutory law in substituting discretion and expediency for fairness and equity. OPA law since June 1942, required administration "to control price in a fair and equitable manner." Zenas Potter, Congressional Information Director, advised me in March 1945 that OPA could not stand an investigation as to fairness and equity because OPA had not been fair and equitable. Chester Bowles in June 1945 advised 50 Congressmen in the Labor Committee meeting room that if OPA was extended for 1 year without amendments he would personally guarantee a fair and equitable administration. July 7, 1945, Chester Bowles advised Congress in a mimeographed letter that it was impossible for him to conduct the OPA in a fair and equitable manner because his assistants insisted on discretion and expediency for their guide. This condition continues under Paul Porter and is the cause of congressional dissatisfaction at this time. The controversy is on the question of whether the retreat to natural economic law shall be gradual or abrupt. A statement from you to the public that you will not appoint to the Price Decontrol Board anyone who has been or is connected with the OPA at any policy making or supervisory level in the district, regional, or national offices, will go far to restoring confidence of the American people in the possibility that laws as enacted by Congress will be carried out by the administrative officials for whom you are responsible. Failure on your part to issue such a statement would justify the presumption that you condone the illegal position of Chester Bowles and Paul Porter as well as all officials charged with writing the price control regulations of OPA and would justify complete statutory elimination of these controls as the only method of assuring equal justice to all.

He has not seen fit to issue a public statement concerning his position on the administrative disregard for statutory law by both Zenas Potter and Chester Bowles who have left the Office of Price Administration. He has not seen fit to publicly announce whom he will select for the Decontrol Board or whether he will attempt to reestablish some of those who were guilty of malfeasance in office by disregarding the text of existing law or whether he will look further for members of this Decontrol Board.

Mr. Speaker, I have consistently fought for administrative respect for the statutory law, and I shall continue to fight to see that the laws as passed by Congress are administered in accordance with their terms. I have always felt that the laws passed by Congress should contain the exact wording and the exact philosophy intended by Congress and that nothing should be left to the discretion of the Administrator by reason of skeleton law.

The bill we have under consideration here complies with that fundamental view of mine and for that reason I intend to vote for it at this time.

The bill extends the life of the Office of Price Administration until June 30, 1947, and states that on that date the Office of Price Administration shall be abolished. It requires the President of the United States to make recommendations by January 15, 1947, concerning needed legislation to establish monetary, fiscal, and other policies which are adequate to supplement the control of prices and wages during that balance of the fiscal year 1947, and to insure that general prices and wages can be terminated by the end of that fiscal year without danger of inflation thereafter.

My affirmative vote in favor of the passage of this legislation cannot be construed as a vote in favor of all the contents of this bill. But because of the legislative parliamentary predicament in which we find ourselves at this time which prohibits amendments to the bill in the House of Representatives, there will be some features in this bill permitted to become law which are much worse than any provision contained in the bill that was vetoed June 29.

I hope that the President of the United States in fulfilling the requirement of this bill by appointing the members of the Price Decontrol Board will make it a mandatory consideration for his appointment that members shall act on the law as written by Congress and shall not bring into consideration of their duties any personal philosophy such as dominated the Office of Price Administration during the term of Chester Bowles when Mr. Bowles advised that he was not fair and equitable, had no intention of being fair and equitable at the beginning of his administration, and, therefore, could not stand an investigation of his administration as to fairness and equity.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I voted for the bill extending OPA over the President's veto. I believe that bill would have worked, if it had passed, to stabilize rents and prices, to encourage production. But OPA is dead, as a result of the President's veto. This bill is an attempt, not to continue and taper off a live operation, but an attempt to revive and build up something that is very dead. It would take a very good bill to do this. I have attempted to analyze this long complicated, compromise presented here. It is full of exceptions, duplications, decontrols, recontrols, subcontrols, demicontrols, sleepers, and words and phrases that mean different things to different people. The compromise apparently consisted of putting in everything anybody wanted, and then taking it out again by interpretations and exceptions. I would vote for a workable and effective price control bill. I cannot see how this bill will work, or be effective for any purpose except political purposes; to keep 37,000 OPA employees on the pay roll, so as to spend the seventy-five millions appropriated for them, and add a billion dollars to the public debt for subsidies.

A majority of this House has never before voted in favor of consumers' subsidies. We repeatedly showed by our votes that we thought consumers' subsidies were unsound and immoral. All we ever did was to vote limitations on subsidies which the President had already put into effect. Today is the first time we have ever voted on this question when there were no subsidies in effect. I cannot see how we are justified in reinstating subsidies, now that the country has weathered the shock of removing them. It is as if a cripple who had learned to get along without crutches deliberately took to wearing them again. My guess is that if this bill becomes law you will see a subsidized price rollback just before election, and that will be the only price reduction ever accomplished by this bill.

I am voting to continue rent controls, although I believe this can be done better by the States.

I have thought about voting for this bill as a gesture to show that I wish we had effective price control. I know that many of my colleagues, who share my pessimism about this bill, are voting for it on this basis. I cannot bring myself to do it. I believe it is almost as phony as the 20-day bill the House passed July 1, and time has already demonstrated that that bill was a 100-percent phony.

Nothing will happen under this bill until August 20. The country will then have been without price control for 7 weeks. It would be difficult to reinstate price control under such circumstances with any bill. It would be almost impossible to do it with this bill. It will be completely impossible to do it with this bill under an administration that has already demonstrated its impotence under past OPA laws, and already confessed its impotence to administer a law like this. The confusion, uncertainty, and exasperation that will be caused by the deluge of new regulations and orders under this bill will hamper production and dislocate our economy, but will not keep prices down for long, if at all. Meanwhile, the black markets will flourish once more.

I think this bill should go back to conference for another try. If not, then it should be sent to the President by those who have confidence in the administration that will put it into effect. I am voting "no" on this conference report.

EXTENSION OF PRICE CONTROL

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the reading of House Report No. 2629, being the conference report on the extension of the Emergency Price Control and Stabilization Acts, and meanwhile have read it to myself. I have supported the extension of price-control and stabilization legislation and all necessary appropriations, but this conference report is something I cannot support. If the provisions of this conference report become law, it will not prove effective in the control of prices, while its administrative features are strong enough to permit the OPA to crucify everyone concerned, and the bill itself is so balled up as to confuse everyone and anyone who may attempt to abide by it. The American people have a faculty for ignoring laws which they feel to be unjust, and I believe that will be the course of action taken with this extension of price-control and stabilization legislation.

My colleague the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] has stated that he intends to move to recommit the bill with instructions to strike out everything but the rent-control provisions. I intend to vote against that motion for two reasons: First, because it is unjust to remove price controls on everything else but rents, and then expect rental property owners to be able to maintain their premises and pay taxes. Rents are the only prices that have not been increased since the Price Control Act went into effect, but property owners must pay double and treble the prices for their maintenance and repairs, and taxes have increased from 25 to 40 percent. Furthermore, the legislative bodies in Los Angeles County and in the city of Los Angeles and Glendale, Calif., have instituted rent controls, allowing a 15-percent increase in rents as an interim measure, and it is my firm belief that to cause the roll-back of such rentals will serve only to decrease the number of rental units that would be made available at a time when housing is short enough. I have long taken the position that if the OPA Rent Control Division were as considerate of the owners of rental property as they have been with certain suppliers of needed merchandise, that many thousands of rental units would be made available for rent in the Los Angeles area. That assumption has been proved by the investigation of an interim committee of the California State Legislature. That committee reported earlier this summer to the effect that in the city of Los Angeles alone, such consideration would result in making available rental units that would house more than 125,000 people.

When the vote comes on the question of agreeing with the conference report, I must vote against it, because I am convinced that it will create utter confusion, create more black markets, and dry up the supply of more goods, thereby accentuating shortages, than the bill which I voted for and which the President vetoed on July 29 last.

My vote against the conference report does not mean that I am opposed to proper price control, for my position in that matter has been clearly indicated in the recent past by my votes in favor of extending price control. The pending measure, however, borders on being a legislative monstrosity, as I read it.

A BILL TO LEGALIZE CHAOS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the new OPA bill, in my judgment, will be a bitter disappointment and I cannot vote to approve it in the form now before us.

This bill will legalize chaos and establish uncertainty by statute.

Until the 20th of August, producers and processors of the major food items such as meat, milk, grains, and soybeans, will not know whether they are to be placed under control again or not. They may expect to be, but until the decontrol board speaks, they will not know. They will be in the state of mind of the man in the death cell who has taken an appeal.

And the other group of food producers who deal with poultry and eggs will be in the position of the convict who is out on parole. They will never know when the parole will be forfeited.

Both groups will be on a 30-day basis.

If business in this country can operate on a 30-day basis, it will be something to see. Dealers will be forced to speculate on inventories. Producers and manufacturers will either gamble or go out of business.

How can you feed, how can you buy livestock to feed, unless you know whether normal and seasonal factors will govern the price when you sell?

The ideas of three men, whose whims and tendencies are not known, will determine the capricious course of prices and production.

I have voted consistently to give price control a chance, Mr. Speaker when there was a chance. I have voted as consistently against fooling the people by giving them an unworkable act. That is why I voted against sending to the President the bill he vetoed and I shall certainly vote against sending him this bill although he and his spokesmen apparently are asking for it.

To be specific, I voted to send to the Senate the first bill because it was necessary that the other body have a whack at it if any bill was to develop, but I could not see anything but futility in the Senate amendments and voted against concurrence in them. And, of course, I voted to sustain the veto.

I voted for the 20-day temporary extension, in the belief that time should be provided for getting a workable bill if that was possible. If the bill now before us is the best bill obtainable, then I must conclude that a satisfactory general price control bill is impossible to get at this time.

I shall vote for continuing rent control alone if we are given an opportunity to do so, because there is a serious shortage of housing and it cannot be ended overnight. With most foods and clothing, it is possible to get along or find something else that will do. Supply will respond to the demand, in most things, but it will take time for housing to do so.

It is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that tobacco and petroleum are decontrolled by the bill now presented to us. I am reminded of the remark credited to a distinguished gentleman, the other day, when another body had completed its work on the bill. It was to the effect that there must be some sore backs around because there had been so much back scratching.

The history of price-control efforts in World War II is the story of an attempt to control the other fellow.

The first stabilization bill put a ceiling on farm products but left the lid off wages and things the farmer had to buy. The second act continued the ceiling on farm products and propped up wages with a floor—the so-called Little Steel formula of a 15-percent boost.

When the fighting war ended, wage controls were abandoned and the President said, in effect, that any group which called a strike for it could get an 18 percent increase, and to insure the increase in Big Steel, he approved a $5-per-ton increase for steel across the board.

Farm machinery was needed by the farmer to produce food. Higher steel and higher wages force higher prices for machinery. The average farmer would gladly pay more if he could but get the machinery. For the average farmer is just too trusting; he simply cannot believe that the powers that be will actually put a lid on what he has to sell while pushing up the price of what he has to buy. Or is he?

This bill, if it becomes law, will teach him.

Sooner or later, Mr. Speaker, this country and all the people in it will have to learn that we cannot have our cake and eat it, too. You cannot permanently put prices in a strait-jacket and let costs run wild. The taxpayers of this Nation will dig up over $6,000,000,000 to foot the bill for consumer subsidies paid out of the Treasury between 1940 and 1945—that with interest for the part of the grocery bill passed on to the future.

We have been deluded by the talk about prices and goods. Men have forgotten that in this country we have another way to control the value of money. That is the use of our gold reserves.

We really do not need OPA to guard against a runaway inflation as long as we have a gold supply and can readily convert the value of our paper currency to its original basis or to any other gold ratio basis that Congress may see fit to adopt. Paper money can be given a real value whenever we want to do it; that is where our situation is unlike that of China or Germany or Austria.

To be sure, I do not know how long it would take some of the current controllers to accept the idea that gold talks an international language and has a real value independent of rules and regulations. Some day, however, the chips will be down and gold will be admitted to be what it is.

It is hard to kick against the stubborn law of supply and demand. Eventually, artificial decrees on prices must cease and the country must fit prices to costs and let demand inspire or check production as the case may be. During the past 3 weeks we had begun to do that. Why now try to decree artificial prices by fiat and have to adjust all over again? And, especially, why do it by requiring uncertainty and confusion as this bill does?

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, several days ago when we sent this bill to conference my good and valued friend the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT], whom I admire very much, expressed serious doubt, in fact I think he probably expressed himself more frankly, as to the inability of the conferees to get together and agree upon a bill. Respecting his views, as I always do, I could not agree with him, and I expressed optimism and confidence that if the bill went to conference the conferees would be able to get together and adopt an acceptable bill. A majority, the great majority, of the conferees have done that. The bill before us, in my opinion, constitutes an acceptable bill. It is a bill which, in my opinion, and I am expressing my opinion only, will become law. As I confidently expressed my opinion several days ago about the ability of the conferees to get together and agree upon a bill, I now express with equal confidence the statement that this bill is acceptable, and if the conference report is adopted by both branches it will become law.

This bill enables control, a control sufficient under the circumstances, to meet the national interests of our country and the best interests of our people. It possesses something that was lacking in the last bill which was sent to the President and which he vetoed. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY] in commenting upon the remarks made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] misconstrued, as I understand it, what the gentleman from Georgia said. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] said that his amendment in the present conference report covering reasonable profits, and so forth, is workable and will be workable, whereas the provisions of the Taft amendment were such that if they had been incorporated into law they would not have been workable. I will ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] if my understanding of his statement is correct?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. That is practically true. I think reasonable profit was the goal Mr. TAFT was shooting at, but in his language it would have been most difficult to enforce. On my amendment Mr. TAFT has agreed with me by voting for it.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KUNKEL. There is a similar amendment in the OPA Act and has been since 1944.

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes, I understand that.

. Mr. KUNKEL. It has been administered since that time by the OPA.

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. The last page of the original bill that came from the Banking and Currency Committee shows that cotton was taken care of just as much as the Taft amendment took care of all the rest of the businesses in the United States.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think I have corrected any misunderstanding the gentleman from Wisconsin in good faith had about the remarks made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. Certainly the gentleman from Georgia has clarified it and the gentleman from Wisconsin ought to accept the statement made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. If the gentleman from Georgia leaves his remarks in the RECORD as he made them, then we may find out.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am surprised at the gentleman from Wisconsin making an observation of that kind. He amazes me.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Getting back to the statement made by the gentleman from Georgia, subsection (f) starts out by saying:

> If the maximum prices of a product on the average equal its average current total cost plus a reasonable profit,

No further adjustment must be made.

One of the alternate standards under the Barkley amendment is almost exactly the same language where it says that the maximum prices for a product shall be deemed in compliance with this standard if such prices on the average are equal to the average total cost of the product plus the industry's average over-all profit margin on sales in the base period.

What is the reason for bringing in there that repetition if the words following that do not control, and if the words following that do control then the Administrator is given authority to control production.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, we have before us a bill that we will have to vote up or down. The bill constitutes, in my opinion, the most acceptable bill that the conferees could arrive at. We are in a legislative situation where amendments cannot be offered.

The gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] has served notice that if he is recognized he is going to offer a motion to recommit. In order for the gentleman from California to be recognized, the Republican Members who have the prior right to be recognized, and this means anyone of them, will not offer such a motion to recommit. No Member of the Republican Party will offer a motion to recommit.

The gentleman says he is going to offer a motion to recommit to strike out everything but rents. How does he think rents are going to be stabilized or frozen if everything else goes sky high? That would not be fair to the owners of property if we do not control prices on other things that people eat and which they have to buy, and then freeze rents. On the other hand, if you let this condition exist it would not be fair to the public where you confine it to rents only, because you cannot in practical operation freeze rents only. It would not be fair all along from that angle. It would not be fair to the tenant, and it would not be fair to the owner. Certainly it would not be fair to the man who wore the uniform in the last war and came back and expected to buy something for the dollar he receives either as a pension or the salary he now receives from private employment.

This is an acceptable bill. I use the word "acceptable" and not the word "agreeable." It is the best bill, I think, we could obtain. I think the conferees did a remarkable job. Those who did not sign the report exercised their conscience and their judgment, and I respect them deeply in disagreement. But, a great majority of the conferees in both bodies signed the report. With the difficulties that confronted them, I think the conferees on both sides rose to the heights of statesmanship. They agreed upon a bill under the most difficult conditions. That bill is now before us. We cannot very well adjourn Congress without passing under the present conditions some kind of price-control legislation. There ought to be some kind of price-control legislation on the books in the interest of the American people. If we adjourn Congress and prices go pyramiding as they are likely to—because they rose over 75 percent on an average in the 9 months after controls were taken off following the first World War, and we are going to undergo some additional experiences because there are more shortages now than after the first World War—and if prices increase now, coupled with no price control, I am inclined to think that the people of the United States in November, particularly in close districts, no matter who represents that district, Republican or Democrat, are likely to exercise some control of their own.

But, we ought to have the interest of the people at heart. This is an acceptable bill, and I hope the conference report will be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the conference report.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman if no Member on the minority side desires to offer a motion to recommit.

Is the gentleman from California opposed to the conference report?

Mr. LEA. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman qualifies. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LEA moves to recommit House Joint Resolution 371 to the Committee on Conference with instructions to the conferees on the part of the House to insist on striking out all of the provisions of the Senate amendments other than those relating to rent control.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WADSWORTH) there were—ayes 120, noes 159.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 135, nays 219, answered "present" 2, not voting 74, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

House Resolution 670 was laid on the table.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, in view of the pressure of time in the closing days of the Congress, and due to the importance of certain bills to come before the Congress, including social-security amendments, the reorganization of Congress, and other important pending matters, and since there is no particular point to be served in the preservation of Calendar Wednesday tomorrow, I move that Calendar Wednesday business be dis-dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARCANTONIO) there were—ayes 192, noes 34.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So (two-thirds having voted in the affirmative) the motion was agreed to.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, in view of the motion just adopted, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet tomorrow at 11 o'clock.

Mr. MARCANTONIO and Mr. POWELL objected.

COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Education may be permitted to sit this afternoon during general debate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

UNITED NATIONS EDUCATIONAL, SCIENTIFIC, AND CULTURAL ORGANIZATION

Mr. BLOOM submitted a conference report and statement on the Resolution (H. J. Res. 305) providing for membership and participation by the United States in the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization, and authorizing an appropriation therefor.

RAILROAD REORGANIZATIONS

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5924) to enable debtor railroad corporations, whose properties during a period of 7 years have provided sufficient earnings to pay fixed charges, to effect a readjustment of their financial structure without further proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 5924, with Mr. FORAND in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I am not as familiar with the pending bill as the members of our subcommittee on bankruptcy who have given it a great deal of close study, but I have read enough of the hearings to convince myself that it is a meritorious measure.

As has been explained, a great many, if not most of the railroad systems of the country were thrown into bankruptcy during the dark decade between 1930 and 1940, and reorganization plans were made and approved under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act based on the depressed values and low earnings of the thirties. Under those plans the holders of junior securities and the stockholders were completely wiped out. Since those plans were approved the railroads have enjoyed several lush years. A number of them have made their fixed charges and have accumulated large reserves, sufficient to pay fixed charges, rehabilitate the properties, pay defaulted interest, and provide working capital. Railroads which had no equity values in 1939 and 1940 are now entirely solvent.

This bill merely provides that in the case of bankrupt railroads which have made fixed charges for 7 years and whose reorganization plans have not been consummated, the Court may return the management and properties to the former owners for a period of 18 months within which they may have the opportunity of working out compositions with their creditors. They may not be successful but I feel that the stockholders should have a chance to save some of their investments from the wreckage.

During the depression New York State passed a law declaring a moratorium on mortgage foreclosures for nonpayment of principal when due. Thousands of home owners were losing their life's savings because of their financial difficulties and the unwillingness or inability of banks and other financial institutions to lend money for refinancing mortgages when they fell due. This law has saved thousands of homes and has caused comparatively trivial losses to mortgagees. Congress took cognizance of a similar situation in the Dust Bowl States where thousands of thrifty, hard-working farmers were losing their properties because of a succession of poor crop years. We passed the Fraser-Lemke bill to give these unfortunate men a chance to save their farms.

If final orders are now made to put the reorganization plans of railroads, made 6 or 7 years ago, into effect, it would be equivalent to depriving a Dakota farmer of his property after the rains have come and crops are abundant.

If the humane principle underlying the New York mortgage moritorium act and the Fraser-Lemke Act is sound, then the Reed bill we are considering is sound, and so far as I am concerned I see no reason why there should be any exceptions.

I believe this bill should be passed to protect thousands of small investors in railroad stocks against total loss of their investments. I want them to have a chance for their white alley.

If this bill is not passed the ownership and management of the railroads of the country will fall into the hands of the holders of the senior securities who are a comparatively small group of banks and insurance companies. The passage of the bill can cause them no loss, but it may have the effect of preventing their unjust enrichment at the expense of many little men.

With a few powerful financial institutions owning the railroads it is a short step to Government ownership.

In my judgment, and that of many others more competent than I to judge, the passage of the bill will do much to restore the credit of the railroads. Investors will be far more willing to buy railroad stocks if they know their equities will have some measure of protection.

It seems to me that the passage of this bill is in the interest of hundreds of thousands of good, thrifty, hard-working American citizens, and that it is in the interest of the railroads themselves.

ONLY CONGRESS CAN SAVE RAILROAD INVESTORS FROM BUREAUCRATIC EXECUTION

Mr. REED of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this legislation is to halt as quickly as possible the further destruction of over $2,000,000,000 of railroad securities that represent the savings of hundreds of thousands of American men and women distributed throughout the Nation.

To fully understand the present problem it is necessary to review briefly the reorganization proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act which produced the lamentable condition which this bill seeks to remedy.

When our railroads were struck by the inescapable fury of the unprecedented national depression of the early 1930's, augmented by serious drought and other adverse conditions, there existed in the law only the equity receivership procedure for foreclosing the lien of obligations which defaulted in payment of either interest or principal or both. That procedure had theretofore resulted in such wanton losses of railroad investments, that Congress hastily passed a new law in 1933 to grant relief to these financially imperiled railroads. That law, now known as section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, was intended by Congress to avoid the enormous sacrifices of investments and the tremendous cost of railroad receiverships.

In actual practice, however, as construed and applied by the Interstate Commerce Commission and the courts, section 77 has proved to be a procedure whereby over $2,000,000,000 of railroad investments, both bonds and stocks, either have been or will be needlessly wiped out unless Congress acts promptly to prevent it.

To understand how this has happened and how it will continue to occur unless Congress halts it requires a brief review of the procedure under section 77. Under that statute, when a debtor railroad corporation is unable to meet its obligations as they mature, it files a petition in the Federal district court in which it seeks to be reorganized. The court then appoints trustees to take over and manage the railroad's property. The debtor railroad is required to file a plan of reorganization with the Interstate Commerce Commission, which then holds hearings, in which all parties in interest, including creditors and mortgage trustees, are permitted to intervene and be heard. Other parties are also allowed to submit plans of reorganization. After such hearings, the Commission issues an approved plan of reorganization which may be one of the plans submitted, or a modification or combination of any such plans, or it may be the Commission's own plan. In any event the Commission issues an approved plan which thereby becomes the Commission's plan regardless of how it originated. Section 77 also provides a procedure under which the district court may first approve and later confirm a plan of reorganization theretofore approved by the Commission.

However, the Supreme Court has held repeatedly that the courts cannot independently review the Commission's valuation or pass upon whether the plan unjustly or inequitably limits the proposed capitalization of the new company, with the consequent elimination of old securities in excess of such limit of capitalization, but the courts are restricted to determining merely whether the Commission's findings of value and of capitalization are supported by some evidence and whether the Commission complied with the procedure and standards specified in the act. After the district court has approved a plan, section 77 provides that the Commission shall submit the plan to a vote of the old security holders to accept or reject it. But stockholders and creditors whose interests have been found by the Commission to be of no value, and hence have been wiped out, are not entitled to vote on the plan at all. Moreover, even if those voting on the plan reject it, the plan nevertheless may be made binding upon them. This was done, for example, in the Denver & Rio Grande Western reorganization where 90 percent of the $43,000,000 claim of the general mortgage bondholders is wiped out, even though the plan was overwhelmingly rejected by them. The result has been that as a practical matter the Commission exercises complete and final authority over the revaluation and recapitalization of these railroads, including the determination of which investments in bonds and stocks should be wholly wiped out or drastically reduced.

Pursuant to this broad and conclusive power, the Commission, in 1939 and 1940, revalued and fixed the capitalization in approved plans of reorganization for almost all of these distressed railroads. Under these plans the capitalizations were cut so drastically that over $2,500,000,000 in the bonds and stocks of those railroads were completely wiped out and in addition many senior securities were harshly treated.

To understand clearly the procedure by which the Commission's plans wipe out these investments it is necessary to keep in mind that the financial structures of railroads consist generally of five classes or kinds of security holders; namely:

First. First or prior lien bondholders, whose bonds are secured by first mortgages on the whole or major portions of the railroad. Their claims must be satisfied ahead of all others.

Second. Second or junior lien bondholders, whose bonds are secured by second or other junior mortgages on property covered by the first and prior claim of the first group or sometimes just on less important mileage.

Third. Unsecured bondholders or other creditors to whom the railroad owes money but who do not hold mortgages on the railroad to secure the payment of their claims.

Fourth. Holders of preferred stock, whose interests in the railroad are subject to and inferior to the claims of all creditors in each of the prior groups, but whose claims usually come ahead of those of the holders of common stock.

Fifth. Holders of common stock whose interests are below and subject to all of the above groups.

Under the law the claims of these security holders must be fairly and equitably provided for in the order of their priority. If there are not sufficient assets to satisfy all these interests, then the common stockholders must make the first sacrifice, then the preferred stockholders, then the unsecured creditors if any, and finally if necessary even the junior bondholders.

The procedure by which the Commission wiped out investments is very simple. It estimated the value of the railroad, basing that value primarily upon its guesses as to future average earnings, and those guesses were in turn based largely upon the extremely low earnings of the depression years. That estimated total value of the railroad was then taken as the limit of its new capitalization, and the Commission's approved plan provided for the issuance of new bonds and stocks only to the total amount of that estimated value. In the case of every one of these railroads the value so estimated by the Commission was drastically less than the old capitalizations of the roads as represented by outstanding bonds and stocks, the issuance of almost all of which had been previously approved by the Commission itself before those old securities had been sold and distributed. The Commission then made a finding that the old securities in excess of the new valuation were without value, and the holders thereof were denied any participation whatever in the new company. They were simply wiped out.

In other words, under such plans of reorganization, there were just not enough new securities for distribution among the holders of all of the old securities, and hence the plans provided for the distribution of the new securities in the order that the old security holders were entitled to priority. That is, the senior or first lien bondholders are entitled to have their claims covered before the junior or second lien bondholders' claims are covered, and then, if there are any new securities left, the preferred stockholders are entitled to receive them, and if there still remain any new securities the common stockholders are entitled to them. But since the Commission's valuations were so drastically less than the total of old bonds and stocks outstanding, the new securities—limited to the amount of that low valuation—were in practically all cases not sufficient to reach down to even the old preferred stock, and in no case, I believe to the common stockholders. These preferred and common stockholders simply receive nothing under the plans, consistently with the Commission's finding that their interests are without value, because those securities are in excess of the Commission's estimate of the total value of the railroad which limits the total permissable capitalization. Thus, such stockholders are wiped out.

Moreover, the Commission's valuations—based primarily, as I said, on the depression earnings—were so extremely low in most cases, that in addition to the interests of stockholders the claims of unsecured creditors and second-lien bondholders also were not fully covered by new securities and a great many creditor claims were likewise wiped out. Indeed, even the senior first-lien bondholders were sometimes very harshly treated. There is hardly a major security issue in any reorganization before the Commission that was not diluted by being offered, at least in part, a new security inferior in character to the old.

Then a great, unexpected change occurred. Beginning in 1940 and continuing at an accelerated rate, the earnings of these railroads rose by leaps and bounds. The 1939–40 guesses of the Commission as to future earnings were proved to be grossly wrong year after year for five full years. The accumulation of large cash surpluses by these railroads and the expenditure, year after year, of huge amounts in the vast improvement of their properties, resulted in a complete transformation of their financial and physical status.

Two examples will suffice to illustrate this change:

During the period from January 1, 1941, to January 1, 1946—5 years—the earnings on the wiped-out stocks of the St. Louis-Southwestern Railroad, after allowing full interest on all bonds, amounted to $149.89 per share of preferred and $144.45 per share of common, an aggregate of $29,801,000. On December 31, 1940, the St. Louis-Southwestern System had a deficit in net current assets of $1,778,894 and its cash on hand at the beginning of 1941 was only $1,448,484, but at the close of 1945, it had net current assets of $21,240,000 and cash and cash items of $31,383,000. On March 31, 1946, net current assets amounted to $23,018,000 and cash and cash items were $32,086,000.

For the year 1944 alone, the St. Louis-Southwestern paid Federal Excess Profit Taxes of $21,398,441—over $124 per share of common stock. Even after the payment of all fixed charges and taxes, including these enormous excess-profits taxes, this railroad earned in this single year over $41 per share of common stock. The earnings per share of preferred stock were, of course, greater still. These are the same stocks that the Commission in its plan of March 9, 1942 declared to have no value.

The Gulf Coast Lines—New Orleans, Texas & Mexico—for the 5-year period 1941–45, inclusive, after allowing full interest on all bonds, earned $103.82 per share of common stock, an aggregate of $15,392,000. On December 31, 1940, net current assets of the Gulf Coast Lines were but $1,585,481, with cash of only $609,901. By December 31, 1945, net current assets of this system had risen to $13,839,490, while cash and cash items had mounted to $18,905,464. On March 31, 1946, net current assets of the Gulf Coast Lines were $15,489,774, with cash and cash items of $21,907,207. For the year 1944 alone the Gulf Coast Lines paid Federal excess profits taxes of $1,522,611—over $67 per share of common stock. Even after the payment of all fixed charges and taxes, including these excess profits taxes, this railroad earned more than $27 per share of common stock in this single year. This is the same common stock that under the Commission's latest plan will receive a mere pittance for each share, namely, one-quarter share of class A stock, and one-half share of class B stock, plus thirty-seven one-hundredths purchase warrants, of the proposed reorganized Missouri Pacific Railroad.

And so it goes with all the rest of these great railroad systems.

The corresponding figures on the Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad are contained in my remarks made before the House on June 11 and appear in the RECORD at page 6702.

In spite of these changes the Commission has persistently refused to revise its original 1939–40 plans of reorganization except to an almost negligible extent.

Take the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad. This railroad in 4½ years—1941 to June 1945—earned $140.91 in its wiped-out preferred stock—and that is after covering all of its interest and fixed charges—and earned $34.14 on its wiped-out common. The total amount earned in these 4½ years on its wiped-out stocks was $69,097,592.

Mr. TALBOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. TALBOT. I notice the statement is made in the report accompanying the bill that the New York, New Haven & Hartford earned all its fixed charges and $46,000,000 more. I assume the gentleman is aware of the fact that the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co. owes to its creditors over $102,000,000 and that even if it earned another $50,000,000 it still would not have enough to pay its creditors.

Mr. REED of Illinois. And at the present time the New York, New Haven & Hartford has in its till in cash $63,691,780, which it can pay to its creditors without having to give them the railroad as well.

Mr. TALBOT. It can do nothing of the kind. If the gentleman will yield again, it owes the Federal Government in taxes, it owes the State government in taxes, it owes every municipality in the State of Connecticut, and the same in Massachusetts in taxes more than $30,000,000 of that $60,000,000; and until the United States District Court orders the New Haven Railroad to make those payments it cannot.

Mr. REED of Illinois. It paid the Federal Government itself in excess profits taxes alone $8,458,123 in 1944.

The earnings of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway over this 4½-year period from January 1, 1941, to June 30, 1945, on its wiped out preferred stock was $121.45, and on its wiped-out common stock $67.52. The total amount earned by this railroad in the 4½-year period on its wiped out stocks amounts to $71,291,766.

The St. Louis-San Francisco Railroad earned in this 4½-year period on its wiped out stock $36,321,158, amounting to $67.04 on the preferred and $34.53 on the common. It paid an excess profits tax of $9,829,000 in 1944 alone.

The Missouri Pacific earned in the 4½-year period on its wiped-out preferred stock $107.58 on each share, and on its wiped-out common stock it earned $73.74.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. REED of Illinois. The Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul earned $52.95 on its wiped-out preferred stock in this 4½-year period, and its wiped-out common stock $31.32. This railroad paid an excess-profits tax on $11,146,146 in the single year of 1944.

On June 28, less than 3 weeks ago, Judge Michael L. Igoe a former distinguished Member of this House, and now judge of the district court in Chicago, handed down an opinion in the case of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway proceedings in which he said:

It must be remembered, in fairness, that practically all of the major plans of reorganization were worked out by the Commission in the year 1940 or prior thereto. Hence they do not and cannot reflect the extensive strengthening of cash resources, the important retirement of debt, and the very considerable improvements to road and equipment made possible by the huge revenues received during the ensuing war years.

* * * * * *

In the present case we have a plan that, except for slight modifications, was prepared by the Commission in 1940 and rests on studies of earnings, etc., going back to 1937 and even beyond.

Against that we find the debtor today with cash or equivalent of over $70,000,000; with an RFC loan aggregating, principal and interest, in excess of $18,000,000, paid in full; with the entire first mortgage of the Peoria Terminal Co., to all intents and purposes paid in full; with over 20 percent of the Choctaw & Memphis first mortgage retired; and with an amazing reduction in the interim of equipment debt. Three classes of creditors set up in the original plan have disappeared—the banks, the RFC, and the Peoria Railway Terminal Co.

The above recital does not take into account the tremendous sums expended over the period on improvement of road and equipment, nor does it include the retirement of debt on jointly owned facilities such as the Joliet and Denver terminals.

Judge Igoe refused to confirm the Commission-approved plan which wiped out seventy-four million of common stock, fifty-four and one-half million of preferred stock, and tens of millions of dollars of junior mortgage bond claims as well. He sent the case back to the Commission for the consideration of modifications to the present plan or the proposal of a new plan.

Of course, his action in that respect will probably be appealed. It will go to the Supreme Court, but, as I stated this morning, Justice Reed in his opinion rendered on behalf of the Supreme Court in the Denver & Rio Grande case said that it was up to Congress, that legislation had already been introduced in the Congress, and he actually referred in his opinion to the report of the committee on this particular bill. He threw the ball to Congress and said, "It is up to you." Now before the order of the court goes into effect a mandate must issue from the Supreme Court to the lower court. It is a significant fact that, after the Supreme Court decided the Denver & Rio Grande case by sustaining the district court and reversing the Circuit Court of Appeals, Justice Reed stayed that mandate. He stayed it until August 1, and it is significant that he, as well as the other Members of the Supreme Court, knew that Congress would be in session until August 1; knew that this bill was pending; knew that the Wheeler bill had already passed the Senate; and that legislation might be passed which would relieve that situation.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. Is H. R. 5924 the bill that is now before us?

Mr. REED of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS. I understood there was an additional section added.

Mr. REED of Illinois. There were some committee amendments added.

Thus section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, which was enacted in 1933 for the relief of railroads in financial distress, unwittingly placed within the jurisdiction of a Federal bureau the power to destroy the very financial and corporate structures Congress intended it to conserve. Congress no less unwittingly gave that bureau the power to determine the future financial and corporate existence of the Nation's railroads; to choose the individuals who were to control those roads; and to decree the forfeiture of $2,500,000,000 of the invested savings of American citizens.

Everyone agrees that it would be wrong to base a plan of reorganization primarily upon earnings during the war years, just as it is wrong to base such plans primarily upon earnings during the depression years. But the demonstrated earning capacity of these railroads and their present improved properties and financial condition as compared with the situation which existed when the Commission's plans were formulated in 1939–40, have conclusively proved those plans to be grossly unfair and inequitable and the shocking sacrifice of hundreds of millions of dollars of railroad investments wholly unwarranted and unnecessary.

The point is that the cash is in the till, and the properties have been actually rehabilitated and improved by huge cash expenditures out of earnings. Whatever may be the source of these great changes in the financial conditions of these railroads, those changes have actually occurred. The old plans of the Commission are completely outmoded.

It is noteworthy that even under the abnormal conditions resulting from the steel strike, the automobile strike, and other strikes this year, many of these railroads made good showings. Take, for example, the two railroads to which I have already referred. In the first 4 months of 1946, the Gulf Coast Lines earned $16.18 per share on the wiped-out common stock, even though gross revenues fell from $17,000,000—for the corresponding period in 1945—to $14,000,000. The St. Louis Southwestern, in the same 4 months of 1946, earned $5.51 on the wiped-out preferred stock and $4.45 on the wiped-out common stock despite a drop in gross revenues during the same period from $25,000,000—for 1945—to $14,000,000. This ability thus to meet unexpected and abnormal situations is proof of the resiliency which has been built into our railroads by their rehabilitation programs.

Now note that these showings were made under extremely difficult conditions. Not only did the Nation-wide strike situation cause drastic declines in gross earnings, but the declines came suddenly, erratically and were hard to meet. Think what these railroads can do when the present uncertainties are resolved and our national economy is functioning smoothly in the vast production program that lies ahead—when we are actually producing steel to the limit of our capacity, building millions of homes, automobiles, refrigerators, and myriads of other products to fill the enormous pent-up demands, and after that the normal demands, of the Nation. We have a prospect of a national income of 2½ to 3 times the 1930-40 average. A special committee of this House is now in the process of making an extensive study of our prospective period of industrial expansion and prosperity. Mr. Chairman, under those conditions the Nation will need these wiped-out, private-enterprise investors in our railroads—will need all their loyalty, ingenuity, acumen, energy, and resourcefulness that gave this Nation the greatest transportation system in the world.

In essence, the situation which exists with reference to these railroads may be readily illustrated by a simple example. Let us assume a man owned and operated a successful, profitable hardware store before the depression. To equip and stock his store he had borrowed funds from a bank, giving a chattel mortgage on his store fixtures to secure the loan. Then, for necessary working capital, he had borrowed some money from a friend who loaned it merely on general credit. Then came the depression and his trade was so reduced that he was unable to earn enough to pay the installments due on his loan to the bank. He was forced into bankruptcy. Let us then assume that all his store property and assets were decreed to be turned over to the bank to satisfy their secured claim. But before this decree becomes finally effective his business picks up. Indeed, his profits soar. He earns enough cash year after year to install new fixtures and equipment and otherwise completely modernize his store and pay for it all with cash out of earnings—and still accumulates a large cash surplus. His present assets are much more than sufficient to fully satisfy his bank's secured claim, leave ample to satisfy the unsecured claim of his friend, and also salvage a substantial value and the going business for himself. Would it be just or equitable to allow the bank to take all this greatly improved property, plus the cash in the till, and to completely wipe out the unsecured claim of the friend who loaned money on credit as well as the owner's interest in his again-profitable business? Obviously not. Yet this is exactly analogous to what will happen with these railroads if Congress does not promptly prevent it by passing a law such as H. R. 5924.

H. R. 5924 is designed to grant relief and to quickly halt these useless sacrifices of investments.

The simple procedure by which this bill proposes to accomplish this purpose is as follows:

When a Federal judge finds that a railroad corporation, a debtor in pending proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, has had average annual earnings during the latest period of seven preceding calendar years sufficient to pay its fixed charges during those years, he shall, upon application by any party to the proceedings, direct the return of the possession of the properties, their management and operation, to the debtor railroad, in order that it may proceed to effectuate a voluntary adjustment of its financial obligations and through such adjustment secure its dismissal from bankruptcy proceedings. To accomplish such a voluntary adjustment the bill provides a period of 18 months or such additional time as the judge may allow. It permits the debtor railroad to effect its financial readjustment under any Federal statute that makes provision for the relief of railroad corporations or under which its financial structure may be readjusted without resort to section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act.

Certain amendments, unanimously approved by the Committee on the Judiciary, will be offered in due course to further improve the effectiveness of the bill in accomplishing its main purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER].

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, during the course of the discussion on the rule we heard a lot of talk about this being a fight between Wall Street and Main Street. Well, if it is that, then I want to assure all of you that Main Street must be interested in the defeat of this hybrid legislation. I say that for this reason: The depositors in the savings banks on both sides of Main Street, the residents on both sides of Main Street, are interested in the security of their insurance policies. If this bill did what the distinguished gentleman from Illinois claims it would do, I am quite certain that every Member of this House would be for it. But, do not forget this, that when we enacted the original railroad reorganization law we did it because we realized full well that the capital structure of our railroads could not be maintained, and in the enactment of that legislation we knew that somebody's interest, in whatever piece of paper they held, was going to be affected.

I want to say very frankly to the committee that I was for the Hobbs bill. I do not think that the Reed bill is a bad bill, but bear this in mind, that neither the Reed bill nor the Hobbs bill will be the law when we are called upon for final action. We have adopted a rule that is the most unusual rule that this House has ever adopted. I say that because it makes in order the consideration of the Wheeler bill which would never have been reported out of the Committee on the Judiciary or of the committee to which it would properly have been referred.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HOBBS. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that it is proposed also by committee amendment to engraft also into the body of the Reed bill the McLaughlin or the Kefauver bill.

Mr. WALTER. May I ask the gentleman from Alabama this question? Would the gentleman have urged the Committee on the Judiciary to have reported favorably the Wheeler bill?

Mr. HOBBS. No.

Mr. WALTER. No; of course not.

What is the practical situation? We are going to enact something here today, perhaps, and that will go to the Senate under a Senate number, under the number of a bill that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS], one of the sponsors of this bill, says would never have been reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, and then a group of conferees will write a bill, a bill that is of the utmost importance, because it very vitally affects the economy of this Nation. Thousands of savings banks have invested the depositors' money in what they call gilt-edged rail securities.

Insurance companies have invested their money in this form of security. Do you not think that in all fairness whatever is done by the committee of conference ought to be submitted to the representatives of the insurance companies and to the representatives of the savings banks so that they can determine whether or not they can properly and safely continue to invest their money in this form of security?

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. Will the gentleman make some further statement that will give me some light as to just how I as a banker and the owner and purchaser of the bonds I am permitted to purchase of railroad securities, or representing an insurance company that owns the first-mortgage bonds on any railroad company, or a savings bank that owns the first-mortgage bonds, which it has bought and put into its portfolio, will be affected as to the securities held, which are senior securities, in any proposal that may come up for reorganization?

Mr. WALTER. I am glad my distinguished friend asked that question because I have the same interest for the same reasons in the securities investments of a national bank. This is the reason why banking groups and insurance groups are opposed to the bill and are worrying about the action we will take here today.

The roads that are now in receivership have had plans for their reorganization studied for periods of upward of 11 years. A great deal of time and money has been expended in the preparation and submission of those plans. If we should suddenly remove the control of the court, then, of course, the operation and management of those roads will revert to those people who were in control at the time the road went into bankruptcy, or those people who have been speculating in the last several years and who will gain control of the roads. These people feel that the inevitable result of turning the roads back to the stockholders will be another bankruptcy and another expensive reorganization, with the resultant whittling down of the securities in any plan that may be adopted, assuming, of course, that we will have on the books the same sort of railroad reorganization legislation that is on the books today.

Mr. KEEFE. I understand the gentleman complains that if the Reed bill is passed the stockholders will be given absolute control of the management of the railroads.

Mr. WALTER. Of course. Who is it that controls the roads? It is the stockholder, it is not the bondholder, after all.

Mr. KEEFE. I understand the voting stock, of course, does the operating.

Mr. WALTER. That is right.

Mr. KEEFE. I understood the gentleman from Illinois to say that, these roads being subject at the present time to the jurisdiction of the court, that period of management is limited to a period of 18 months, I believe I heard him say, and that the district court still has some supervisory power. If that is true, I should like to have the gentleman say something about it, because I do not want to be misled in the matter of voting on this bill.

Mr. GEELAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question right along the same line?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. GEELAN. Does not the plan also have to be approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission before going to the court?

Mr. WALTER. The plan is approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission, of course. The plans have all been approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Bear this in mind: Under this proposed procedure the Commission would have to take into consideration their earnings during the last 7 years, 1946, 1945, 1944, 1943, 1942, 1941 and 1940, years during which the earnings of the roads were way beyond anything anybody by the wildest stretch of the imagination could conceive for the next 7 years. Of course, they made some money, But they have not done as well as Mr. Reed would have you believe. For example, in the case of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, he talks about the $64,000,000 that they have in the till, as he puts it. But while they were accumulating this $64,000,000, they incurred an indebtedness of $1,200,000,000. So, Mr. Reed, you cannot very well argue that there would be $64,000,000 for the benefit of stockholders unless the new management should decide, if they got control, to declare a stock dividend and ignore the creditors. Conceivably, that could happen. Let me point out to you some things about this legislation that worry me. In the first place, all of us have received telegrams this morning signed by a member of a protective organization. I think they call it the National Conference of Investors. Those telegrams came from a man who in 1936 was found to have been engaged in some vicious lobbying by the Black committee. That man sent to every common stockholder a request for funds. That request contained a little pledge as follows:

> I enclose check for blank dollars as my subscription for defraying expenses connected with legislation which will protect my railroad stock in reorganization.

I do not know what these common stockholders who were solicited expect. But I think it is cruel to make people believe—the few little people who have stock, and they are not many—as I say, I think it is cruel to make them believe that at some time or other, somehow or other, the Congress is going to pump some breath into a dead horse. We must be realistic about this. We must recognize the fact that the capital structure of the railroads cannot be carried forever. Sooner or later somebody is going to have to be wiped out.

I want to say one thing more about the man who has been making these stockholders believe that at some time or other they will benefit through the enactment of this legislation. In the opinion of Judge Hinks, of Connecticut, in approving the New York, New Haven, and Hartford plan, he said concerning this group:

> The National Conference of Investors was an organization engaged in the business of forming and servicing protective committees for companies in reorganization. A reading of the record underlying the pending petition can leave little doubt that the dominant motive underlying the formation of this committee was the desire of the national conference and * * * its chairman, to obtain a gainful retainer, rather than any spontaneous desire on the part of stockholders generally to be represented by such a committee. The national conference paid a salary to * * * as its chairman, to his son-in-law as an office manager and furnished occasional secretarial work to his daughter.
> The work of the conference was confined, as he himself testified, to "all the secretarial, managerial, solicitation, and correspondence with authorizing and nonauthorizing stockholders."

That is the group who are urging the enactment of this legislation. I would like to say something further about the legislation that they are urging our favorable action on. In the Washington Post of May 8 there appeared this article:

> Railroad reorganizations have long been a happy hunting ground for financial adventurers, and for political maneuvers in Washington, but a bill now pending in Congress (the so-called Wheeler bill, S. 1253)—

That is the bill which this rule proposes to substitute for the bill that the House committee reported—> comes close to setting a high-water mark in vicious finance since the days when the Goulds and the Fisks plundered the Erie. Unless some attention is paid to it, another financial scandal will be added to the checkered history of railroad finance.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. WALTER. Under date of July 12, 1946, there appeared this editorial in the Journal of Commerce:

> Congress is being asked to bail out the stockholders who took a flier in junior securities of railroads in receivership.

Now, let us not deceive ourselves. That is exactly what the enactment of the Wheeler bill would do. There is no question about that. It seems to me—and I say this will all seriousness at my command—that before we take action on a bill as far-reaching as will be the conference report, I think we ought to have a bill introduced containing all of these provisions so that we know what we are acting on. Nothing can be gained by speedy action today. These roads are all under the jurisdiction of the courts. No money can be spent without a court order. Even the $64,000,000 that Judge Reed talks about cannot be expended without permission from the courts. So what is there to be gained? There is nothing to be saved, because in every one of these railroads the cost of administration under the receivers is less than was the cost of operation before the receivership. That is the truth. It being the truth, what can be gained by taking a chance on having the finger of suspicion pointed to Congress? I do not like these two editorials from which I just read.

Mr. THOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield.

Mr. THOM. The gentleman concedes that under the trustees these railroads made money in increasing amounts. Now the gentleman says that if they are returned to the original owners there is danger that loss would be sustained. Does the gentleman mean to imply that the owners of the railroads would be less efficient in the management of the railroads, and is it not a fact that business is on the uptrend now and the earnings that were made during the period of trusteeship would continue under private ownership?

Mr. WALTER. I will try to answer the gentleman's questions seriatim. In answer to the last question I noticed in the Wall Street Journal the other day where the Pennsylvania Railroad had paid dividends out of surplus. They did not earn their dividend the last quarter. If the Pennsylvania Railroad cannot earn its dividend, then what railroad can?

Mr. THOM. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. WALTER. No. You have asked me 95 questions and I only have a minute in which to answer them. I would like to answer the other questions which the gentleman has asked.

During the lush years, as I said during the debate on the rule, the railroads that will be affected by this legislation lost over $1,240,000,000. If the railroads lost that much money or lost any money during that period, how could they possibly make money during the period ahead of us?

Mr. THOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. THOM. In your report on the Pennsylvania Railroad you failed to take into consideration the fact that the country was plagued with strikes and that business was away down in the first 3 months of the year.

Mr. WALTER. I do not know as that materially affected the car loadings of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

There is just one thing more I want to say: The enactment of this bill will instanter turn over to Robert Young, who acquired the Van Sweringens' interest, 14,000 miles of railroad.

Let me call your attention to the part of the testimony that was adduced in the hearings on the bill in the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. WALTER. This is part of the testimony of the vice president of the Prudential Life Insurance Co., Mr. Stedman. He stated:

> Having in mind Mr. Young's well-publicized record, the bitter vindictiveness he displayed before this committee with respect to his defeat in the Pullman Co. case, and the inferential identification of himself with the former railroad magnates, whom he mentioned by name, Messrs. Hill, Harrison, Gould, Vanderbilt, Van Sweringen, et al., may it not be reasonably inferred that his aim and purpose are actually personal dominance of as many as possible of the American transportation systems? Alleghany Corp. owns a majority of the common stock of the Missouri Pacific; Missouri Pacific owns 50 percent of the common stock of the Denver & Rio Grande; 74 percent of the preferred and common stocks of Texas & Pacific; 93 percent of the common stock of New Orleans, Texas & Mexico, which in turn owns 100 percent control of International-Great Northern. If this bill passes, Mr. Young will at one stroke, without any effort on his part, extend his railroad empire to include an additional 14,000 miles of railroad. Furthermore, as introduced, this bill would leave control in Mr. Young indefinitely, pending the negotiations of a readjustment agreement with the creditors of those roads. In view of the attitude displayed by Mr. Young last Thursday before this committee, what chance would the creditors of any of those roads have in a proceeding in which all the cards were stacked in favor of Mr. Young and his Alleghany Corp.?

Mr. Chairman, I say that the only thing involved in this legislation is the control of the railroads; that is all. Do you want to leave the control where it is until the plans are worked out, plans made in accordance with provisions of the law that we enacted? Plans that have been approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission after hearings over a period of months and years? Plans that contemplate the interest of every kind of stockholder? Or do you want to wipe out at one fell swoop all of that work and turn the railroads back to the people who, in all probability, will find themselves unable to carry this terrific financial structure and we will again find the railroads in reorganization?

Mr. RABIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. Gladly.

Mr. RABIN. Once we return the railroads to the owners is there anything to prohibit those in control from declaring a dividend before the financial reorganization is effected?

Mr. WALTER. Of course not, and that is what happened with one of the railroads which was turned back. I forget the name of it, but the first thing that the directors did was to declare a dividend on the common stock, leaving the bonds in default. Now, that may happen with any one or all of these roads; I do not know; but conceivably it could happen.

Mr. RABIN. Actually, a dividend may be declared before creditors are protected.

Mr. WALTER. Of course, they may be.

Mr. GEELAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield.

Mr. GEELAN. And do the various plans of reorganization which have already been submitted to the courts, and in some instances approved if not in all instances, protect the bondholders for whom you are now speaking 100 percent, and the rights of savings banks and insurance companies which have money invested in these bonds?

Mr. WALTER. Of course not. Some of the bonds have been scaled down.

Mr. GEELAN. That is an answer to the question.

Mr. WALTER. None of the plans provide for payment in full, or at least to value of the bonds; and under some of the plans stock is issued to bondholders and creditors of every degree. They will become the owners of the railroads, not the insurance companies, as the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. Rabin, has stated. That is not the fact. The ownership will go to those people who are creditors in any sense of the word of the railroad property.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. In reference to some of those roads it is highly important that they be operated as neutral in their dealings with other roads. Will that be promoted by this bill?

Mr. WALTER. I am sure that just the opposite will happen.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. REED of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TALBOT].

Mr. TALBOT. Mr. Chairman, I wish we had more time to talk over this bill and its consequences. I do not know how any member of this committee can thoroughly understand the bill in the few minutes that we have to discuss it. I doubt if the members of the Judiciary Committee understand it wholly.

In the few moments at my disposal I want to go over the background and the reasons for these reorganizations. In the twenties and in the thirties the railroad companies of this country lost money and continued to lose money. Why? Because new competition came in. The trucks started operating for the first time and we had cross-country competition against the railroads. It is also true that the railroads in the beginning were overcapitalized. We had to cut that overcapitalized structure out. We had to cut the cancer out and that is what we have been trying to do for the last 15 years under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act.

The railroads are faced, and I say this in answer to the question raised by the gentleman from Ohio, with another kind of competition, that of the airplane, which will come on us in the years to come.

Mr. Chairman, the New Haven Railroad, with which I am particularly acquainted, in the month of May of this year had a net deficit of $1,500,000, showing that the pendulum has begun to swing the other way.

What is this bill? Frankly, it is a crap-shooter's bill. That is the only term I can apply to it. Many statements have been made here today that this is a fight between Wall Street and Main Street. I say, yes, it is a fight between Wall Street and Main Street, but be sure you know which end of the tail Wall Street holds in this matter.

I have here a list of the 50 principal stockholders of the New Haven Railroad. I mention this to you because for some years in the position I held as treasurer of the State of Connecticut I was closely associated with the workings of the New Haven Railroad, then in bankruptcy, and was an ex-officio trustee of that railroad. I know the struggle that it has been going through since 1935. It will be 11 years next month that they have been going through section 77. They are now all but out of it except for the bill before us.

Who owns the stock of the New Haven Railroad? Eighty-five percent of it is owned by the Pennsylvania Railroad and a group of Wall Street, Chicago, and Boston brokerage houses. Those are the people who own it. Of the 50 largest stockholders 47 of them are brokerage houses. There is not a brokerage house in New York of any size that is not on this list with thousands and thousands of shares of New Haven Railroad stock, bought up, mind you, at 25 and 50 cents a share.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TALBOT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. What value has the Pennsylvania placed on the 209,000 plus shares of stock it has?

Mr. TALBOT. I do not know, but I imagine it has a book value of exactly nothing. If it were not for the Hell Gate route that allows us to go from Washington through to Boston without changing in New York, we would not have that set-up. It has no book value. None of this stock has a book value. What we wanted to see was something entirely different. The New Haven Railroad has gone through all this thing for 11 years. This is not a 1940 plan as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REED] would have you believe. This plan was approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission in 1945, last year. Judge Hincks of the United States district court approved this plan in August 1945, and again in April of 1946, this year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. TALBOT. The plan has already been approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission. It has been approved by the United States district court, and the New Haven Railroad would not be affected by this bill today, except that on the day after the Reed bill was filed, the stockholders, or the stockholders' committee, took an appeal to the circuit court of appeals, and the case is now pending in that court.

I think that what the gentleman from Pennsylvania said is true, when he said that the railroads were being operated cheaper under the reorganization system, and again, in answer to the gentleman from Ohio, said that practically every official from the president down of these railroads has voluntarily allowed his salary to be cut in half, and again in half. In some cases the salaries have gone from $150,000 down to $30,000.

Mr. RAMEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TALBOT. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. RAMEY. I am not concerned with the courts here but I am concerned about what some Members of the House and some members of the Committee on the Judiciary have been troubled about. When the bill came over from the Senate known as the Wheeler bill, and after this bill was filed, they said there would be a meeting of the Committee on the Judiciary, and you could get in. When you asked about it they said it was in executive session. When you further asked about it, they said it was not held, and when you asked about the report they said there was none, but they had one 3 days before. Can the gentleman clear up the mystery of the confusion, caused, evidently, by the folks in charge of the bill? Can the gentleman help me out?

Mr. TALBOT. I could clear it up, but I do not think this is the place to do it.

Mr. RAMEY. Why should they send out a bill with mist on it?

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TALBOT. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. I am interested in having the gentleman discuss the question as to what is the present value of this worthless stock that is now held by the brokers, in the event that this bill passes. Just how by that process of legerdemain, does that stock which is considered worthless by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and which, as the gentleman says, these brokers have brought up for 25 cents a share—just how, by the passage of this bill, does that stock achieve value? That is what I would like to have the gentleman explain.

Mr. TALBOT. The stock actually achieves no value and never can and never will, but the minute this bill is passed by both Houses and signed by the President, every brokerage house in this country will have an advertisement in the newspapers telling you of the enhancement or the possible or probable enhancement of this stock, and they will then unload on the American public millions and millions of shares of stock that they bought in at practically no value at all. They will unload at a price of $10 a share, $20 a share, $30 a share, or even some people believe $100 a share.

Mr. KEEFE. Of course, that is rather an unusual prophecy in view of the controls that are exercised today. I understand that these stocks have been taken off their listings on the boards; that they are no longer listed. Does the gentleman mean to tell me that in this enlightened age these brokers can go out willy-nilly and peddle worthless stock to the people of this country without being subjected to the controls of SEC or somebody else? I am seeking information on this subject.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TALBOT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that a Philadelphia newspaper is conducting a very strong drive now to educate the people in my State against buying of the kind of stock that the gentleman is talking about.

Mr. KEEFE. I still do not have an answer to my question as to how you would get value out of money that is not worth anything.

Mr. TALBOT. I might answer the gentleman this way, that I might say to my friends from the South that they might just as well put an amendment on this bill making Confederate money worth the value printed on its face. They have more right to do that, I say to them, because they certainly had 100 percent of its value taken away by some of us northerners up here. I think it would be more equitable to pay the outstanding currency of the Confederacy than to put life into this stock that is absolutely dead.

Mr. REED of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, this bill is an involved bill. It first came before us as H. R. 5924, which is known as the Reed bill, and that bill was composed of 4 pages. That is the bill that went before the Committee on Rules, and it was upon that abbreviated bill, which I now hold in my hand, that the rule was granted. But the bill which is before the Committee this afternoon is a bill which consists of 32 pages. It contains the Reed bill, it contains the so-called Hobbs bill, and it contains portions at least of the so-called Kefauver or McLaughlin bill. And what have you?

I do not happen to be a member of the Subcommittee on Bankruptcy but I happen to be a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, and I know I was never satisfied about what this bill which is now before the Committee would do or what the repercussions would be if it were enacted into law.

Mr. RAMEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. RAMEY. I wonder if the gentleman can make clear to some of us why we could not find out about it from the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary and could not get reports and hearings, in line with what I asked the gentleman from Connecticut. Will the gentleman clear up why that confusion started the thing off?

Mr. SPRINGER. I can clarify it in part. I know the Subcommittee on Bankruptcy held hearings, at least on the original Reed bill to which I have referred. Those hearings are entitled "Railroad Reorganization." They were rather extensive and rather voluminous. It was several days before I could get a copy of those hearings. I finally secured such copy late last week on the same day that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] was able to secure a copy of the hearings, although he and I are both members of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. REED of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. REED of Illinois. Did the gentleman from Indiana ask for any hearings from the committee prior to that time?

Mr. SPRINGER. I had not personally asked, but I had received information that members of the Committee on the Judiciary had asked for them and had been refused copies of the hearings.

Mr. REED of Illinois. Did the gentleman know the hearings were at each Member's desk when we voted on the various committee amendments?

Mr. SPRINGER. I had no hearings at my desk. The only copy I have had access to and the only copy I have studied is the one that I received late last week.

This bill, at least the portion of the bill which is now before the Committee, which is the so-called Reed bill, contains on the first page the provision that if the properties of any railroad corporation shall have produced annual earnings during the period of the seven preceding calendar years sufficient to pay its fixed charges, then it has the right to come within the provisions of this bill.

This bill, as I understand, will apply insofar as its provisions are concerned to either seven or eight railroads. Four of those railroads are now and have been for many years in the process of reorganization under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act. Reference was made to the New Haven Railroad. That road has been under reorganization for approximately 11 years. They have spent tremendous sums of money. They have gone through all the processes of reorganization. Finally, as provided by law, they filed a petition with the Federal court in which it was first necessary that they obtain the consent of the majority—60 percent to be exact—for the petition to be filed and for this proceeding of reorganization to go forward. Sixty percent of the stockholders and the creditors joined in that petition. The petition was filed and they started the program of reorganization.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. REED of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. SPRINGER. They started through the process of reorganization. The court submitted it to the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Interstate Commerce Commission approved it and submitted a plan for such reorganization. It came back to the court and the court made the necessary orders. Then, a stockholders' committee, as has been explained, took an appeal, and that appeal is now pending in the circuit court of appeals. I understand indirectly that the circuit court of appeals has not confirmed the reorganization plan, awaiting to see what Congress will do in these very bills now pending in the House. Then, if this measure is enacted into law, these roads which have gone through the process of reorganization will be brought back under the provisions of this bill and will have to start all over again, because this measure provides that if within 18 months, or such extended period as the judge may grant, they work out a plan of reorganization, then they have a right to go ahead and perfect it. If they do not, then they still are in the throes of bankruptcy. These roads want to get out and they want to have an opportunity to go forward and make some progress. They desire to operate their roads without any court supervision, and they desire to make progress in the future.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has again expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GORSKI].

Mr. GORSKI. Mr. Chairman, in supporting H. R. 5924 and endorsing the able presentation of this bill by my colleagues, I want to bring out to the House some excerpts of the decision of the courts which have a bearing on this legislation.

In the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the Denver & Rio Grande Western case. This is a case appealed by the general mortgage bondholders—a creditor class. They were practically wiped out by the Interstate Commerce Commission plan. They voted against the plan. The district court under the provisions of section 77 confirmed the plan over their protest. The circuit court of appeals upheld their appeal, but the Supreme Court denied it.

In this opinion, denying their appeal, the Supreme Court actually noted that they might have some justice on their side, but the law was against them. The Court quoted extensively from report No. 1838, which reports this very bill to this House, setting forth a great many of the complaints of small investors about the results of section 77 reorganization. Then the Supreme Court said, and I quote:

> Although the results of reorganization under this section, as thus construed, have been criticized as unfortunate and changes have been suggested, no different legislation has been enacted. Indeed, a different method for reorganization, enacted in 1939 and designed to meet the requirements of railroads not in need of financial reorganization of the character provided by section 77 but only of an opportunity for voluntary adjustments with their creditors, terminated on July 31, 1940. This was the Chandler Act, and a comparable provision made in 1942 was allowed to lapse on November 1, 1945. This was the McLaughlin Act. This situation leaves clear the duty of the agencies of the Government entrusted with the handling of reorganizations under section 77, including this Court, to administer its provisions according to their best understanding of the purposes of Congress as expressed in the words of section 77 read in the light of the contemporaneous discussion in Congress. Changes in economic conditions cannot affect the powers of the reorganization agencies even though such changes may require a reexamination into the present fairness of the former exercise of these powers.

Mr. Chairman, there is hardly any more comment necessary. The Supreme Court has said it. They say, "We must construe the law in accordance with the ideas prevailing in 1935, unless and until Congress changes the law." The Court even admits that this may be unfair but that nothing can be done about it until Congress acts. We must, therefore realize that the decrees of the Interstate Commerce Commission have a deadly finality. Under existing law as construed by the Supreme Court there is no appeal from those decrees except to the Congress itself. And it has taken 3 years to get this appeal where it is today.

Now let us look at one or two other decisions. Justice Phillips of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit, in the same case of the Denver & Rio Grande Western, remarked:

> It is my conclusion that only through corrective legislation or a more liberal attitude of the Commission can junior security holders obtain relief.

But what does the Commission think? In the North Western case, the Commission said:

> We are deeply sympathetic with the attempt to find some method by which the present stockholders might be lawfully afforded a continuing interest in this property • • • (but) we reluctantly express the view that this is impossible, for the law as it stands is inexorably against such a course.

Judge Evans, of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, in the Rock Island case, said:

> I had quite a little part in the St. Paul Railroad, and it was always shocking to think that there should be such an absolute denial of any right for any stockholder, notwithstanding that money was just rolling into the St. Paul and the North Western Railroad, but notwithstanding that, it was decided, "You are out." That don't set very well on your conscience. If you did wrong, it is about time you correct it.

Now all these judges and Commissioners knew something was wrong. Maybe their legal feelings were not jarred but their consciences were. And when the administrators of the law are compelled, by what they believe the law to be, to act against their consciences, it is time to change the law.

The Reed bill is intended to give relief to stockholders and junior bondholders, who would otherwise be wiped out and lose their investments. The bill provides that railroads who are in trusteeship under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, whose average earnings for a period of 7 years have been sufficient to pay their fixed charges shall have 18 months to complete a plan to adjust their financial structure without further proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act.

The passage of this bill would enable the management of the railroads which can qualify, to adjust and settle between the debtors of the railroad, whatever outstanding obligations there may be. The passage of this bill would not take away any right of the senior bondholders, but because of improved economic conditions would create a better market for railroad securities, would enable the railroads to reduce their fixed charges, by borrowing at lower rates of interest and would in many other ways bring about savings for the railroad, where the entire management is in the hands of experienced officials who have conducted its affairs for many years and who are best qualified to operate it.

Because of improved economic conditions and a large backlog of purchasing power, we can look forward to several years of prosperity. The railroads will do a large part of this business and will share in the prosperity. Their earnings should be maintained in the next 5 or 6 years at about the same level as the past few years. They should be able to operate more efficiently because of experienced help which they could not obtain during the war. The reduction in the cost of operation will result in savings which will inure to the benefit of the stockholders.

The need for relief here is thus clearly shown. But I want to emphasize the fact that unless this remedial legislation is finally passed at this session, it will be too late to save these investments.

To make sure of enactment at this session, we must pass this bill now.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how the time stands?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has 22 minutes remaining, the gentleman from Illinois, 21.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. GEELAN].

Mr. GEELAN. Mr. Chairman, I am vitally interested in this bill. I have been trying for some time to resolve my thinking so that I would know just exactly whether if I voted in favor of the bill I might be doing an injury to the railroads or if I voted against it might be doing an injury to the stockholders. I have heard many statements made on this floor which I have difficulty in understanding. Inasmuch as I happen to represent that particular district in Connecticut which is the home city of the New Haven Railroad and contains its general offices, and inasmuch as that road has been referred to here a number of times, the last by my colleague from another district in Connecticut, I, too, shall refer to this same road. I understood him to state that 85 percent of the stock of the road was in the control of Wall Street. In answer to that statement and using the same set of figures which he used in making the statement, I assume, the total outstanding preferred stock in round numbers amounts to 490,000 shares. Of that amount of outstanding preferred stock 160,000 shares are owned by these 50 Wall Street corporations referred to, leaving a balance of 329,000 shares of preferred stock not owned by Wall Street.

In the common stock the picture is that there are 586,000 shares owned by these 50 corporations or Wall Street brokers out of a total issuance of 1,571,000 shares, leaving 984,000 shares obviously in the hands of small investors.

It has also been stated on this floor that the promotion activities on the part of certain investment companies behind this bill was the main pressure for the passage of this bill. That I can state from my mail is not the case. Thousands of small investors, people of small income who have been dependent for years past upon the return from the proceeds of the stock in the New Haven and other roads live in my district and they are not necessarily represented. They do not write me that they are represented by any protective company.

I think that the bill is fair and I cannot for the life of me see the argument against its adoption. When a company or a railroad has been in receivership for 10 or 11 years I cannot see how an additional delay of 18 months would harm them. It seems that whatever plan is perfected has to be submitted ultimately to a judge and to the Interstate Commerce Commission for approval. What harm can result if there is a delay? The stock value is based upon the formula set up in this bill, and in the case of those roads which have earned their fixed charges during the past 7 years, why should not the stockholders in those companies have it even though at the same time it should happen that some brokerage houses in Wall Street owned some of this stock might be potential gainers in any plan of reorganization which may be submitted now? What harm is there to that? How can you prevent it? The fact is that more than two-thirds of the stock of this particular road is still owned and controlled not by Wall Street but by small individual stockholders. I submit that the Reed bill is fair. I do not like the parliamentary situation that we find ourselves in. I would like to have the full bill before us as a result of complete hearings on the part of the committee, together with a report so that we could review it. However, I am in favor of the Reed bill. You cannot have the Reed bill by voting down the motion to make the Wheeler bill in order. I think we should give that consideration in view of the past earnings during the last several years of these roads when most reorganization plans have been approved on the basis of adverse operating experience in the depression period. I think this is a fair and equitable bill, and I shall support it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. REED of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JENNINGS].

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, fundamentally I am opposed to the Government being in business and I am also opposed to the idea that the purpose and function of courts is to take charge of any business and run it. It is about the most expensive method of operating a business that I know of.

I presided over a court of equity, the chancery court, in Tennessee, with jurisdiction over 11 counties for 5 years. That court in Tennessee is the court that appoints receivers. In all my practice of the law and in all my experience as a court I have never seen but two profitable receivership operations. It is the most costly operation of a property in the world.

As proof of the pudding I have here a list of 13 railroads that have been in the hands of trustees under the Bankruptcy Act as it now is and during the period of their operation by these trustees in their present status they have taken in about $21,000,000. Here is what has become of that money, according to the records furnished by the Interstate Commerce Commission:

To creditors and representatives, 40 percent of the $21,000,000.

To bankruptcy trustees and their counsel, 35 percent.

To reorganization managers, 18 percent.

To debtor corporation for their expenses, 5 percent.

To stockholders and their representatives, 2 percent.

The small sum the stockholders got reminds me of the story of the damage-suit lawyer. He would take personal injury cases, generally on the basis of the Dutchman's 10 percent, which was half. On one occasion he represented a fellow who had lost his leg on a railroad. The lawyer finally wrangled $500 out of the railroad company. He gave his client only $5. The fellow took the money and went home to his wife. In a few days he and his wife came back to the lawyer and he said, "Jim, my wife and I do not think we got enough out of this case. We only got $5. My leg is gone. Can you not do a little better by me?" Jim said, "Well, now, how would $2.50 more strike you?" The fellow says, "That is all right." Then his wife spoke up and said, "Bill, I told you Jim would treat you right."

The truth about the matter is there is just one way to handle this thing and that is to end this operation of railroads through the courts. Take these railroads that have earned enough money each year for the past 7 years to meet all of their current obligations as they mature and give those who are interested in them a chance to work out a reorganization plan. When a corporation meets its obligations in the due course of business, as they mature, it is considered to be a solvent, going concern.

Pray, when will we stop this trusteeship business? Just listen to this. I can understand why there are people who do not want this operation by these trustees to end.

Just listen to this. I am reading from a statement furnished by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Chicago & North Western Railway bankruptcy, trustees' compensation, $262,125.

Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, $306,300 compensation to the trustees.

C. M. & S. St. M. Railway Co., $666,000 to the trustees and $180,000 to their counsel, and then when we get to the indenture trustees they get $192,050; other expenses, $113,517. Counsel fees for the debtor corporation $80,000. Other expenses $14,025. Counsel fees, creditor groups, $337,550. Other expenses $103,-145. Counsel fees, $10,000. Other expenses $860,656.

Now, that is a bonanza for the counsel and the trustees.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. What about the OPA?

Mr. JENNINGS. Well, the OPA might come in yet under that picture, I think. But really, I think these trustees and attorneys have a monopoly on it.

Let us pass this bill and turn these properties over to their owners and stop these excessive fees.

Mr. REED of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE].

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, it has been said that this is a bill that vitally affects all the banks and savings banks and trust companies and insurance companies of America. If that is true I should think that it would excite a little interest on the part of Members of Congress so that we would have a little more than a mere corporal's guard out here to hear the debates on this bill that is described as being of such vital importance.

I have had the privilege of sitting here during the period of the debate on this bill and I am going to vote for it because I think the arguments that have been adduced in its favor have not been answered by any of those who oppose it. It seems to me that the situation is very simple.

In the reorganization plans under which these railroads are in bankruptcy under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, the Interstate Commerce Commission submits a plan to the district courts for reorganization and scaling of indebtedness. The statement has been made, and I think it has escaped the attention of a great many Members of Congress, that under the law as it now exists a finding of valuation made by the Interstate Commerce Commission—back in 1939 and 1940—if there is any evidence at all to support it, becomes final and is binding on the court. None of the creditors or stockholders of any kind or character in the reorganization proceedings in the district court can successfully challenge the findings of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the matter of values.

As a result we have this situation, as I understand it. A railroad is embarrassed. It is compelled to seek relief under the provisions of section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act. It comes before the district court and asks for relief. What happens? The district court appoints trustees and refers the matter to the Interstate Commerce Commission for a plan of reorganization. The Interstate Commerce Commission decides that the assets of that railroad company—and I am thinking of one—are worth $450,-000,000. They send that back to the court and the court in effect is told, "Now, you scale down the indebtedness and capital structure of this company so as to bring it down to $450,000,000. The new securities to be issued shall not exceed $450,000,000."

Mr. THOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. THOM. Does not the gentleman mean to say the capital is scaled down, instead of the indebtedness?

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman is essentially correct. Usually the capital structure consists of first mortgage bonds, junior mortgage bonds, debentures of various classes, preferred stock and common stock; all told this represents the capital structure. In addition there is the unsecured indebtedness of the company. In bankruptcy the latter may be classified as to priority.

So what happens is this: Here is this company with so many outstanding first mortgage bonds, so many second mortgage bonds, so many debenture bonds, so much preferred stock, and so much common stock, and so much of unsecured creditors, as against a valuation of $450,000,000 set by the Interstate Commerce Commission. This value is binding and conclusive upon the court.

What happens? The court adopts or at least suggests a plan—perhaps all of the capital structure and unsecured debts total $650,000,000. Clearly then, if new securities are to be issued under the plan the total cannot exceed the $450,-000,000 value set by the Commission. This means scaling the capital structure and perhaps the unsecured debt. The secured bondholders come first and then the unsecured creditors in order of priority. Thus the common stockholders and in many cases the junior bondholders and unsecured creditors are wiped out. The plans usually take care of the voting arrangements by issuing no-par common stock. Thus the bondholders come into possession of the property and its operation. This legislation simply proposes that in those cases where the company has met its fixed charges for 7 years, the court shall turn the company back to its stockholders and give them 18 months in which to work out a plan with the creditors and bondholders. If this is done and operating income permits perhaps something can be saved for the stockholders. If such a plan is worked out it must be approved by the court and the Commission. If no plan can be worked out it must go back under section 77 for further proceedings. It is at this point that the Hobbs amendment comes into play and gives a little further opportunity for the little fellow to save something.

As the situation stands now, the stockholders are out. They were kicked out in the Milwaukee Road case, they were kicked out in the Chicago & North Western case, they will be kicked out in all these cases. The ones that are going to get the ax in every one of these proceedings are the little stockholders, the men and women out in my country that for 60 years invested their money in these railroad stocks that were considered to be gilt-edge securities.

As far as I am concerned, I have no fears whatsoever that the bonds that the banks have in their portfolios will be adversely affected in any way, shape, or manner by the Reed bill. Such bonds might possibly be worth more money than they are today after the reorganization is complete, but any accretion that will come to those bonds will come as a result of cutting off any interest that these stockholders may have in their own property.

I think this bill is an equitable bill.

Mr. REED of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of the time to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, this bill primarily affects seven important railroads. None of them penetrate my district. Our railroads have always been honestly and efficiently managed and prosperous. None of them have gone into bankruptcy. Therefore, I think I can look at this matter in a very fair and impersonal way. There is no provision in this bill that will hurt the bondholders in any way. It matters not what may happen under this bill—it cannot hurt the bondholders. I am trying to find some relief for those who put up the money and created the property and made it possible for these men who had money to invest their money in the securities of these railroads.

Seven railroads are very similarly situated as the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, and since the New York, New Haven & Hartford has been discussed most I shall discuss that railroad. Incidentally, it grieves me very much to oppose the amendment that will be offered by our good friend, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TALBOT]. The New York, New Haven & Hartford for 7 years has been paying every dime of operating costs and charges, taxes and interest to the bondholders. It has met and paid each and every bond that matured for the last 7 years. To whom does that property belong? To the men and women, yes; railroad workers, who bought the stock at par. The Interstate Commerce Commission declared at that time that the loan of that money to the railroad company was necessary and that the investment was a valid investment and the stock worth par. After they invested their money and created a property, now come the money lenders and take a first mortgage on all of that property.

The Interstate Commerce Commission and some other folks propose to fix the value of the property as of 1939 and 1940, when the Commission fixed its value, and they say that there is nothing left now for the junior stockholders, the preferred stockholders, the common stockholders, and the common creditors. The value was fixed as of 1939 and 1940—at $75,000,000, when it turns out it was of much greater value. The first-mortgage bonds amount to approximately $62,000,000. For the last 7 years this railroad has paid all fixed charges, operating expenses, excess-profits taxes, retired bonds as they matured, paid interest charges, and now has a surplus of $64,000,000—more than enough to pay off in full all of these first-mortgage bonds. Yet these bondholders insist that the junior securities, preferred stockholders, common stockholders have no interest in their railroad—and they must be cleaned out without a dollar on a valuation made by the Commission in 1939 and 1940, which valuation cannot be reviewed by the courts in the present law. Unless this is passed, the first-mortgage bondholders will be able to gobble up this railroad for less than the surplus now in the railroad company's treasury.

When they do take over, what do they get according to this record?—$64,000,000 of surplus in the treasury and all the physical property of this great railroad. What for, if this bill does not pass? To help these professed creditors, who put nothing in. They have been putting nothing in, but they have been taking out all these years, standing back and clipping coupons with absolute safety, while these other folks have been receiving nothing, and they will be destroyed if this bill is not passed.

I would not want to take away any right of a preferred bondholder. That is a contract. I believe in carrying out contracts, but I am opposed to cutting down with one fell swoop the people who furnished the money that helped to make possible the construction and operation of that great property, the New Haven Railroad.

What does this bill do? And it does that and no more. You cannot touch any reorganization program unless for seven consecutive years the road has earned on an average sufficient money to cover all of the charges against the railroad, discharge the bonds when matured, paid the interest, taxes, and costs as the New Haven and the other seven railroads have been doing for seven long years. Yet, the New Haven has $64,000,000 in the till. They have been paying dividends and excess-profit taxes. Now, you tell me that the junior bondholders and the preferred stockholders and the common stockholders and the common creditors have no equity in the property that they have created and helped to maintain. It is not right. Therefore this bill is before us to correct that injustice to junior bondholders, preferred and common stockholders of these railroads. If you do not pass this bill this property will be taken over by the preferred bondholders who have enjoyed the profits and benefits for the last 7 years—the people who live on Wall Street.

I agree with the statements of my friend from Connecticut, who lives in the city of the headquarters of this great railroad system. He knows something about it. He knows that engineers, conductors, firemen, and, if you please, section men, bought stock. They will be wiped out, as well as hundreds of thousands of other stockholders in this and the seven other railroads all over the country in receiverships.

What harm can come to the preferred bondholder? I am anxious that the equities of those who toil, those who put their savings into the junior securities, preferred stock and common stock, shall be protected. There are many thousands of these. I am interested in them. This law will give them at least a rain check. And it does something else—the courts will have something to say about whether the Interstate Commerce Commission back in 1939 and 1940 made a finding that must control in 1946, when we know that values have gone up. We want to give the folks who put up the money a chance. Let us get the railroads out of the hands of the preferred bondholders and restore these railroads to the owners and give them a chance to get a piece of the pie. They had nothing for 11 or 12 years. Of course these first-mortgage bondholders will get theirs. Get these railroads out of the hands of expensive receiverships.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION] has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of the time on this side to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

Mr. HOBBS. I would appreciate very deeply, Mr. Chairman, the attention of the Members present to some documentary proof in answer to some of the charges that have been made. I think my dear friend, one of the most valuable members of our committee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER] is slightly mistaken between the copy of the hearing and the copy of the committee print. I believe he meant to say he was unable to get until recently a copy of the committee print, which sets out the nine amendments to the Reed bill approved by the full Judiciary Committee; and it is true that that was available only from the day the committee approved those nine amendments or 2 or 3 days later, when the prints came out.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I shall be delighted to yield.

Mr. SPRINGER. When I made my request I asked for a copy of the bill and also the hearings, and finally obtained them, but I understood they had not been available before that time.

Mr. HOBBS. They were available since December 1945, and they were mailed to every member of the committee. Whether or not they were delivered to the member or were held in his office by some of his secretaries we do not know, but the hearings were concluded in December 1945, and the hearings were printed and distributed at least quite widely at that time.

Let me now give you a little information as to the history of this reorganization. It was a sincere attempt on the part of the Subcommittee on Bankruptcy and Reorganization in the rewrite to complete revision of the Bankruptcy Act, the only one ever attempted in the history of that act, under the leadership of that distinguished gentleman and scholar, Walter Chandler, who became chairman of that subcommittee some 12 years ago. We rewrote the whole Bankruptcy Act with the aid of 12 of the best brains in bankruptcy who sat here at their own expense and worked with us and for us for 2½ years. One of the chapters in that bill was the railroad-reorganization chapter; another was corporate reorganization; another was what was called a poor man's bankruptcy composition; and so on. It was found in 1935 that we were on the toboggan and that the depression was not over as we had hoped it would be.

The Interstate Commerce Commission came before us and asked us to amend the chapter on railroad reorganization. We did so and we worked for nearly a year over it with the experts who volunteered again; and the Interstate Commerce Commission by its counsel who was the Honorable Leslie Cravens, at that time one of the outstanding lawyers in this field, told us that what we feared might be the result of the amendments they proposed could not possibly happen, that no court would hold that that abolished judicial review; and yet in the cross-examination of the witnesses from the Interstate Commerce Commission when we found out after the two decisions in the Western Pacific and the Milwaukee cases, that that which they had assured us could not happen had happened and that they had held in those two suits that the creature, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the creature of Congress, was superior to its creator and superior to the courts, even to the Supreme Court of the United States.

So we had to do something about that situation. We reported unanimously the so-called Hobbs bill which passed the House with only one dissenting vote. It has been in the Senate ever since and nothing has happened, as is true of several other bills. But that was unanimously reported and we came then to the question of the treatment of those railroads that were not insolvent and under an amendment which was sponsored by the then chairman of bankruptcy subcommittee, the Honorable Charles McLaughlin, another great man, a great expert in this field as was his predecessor, the Honorable Walter Chandler, who had gone back to his knitting in Tennessee to become mayor of Memphis, which he still is and has only recently given notice of his retirement, we amended it so as to give those roads that were not insolvent a chance to escape the prodigious cost of bankruptcy and reorganization in that line.

We gave them the voluntary composition of their debts, under which maturities were postponed and interest rates reduced, but without missing a single run of either freight or passenger train. The B. & O. reorganized under that bill and it was the law for several years until the Kefauver bill which this House passed to extend and make permanent the McLaughlin Act failed to pass the Senate after it had been passed here, until under its terms the McLaughlin Act ceased to be. Then we came to the proposition of what we should do. The Hobbs bill was stymied, the McLaughlin bill was dead, and the Kefauver bill was stymied. So the Reed bill was drawn up by another distinguished member of our committee who has been with us all the time, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REED], who proposed this bill which was also unanimously approved after full hearings by the Judiciary Committee. That was to take the best of the roads that were in reorganization, that had made all of their fixed charges for 7 years, and give them a chance in a situation similar to that created by the McLaughlin Act. That is all it does, sit around the table with your creditors and make up a new plan of reorganization that will not wipe out $2,000,000,000 of invested capital by the little people of this country if the financial conditions changed for the better and warranted such treatment. That is all it does.

In the meantime there was conducted a thorough investigation of this business of railroad reorganization over in the Senate, and eventually the Wheeler bill, S. 1253, I believe it is, came forward. It was not reported until April. It was not acted on until June. So we did not even know what the bill would provide, nor what amendments would be necessary to the House bill then pending. Then, and then only, did we begin to study it, because we had not seen it before, and we found that it was in our judgment necessary to amend the Reed bill by nine amendments. We proposed it to the committee. We had a committee print made which, of course, was confidential until the committee adopted those amendments and authorized us to print them, and since that good day they have been available to everybody, and we are proud of them, and they, in substance, amend the Reed bill by adding the Hobbs bill and the Kefauver bill, which was the extension of the McLaughlin bill. So they, with the Reed bill, according to the rule adopted and given us by the Committee on Rules, will enable us to substitute these bills for the Wheeler bill and work out of the four the best bill possible.

I want to say just a word or two about the New Haven. I hold in my hand copies, year by year, certified by the Interstate Commerce Commission, of the reports as to the New Haven stockholders, and they show year by year how they run.

There has never been a stockholding in the New Haven averaging more than $97 per stockholder, speaking of the common stock, and $61.32 average for the preferred stock. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. GEELAN] has very kindly given us a synopsis of the situation with regard to the New Haven. When in 1940 the plan for the reorganization of the New Haven was approved as I told the committee this morning, they found that the common stock, which was held by more than 21,000 stockholders, above the 50 that Mr. WALTER read a few from, was completely wiped out, and so were all of the preferred stockholders. At that time there was only $4,000,000 to the credit of those 21,000 stockholders in the financial structure of that road. They said it was worthless; that it could not possibly come back, and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TALBOT] told us it has had no chance to produce anything in the way of a profit since, nor will it in the future, he said this afternoon, and yet since they said it was worthless and did not have a chance to earn anything more than the fixed charges, it has made a net over-all profit of $60,000,000. So instead of having $4,000,000 they have got now $64,000,000 in the till. What would become of it if you kill our efforts to give a chance to those whose stock interests earned that money which is in the till now? Of course, it would go to the only ones left, which are the bondholders, 47 of them, I believe.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I gladly yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. KEAN. If there is so much equity in the stock that has been mentioned by the gentleman and others, why is it that the New Haven bonds are selling on the Stock Exchange so far below par? I see here that the New Haven first mortgage 3½'s are selling at $54, first mortgage 6's selling at $63, and New Haven 4's $57, selling at $39?

Mr. HOBBS. I do not know, sir. I am just a country boy from Alabama.

Mr. KEEFE. The reason is that there is no equity in the common stock.

Mr. HOBBS. I know very little about stock equities. All I know is that whether there is any advantage to be gained by the bondholders, that millions of "when issued" stock is being bought by those same bondholders every day! I know that millions of "when issued" stocks are being bought by those same bondholders today, and I know they are paying nothing for it.

Mr. KEAN. Of course the people who are trading in this "when issued" stock are the chief opponents of this bill.

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, sir. You are exactly right in that statement.

Mr. KEAN. They have a gamble in this thing, and if the bill is passed all their profits are wiped out.

Mr. HOBBS. I appreciate the gentleman's contribution, and I challenge him to show me a single proponent of this bill or a single person that favors this bill who has been allowed to buy a single share of "when issued" stock.

Mr. KEAN. I do not mean people here, of course.

Mr. HOBBS. I am talking about people anywhere.

Mr. KEAN. Yes.

Mr. HOBBS. You could not get into that circle with a crowbar or a jimmy. That is a real closed shop. It is only the favored few, who can get on this "gravy train" and buy this "when issued" stock. They do not want their ride interrupted and so are fighting this bill.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am delighted to yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. JENNINGS. Is it not an indisputable fact that the bondholders whose bonds are secured by first mortgages on these properties cannot be hurt by this bill, but that on the other hand this is the only method suggested by which the common stockholders and the junior creditors can get anything?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, sir. If they get anything the preferred stockholders and the bondholders will, too. We want to protect railroad credit from top to bottom, from the first mortgage bondholder on down. We are fighting for fairness to all. None can be safe, nor sure, unless all are treated fairly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired. All time has expired.

The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That if the properties of any railroad corporation, debtor in a proceeding pending under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended, shall have produced average annual earnings during the period of the preceding seven calendar years sufficient to pay the fixed charges of the said debtor in the said years, and the judge shall so find, the judge upon application therefor by the debtor or by any other party in the proceedings shall enter an order directing the return of the possession of the said properties and the management and operation thereof to the debtor upon the following condition:

1. That the debtor shall proceed immediately to effect such readjustment of its financial structure as in the light of the present prospective earnings and of other relative facts and circumstances may be consistent with sound financial practice;

2. That if within a period of 18 months, or such extended periods as the judge upon application therefor may approve, following the entry of such order, (a) the several classes of security holders shall provide a plan for readjustment of such financial structure, and (b) such readjustment provides for such reduction in fixed charges as may be consistent with sound financial practice, and (c) the Interstate Commerce Commission shall authorize the issuance of such new securities as may be required by such readjustment, and (d) the judge shall so find, the judge upon application therefor by the debtor or by any other party in the proceedings, shall enter an order dismissing the proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended, and providing for or requiring, the transfer by the trustees or any other party or parties in possession of the properties of the debtor pursuant to order of the court of all their right, title, and interest in and to the properties to the debtor, and the Interstate Commerce Commission, shall dismiss the proceedings before that Commission for the reorganization of the debtor under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended.

3. That if upon termination of the said period of 18 months or such extended period as the judge may approve, an order shall not have been entered by the judge as provided in the foregoing subdivision 2, the judge shall enter an order providing for the return of possession of the properties to the trustees or to such successor trustees as may be appointed pursuant to the provisions of section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended, or to any other party or parties previously in possession of the properties of the debtor pursuant to order of the court, and directing that the proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended, shall be resumed and brought to a conclusion, subject to the provisions and requirements of said section.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FORAND, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5924) to enable debtor railroad corporations, whose properties during a period of 7 years have provided sufficient earnings to pay fixed charges, to effect a readjustment of their financial structure without further proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended, had come to no resolution thereon.

TITLE TO LANDS BENEATH TIDAL AND NAVIGABLE WATERS

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 225) to quiet the titles of the respective States, and others, to lands beneath tidewaters and lands beneath navigable waters within the boundaries of such States and to prevent further clouding of such titles, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 3, after line 21, insert:

"The United States excepts from this disclaimer and retains all right, title, and interest claimed and asserted by Presidential Proclamation No. 2667 of September 28, 1945, or otherwise to the subsoil and sea bed of or the resources in the Continental Shelf lying oceanward from the area described in the first clause (1) of the preceding paragraph."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment which I intend to offer to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS]?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understood from the chairman that the Committee on the Judiciary was unanimously in favor of the Senate amendment. If we are going to take up other amendments, then I believe it had better be done in the regular way. If other amendments are going to be offered to the Senate amendment, I do not think it ought to be brought up at this time.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama intend to insist on offering an amendment to the Senate amendment if unanimous consent is granted for the consideration of the Senate amendment?

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of inconveniencing the House or anything of that kind, but I feel very deeply that this amendment to the Senate amendment should be offered in order to protect the interests of our Government.

The SPEAKER. If amendments other than the Senate amendment are to be considered, the Chair would prefer that the gentleman withdraw his request at this time.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request.

CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT ACT

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 4718) to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, and ask unanimous consent that the reading of the report be dispensed with.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4718) to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, to provide annuities for certain officers and employees who have rendered at least twenty-five years of service, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That section 1 of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"'(e) Any officer or employee to whom this Act applies who, after having attained the age of fifty-five and after having rendered at least twenty-five years of service computed as prescribed in section 5 of this Act,

"'(1) shall have been involuntarily separated from the service not by removal for cause on charges of misconduct or delinquency between July 1, 1945, and June 30, 1947, both dates inclusive; or

"'(2) shall have been voluntarily separated from the service between such dates if such officer or employee had accepted a position with a lower rate of basic salary, pay, or compensation after having been involuntarily separated (not by removal for cause on charges of misconduct or delinquency) between such dates from a position with a higher rate of basic salary, pay, or compensation, and was receiving less than such higher rate at the time of his voluntary separation, shall be paid an immediate life annuity beginning on the first day of the month following the date of final separation from the service. Such annuity shall have a value equal to an annuity computed as provided in section 4 of this Act reduced by one-sixth of 1 per centum for each full month any such officer or employee is (A) under the age of sixty years if he has rendered at least thirty years of service computed as prescribed in section 5 of this Act, or (B) under the age of sixty-two years if he has rendered less than thirty years of service computed as prescribed in section 5 of this Act.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4718) to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, to provide annuities for certain officers and employees who have rendered at least 25 years of service, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment strikes out all of the House bill after the enacting clause. The committee of conference recommends that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, with an amendment which is a substitute for both the House bill and the Senate amendment, and that the Senate agree to the same.

The House bill added a new subsection to section 1 of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930. The Senate amendment adds a new proviso to section 7 (a) of such act. An employee retiring under section 1 of such act may elect to receive, in lieu of the full annuity to which he is entitled, a reduced annuity and an annuity after his death payable to his beneficiary. Employees retiring under section 7 (a) of such act have no such right of election. The conference substitute is the same as the House bill.

The Senate amendment provides that an officer or employee must have attained the age of 55 and have completed at least 25 years of service prior to involuntary separation from the service in order to be eligible for the retirement benefits of the proposed legislation. The House bill had no such age requirement; but extended the benefits of the bill to officers and employees who are voluntarily separated from the service if they have accepted positions with lower rates of basic compensation after having been involuntarily separated from positions with higher rates of basic compensation and were receiving less than such higher rates at the time of their voluntary separation. The conference substitute adopts the provisions of the Senate amendment with respect to the age requirement, but retains the language of the House bill with respect to voluntary separations.

The benefits of the House bill were limited to officers and employees separated from the service between August 14, 1945, and August 14, 1947, while the Senate amendment included officers and employees separated from the service between July 1, 1945, and June 30, 1947, both dates inclusive. The conference substitute adopts the Senate provision.

The House bill provided that annuity shall be paid beginning on the 1st day of the month following the date of separation from the service or the 1st day of the month following the date of enactment of the proposed legislation, whichever date is the later. The Senate amendment prescribes that the annuity shall, in every case, be paid beginning on the 1st day of the month following the date of separation from the service. The conference substitute follows the Senate amendment.

HENRY M. JACKSON,
CARTER MANASCO,
LEO RAYFIEL,
EDWARD H. REES,
JOHN W. BYRNES,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, this report simply modifies the bill as it passed the House. The House version provided for no age minimum on retirement. The Senate had a retirement age of 55. The Senate insisted on that and the House yielded. The report is unanimous. There are no requests for time and, therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TRAINING OF OFFICERS IN THE NAVAL SERVICE

Mr. DREWRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2304) providing for the training of officers in the naval service, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. DREWRY. Mr. Speaker, there is no objection to this bill except that there is an agreement by the members of the Committee that the gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE] be allowed to offer an amendment to section 16.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, my purpose in reserving the right to object was to point out that the Senate bill being called up is identical to the bill which was reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House except in some minor instances. The bill as reported by the House committee contains a section which was controversial. With the understanding that that section will be omitted from the Senate bill, there will be no objection to the consideration of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DREWRY]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a naval and Marine Corps officer candidate training program, supplementary to existing programs, is hereby established, which shall be administered by the Secretary of the Navy in accordance with the provisions of this act and with such regulations as the President may prescribe.

SEC. 2. No individual shall be enrolled in the training program which this act establishes unless (a) he be a male citizen of the United States; (b) with the consent of his parent or legal guardian in the case of a minor, he shall have entered into a contractual agreement with the Secretary of the Navy, acting for and on behalf of the United States, in which said individual obligates himself to the United States for such periods as may be necessary to effectuate the purposes of this act; and (c) he signs an agreement to accept a commission in the Navy or Marine Corps if offered and, having accepted such commission, he will, in the event of termination thereof, accept such commission in the organized Naval or Marine Corps Reserve that may be offered him and thereafter will not resign from the Reserve prior to the sixth anniversary of the date of rank stated in his original commission in the Regular Navy or Marine Corps. The Secretary of the Navy may release any individual from such obligation and separate the individual from the training program at any time that, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy, the best interest of the naval service requires such action.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to enroll in the training program—

(a) any person (1) who, on May 1, 1946, was a member of the Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps or (2) who subsequent to such date may be admitted to such corps and who will not be more than 25 years of age on July 1 of the calendar year in which eligible for appointment to commissioned ranks pursuant to subsection 6 (a). Upon enrollment such persons shall be appointed midshipmen in the Naval Reserve.

(b) as a naval aviation officer candidate (1) any high-school graduate or person of equivalent educational level, or any person who has completed satisfactorily less than two scholastic years' work in an accredited college or university, and who will not be more than 21 years and 6 months of age on July 1 of the calendar year of his appointment as midshipman as hereinafter prescribed; each such candidate shall be enlisted as an apprentice seaman, United States Naval Reserve, and shall, following enrollment, be required to attend such accredited college or university as may be authorized by the Secretary of the Navy as a regular student until he shall have satisfactorily completed not less than two scholastic years of work and in addition shall be required to participate in such military or civil aviation training activities as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy; following the satisfactory completion of such scholastic work and aviation-training activities, such candidates shall be appointed midshipmen in the Navy and ordered to duty for flight training; (2) any member of the Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps who has satisfactorily completed two scholastic years' training in such corps and any other person who shall have satisfactorily completed not less than two scholastic years' work in an accredited college or university, and any enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps who shall demonstrate by a test the attainment of an educational level equivalent to that of two scholastic years of work in an accredited college or university; such candidates shall be not more than 21 years and 6 months of age on July 1 of the calendar year of enrollment as an aviation officer candidate and, upon enrollment, shall be appointed midshipmen in the Navy and ordered to duty for flight training.

SEC. 4. Except as otherwise provided in this section, each midshipman appointed pursuant to part (a) of section 3, while continuing in such status, and each apprentice seaman enlisted pursuant to part (b) of section 3, until the completion of scholastic instruction, shall, except while on active duty, receive retainer pay at the rate of $600 per year and shall, in addition, be entitled to the benefits provided for him by section 10: Provided, That such benefits and retainer pay may be received by midshipmen appointed pursuant to part (a) of section 3 for a period not exceeding four academic years. Each midshipman and apprentice seaman enrolled pursuant to this act shall be entitled to an allowance for (a) initial travel to the college or university in which matriculated, (b) travel while under orders, and (c) travel upon discharge while in a noncommissioned status, in the manner and to the same extent provided for midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy: Provided further, That no allowance for travel upon discharge shall be paid if the dischargee continues his scholastic instruction at other than Government expense in the same college or university in which matriculated. While in flight training or on other flight duty midshipmen appointed under part (b) of section 3 shall be entitled to the pay and allowances now or hereafter provided by law for midshipmen under instruction at the United States Naval Academy and to the same percentage increases of their pay as are now or hereafter provided by law for officers of the Navy assigned to duty involving flying, and shall be issued at Government expense necessary uniforms and equipment as directed by the Secretary of the Navy.

SEC. 5. All midshipmen appointed under part (b) of section 3 may, upon satisfactory completion of flight training, be designated naval aviators and assigned to duty involving flying.

SEC. 6. (a) Midshipmen appointed pursuant to section 3 (a) may be commissioned as ensigns in the line of the Navy, second lieutenants in the Marine Corps, or with the rank of ensign in the appropriate commissioned grade in such staff corps of the Navy in which the rank of ensign is now or may hereafter be authorized, following the satisfactory completion of all the academic and naval science requirements of the established 4-year Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps course.

2. Midshipmen appointed pursuant to section 3 (b) may be commissioned as ensigns in the line of the Navy or second lieutenants in the Marine Corps following the satisfactory completion of 2 years' flight training and flight duty as midshipmen as prescribed in part (b) of section 3 and in section 5.

(b) There may also be commissioned as ensign in the line of the Navy or second lieutenant in the Marine Corps, or with the rank of ensign in the appropriate commissioned grade in such staff corps of the Navy in which the rank of ensign is now or may hereafter be authorized, any male citizen of the United States who is not more than 25 years of age on July 1 of the calendar year in which appointed: (1) Who shall have satisfactorily completed a 4-year course at an accredited college or university, or (2) who is an enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps who shall demonstrate by a test the attainment of an educational level equivalent to that of an individual who has satisfactorily completed a 4-year course at an accredited college or university.

(c) Officers commissioned pursuant to this act in the rank of ensign in a staff corps shall be selected for appointment by a board of commissioned officers of the staff corps concerned.

(d) The date of rank stated in the commissions of officers commissioned in any year pursuant to the foregoing subsections of this section shall be the date of graduation of midshipmen from the Naval Academy in that year and all ensigns of the line of the Navy and second lieutenants of the Marine Corps of the same date of rank, upon being commissioned, shall have precedence among themselves in such order as may be determined by the Secretary of the Navy to insure that the precedence of the officers shall be in accord with their demonstrated performance regardless of the source from which prescribed, and giving due consideration to whatever differences may exist in the methods of assigning grades between the various education institutions at which the officers have been educated. Each officer commissioned in a staff corps of the Navy pursuant to the foregoing subsections of this section shall, upon being commissioned, have assigned as his running mate such line officer of the same rank and same date of rank as the Secretary of the Navy may determine.

SEC. 7. Any officer commissioned under subsection 1 of subsection 6 (a) or under subsection 6 (b) may, upon his own application, after not less than 15 months or 2 years, respectively, of satisfactory service as a commissioned officer, have his commission in the Regular Service terminated and be commissioned in the Naval Reserve or the Marine Corps Reserve and in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy be released from active duty. The date of rank in such commission in a reserve component shall be the same as that of the commission previously held in the regular service.

SEC. 8. The Secretary of the Navy shall in each calendar year cause to be examined (a) the records of all ensigns of the line of the Navy and second lieutenants of the Marine Corps commissioned pursuant to subsection 2 of section 6 (a) who apply for retention in the Regular Service as permanent officers and who in the then current calendar year will reach the first anniversary of the date of rank stated in their respective commissions, selecting from among such officers the number that he may determine necessary for retention, and (b) the records of all other officers appointed pursuant to this act who apply for retention in the Regular Service as permanent officers and who in the then current calendar year will reach the third anniversary of the date of rank stated in their respective commissions, selecting from among such officers the number that he may determine necessary for retention.

SEC. 9. (a) The commission of each officer commissioned pursuant to subsection 2 of section 6 (a) who, prior to June 1 of the calendar year following that in which commissioned, shall not have applied for retention in the regular service and of each officer not selected for retention under clause (a) of section 8 shall be terminated on June 30 of the appropriate calendar year. Upon termination of commission, each such officer who thereupon accepts appointment to commissioned rank in the Naval or Marine Corps Reserve may apply for and receive retainer pay at the rate of $100 for each calendar month or part thereof during which, while an officer of the Naval or Marine Corps Reserve, he pursues full-time instruction in an accredited college or university but not to exceed a total of $2,000, such instruction to commence not later than a date to be determined by the Secretary of the Navy; in addition, each such officer shall be entitled to the benefits provided for him by section 10 of this act.

(b) The commission of each officer commissioned pursuant to subsection 1 of section 6 (a) and pursuant to section 6 (b) who, prior to June 1 of the third calendar year following that in which commissioned, shall not have applied for retention in the regular service and of each officer not selected for retention under clause (b) of section 8 shall be terminated on June 30 of the appropriate calendar year. Upon termination of commission, each such officer may be commissioned in the Naval or Marine Corps Reserve in the grade of lieutenant (junior grade) or first lieutenant, as the case may be (if in a staff corps, with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade) in the grade appropriate to that rank) and to rank from a date 3 years after the date of rank stated in his original commission in the Regular Navy or Regular Marine Corps.

SEC. 10. The Secretary of the Navy may provide, by contract or otherwise, for payment of all expenses incident to the administration of this act, including but not limited to, payment for tuition, fees, books, and laboratory expenses of midshipmen in the Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps, naval aviation officer candidates, and of officers released under subsection 9 (a) of this act.

SEC. 11. The Secretary of the Navy may, in his discretion, give to any enlisted man in the naval service or any male citizen who has had active military or naval service such advance standing in any program provided by this act as the previous education and training of such person justifies.

SEC. 12. The Secretary of the Navy, under such regulations as he may prescribe, may revoke the commission of any officer of the Regular Navy or the Regular Marine Corps who at the date of revocation has had less than 6 years of continuous service as a commissioned officer, and each officer whose commission is so revoked shall be discharged from the service without advance pay or allowances.

SEC. 13. National service life insurance in the amount of $10,000, the premiums for which shall be paid at Government expense, shall be issued to the following persons: (a) Apprentice seamen, United States Naval Reserve, enrolled as aviation officer candidates, at the commencement of flight-training activities and until the termination of their status as aviation officer candidates; (b) midshipmen, United States Navy, upon enrollment as aviation officer candidates and until the termination of that status; (c) midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy, at the commencement of flight-training activities and until the termination of their status as midshipmen. Upon being commissioned in the Regular Navy or Marine Corps such persons shall have the option of continuing such insurance at their own expense.

SEC. 14. In the event that the quota of midshipmen authorized by law to be appointed annually to the Naval Academy from (1) enlisted men of the United States Navy and Marine Corps, (2) enlisted men of the Naval Reserve or Marine Corps Reserve, or (3) by the President at large, is not filled, the Secretary of the Navy may fill the vacancies in such quota by appointing other candidates from any other of such sources who were found best qualified on examination for admission into the Academy and not otherwise appointed.

SEC. 15. Each midshipman hereafter appointed to the Naval Academy shall be required to sign an agreement that, in the event of the acceptance of his resignation from a commissioned status in the Regular Navy or Marine Corps prior to the sixth anniversary of his graduation from the Naval Academy, he will accept such commission in the Organized Naval or Marine Corps Reserve to which he may be appointed and will not resign from the Reserve prior to such sixth anniversary.

SEC. 16. (a) The act of December 20, 1917 (40 Stat. 430), as amended, is hereby further amended to read as follows: "There shall be allowed at the United States Naval Academy eight midshipmen for each Senator, Representative, Delegate in Congress, and Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico, and from the District of Columbia, 160 appointed annually from enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps and 160 appointed annually from enlisted men of the Naval Reserve and Marine Corps Reserve by the Secretary of the Navy under similar conditions so far as applicable as prescribed by law for appointments from enlisted men of the Navy."

(b) Until the necessary additional physical facilities and teaching personnel at the Naval Academy are available in the opinion of the President, the latter may, in each year, specify the number and sources, of additional appointments as midshipmen herein authorized which may be made for the ensuing academic year.

SEC. 17. The President may appoint annually 75 midshipmen to the United States Naval Academy from among the sons of Army, Navy, and Marine Corps personnel.

SEC. 18. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such funds as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

SEC. 19. (a) Subsection (a) of section 22 of the act of March 4, 1925 (43 Stat. 1276), as amended by the act of February 13, 1945 (Public Law No. 1, 79th Cong.), is hereby further amended by substituting for the words "fourteen thousand" in the last proviso thereof the words "fifteen thousand four hundred."

(b) Of the number of Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps members authorized by subsection (a) of this section, not more than 14,000 shall at any one time be enrolled in the training program established by this act.

SEC. 20. No person shall be appointed assistant paymaster in the Navy who, on July 1 of the calendar year in which appointed will not be less than 21 or more than 25 years of age, nor until his physical, mental, and moral qualifications have been established to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy.

SEC. 21. The following acts and parts of acts are hereby repealed:

(a) Section 2 of the act of May 6, 1932 (47 Stat. 149).

(b) Subsection (a) of section 14 of the act of June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 951).

(c) Section 307 of the act of June 25, 1938 (52 Stat. 1182).

(d) Sections 2 and 3 of the act of January 30, 1941 (55 Stat. 4).

(e) Section 8 of the act of February 28, 1925 (43 Stat. 1082).

(f) Section 1379 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. DREWRY. Mr. Speaker, S. 2304 is a bill to provide for the training of officers for the naval service, and for other purposes. The need for this legislation arises from the fact that the authorized line officer strength of the Navy has been established by the Congress at 35,000. The annual increment of junior officers to maintain this strength will be approximately four times the number that can be graduated from the United State Naval Academy. It is therefore essential that additional sources of officers be developed immediately.

The plan proposed in this bill is that the additional officers be educated at civilian colleges and universities under programs which make full use of the experience gained before and during World War II. We would utilize the NROTC, which is now firmly established in 52 colleges and universities throughout the country. We would continue, in a slightly modified form, the naval aviation preparatory program and the aviation cadet program, which have proved highly successful during the war. And we would permit the commissioning in the Navy and Marine Corps of certain other college graduates and enlisted men with comparable education who have special qualifications.

These three groups would supplement the output of the 4-year course at the Naval Academy, which would remain unchanged. Candidates from all four sources would be given identical commissions in the Regular Navy or Marine Corps, and would serve together on active duty for a period of from 15 months to 3 years. At the end of that time, the Navy would select, from those who desire to continue in the service, the number necessary to meet requirements. The others would be placed on inactive duty for an extended period of service in the Organized Reserves.

This plan is definitely practical. It can be operated without any expansion of the Navy Academy, although the Naval Affairs Committee believes with the Navy Department that it would be desirable to increase the size of the Academy to the point where Academy graduates would constitute approximately one-half of the junior officers joining the fleet. It utilizes the facilities of accredited colleges and universities throughout the United States, thus avoiding the great expense of attempting to duplicate such facilities at the Naval Academy or elsewhere. And by using these facilities, it permits flexibility in the size of the program. We avoid the risk of building an enormous educational plant at Government expense and finding at some later date, that a substantial portion of it is no longer required.

The evidence presented to the Naval Affairs Committee in extended hearings also proves conclusively that the plan as a whole will effectively meet its objectives. Although there was some skepticism at the beginning, the committee now agrees with the Navy Department that the principle of procuring officers from several sources, and merging them into the Regular Navy through a period of common service experience, is sound. Fleet Admiral Chester W. Nimitz has made a striking statement on this point. He says:

> A team is strengthened rather than weakened by having members with different qualifications and different aptitudes. A graduate of the University of California or Princeton can be quite as valuable to the Navy as a graduate of the Naval Academy, and the Navy as a whole will benefit by having both on the same team.
> The peacetime Navy, as it is now being reorganized under recent legislation, will be such a team. We are now in the process of transferring to the Regular Navy thousands of Reserve officers who have proved their competence in the war. I believe it will be a strong Navy, carrying forward with undiminished vigor the high tradition of the past, and approaching new problems with flexibility of mind that comes from variety of experience and of outlook. The Holloway Board plan, embodied in this bill, will perpetuate the advantages of bringing into the Navy men with civilian as well as strictly naval backgrounds.

The committeee concurs in this view, which has also been expressed by the Secretary of the Navy, the Chief of Naval Personnel, the members of the Holloway Board which was composed of both civilian and naval members and which drew up the plan for the Navy Department, and a number of distinguished educators who appeared before the committee.

In brief, H. R. 5426 contains the following provisions:

First. Members of the Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps, to a maximum number of 14,000, will be given free tuition, fees, books, and uniforms while pursuing a 4-year college course, including 24-semester hours of instruction in naval science, at one of the 52 NROTC colleges. They will also receive retainer pay at the rate of $50 per month. In return for these advantages, they will agree to serve three full summers on active duty on ships or at naval shore establishments before graduation, and then to serve not less than 6 years in the Navy or Marine Corps, of which at least 15 months will be on active duty immediately after commissioning. Candidates for the NROTC will be selected on the basis of a Nation-wide examination and approval by State or regional selection boards similar to those established for the V–12 program during the war. The number from each State will be proportional to the number of high-school graduates in that State. Special quotas will also be established for enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps.

Second. Aviation candidates will attend accredited colleges of their own choice for 2 years, with free tuition, fees, books, and $50 a month retainer pay. At the end of that time, they will enter flight training, since they will be approximately 20 years old, by far the best age to enter such training. After 3 years of service in the Regular Navy or Marine Corps, they will be selected to continue in the Navy or to go into the Naval Reserve. If they remain in the Navy, they will receive 2 years of college-level education at the Naval Academy or a similar school; if they go into the Reserve, they will be aided in completing their college education at civilian institutions of their own choice to the extent of free tuition, fees, and books, and $100 per month. Aviation candidates, like NROTC candidates, will be selected by a Nation-wide examination and by regional selection boards, which will take into consideration their aptitude for flight. Quotas will be established for enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps.

Third. Civilian graduates of colleges and universities, and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps who have the equivalent of a college education, may be commissioned to meet special requirements established by the Navy and Marine Corps.

As I have said, this bill makes no change in the 4-year course at the Naval Academy or in the method of congressional appointments. The committee felt it wise, however, to insert a provision that the number of congressional appointments will be increased if and when the facilities of the Naval Academy are expanded.

The Navy Department has estimated that the proposed plan, including an increase in the size of the Naval Academy, if approved in subsequent legislation, will cost approximately $49,000,000 per year. This figure is misleading, however, when applied directly to the programs authorized in this bill and not covered or paralleled in previous legislation. The only new items not authorized for previous peacetime programs are the college training of the aviation candidates, a portion of the college expenses of NROTC candidates, and the expense of indoctrination for men commissioned directly from college. The annual cost of these portions of the program, when all provisions of this bill are in effect, will be approximately $24,500,000. Because the number of trainees entering the program with full financial aid during the year beginning July 1, 1946, will be well below the authorized total, the Navy Department has informed us that no additional funds will be required in the budget for the next fiscal year. The Congress will be called upon merely to authorize the shifting of certain funds among authorized appropriations.

This bill, in the view of the committee, has several outstanding merits. It is thoroughly democratic, in that it broadens the base from which future officers of the Navy will come. Every qualified young man in the United States will have an opportunity through this program to become a naval officer. It also offers the opportunity to every accredited college and university of the Nation to contribute toward the education of naval officers. For this reason, the bill has the support of the American Council on Education, which officially represents the colleges, and has been strongly advocated before the committee by such distinguished college presidents as Frank P. Graham, of the University of North Carolina; James P. Baxter II, of Williams College; Frederick A. Middlebush, of the University of Missouri; Edmund E. Day, of Cornell University; Leonard Carmichael, of Tufts College; Henry T. Heald, of the Illinois Institute of Technology; and Father Edward V. Stanford, rector of Augustinian College, in Washington.

The committee believes, with the Navy Department, that the bill will meet the Navy's needs without resorting to any untried measure. Every element in the plan has been tested and found successful. Through the Naval Academy, NROTC, the aviation program, and the commissioning of specially qualified college graduates, the Navy will secure a continuing supply of fully qualified officers from sources sufficiently varied to insure flexibility adequate to meet any emergency. These programs will also provide a constantly replenished reservoir of young, vigorous Reserve officers. Furthermore, the Navy will always have a large number of qualified junior officers for short-term service, thus permitting promotions in reasonably short times without building up an unduly large retired list. All these advantages will accrue at a minimum cost to the Government.

After extended hearings and thorough investigation, the Naval Affairs Committee has concluded that there is no satisfactory alternative to the program embodied in this bill. We urge approval by the House. Furthermore, we urge immediate action, in order that this plan may be put into effect in the fall of this year for the 10,000 officer candidates now under instruction. We must avoid any interval of confusion and disruption between the Navy's wartime officer candidate programs, which end this summer, and a comprehensive peacetime program which will protect our national security in the future. As the Secretary of the Navy said a few days ago:

> There may never be another opportunity, such as we have had twice in the last generation, to train officers after an emergency has come.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. COLE of New York: On page 13, strike all of section 16.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 5426) was laid on the table.

OFFICE OF NAVAL RESEARCH IN THE DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY

Mr. DREWRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5911) entitled "An act to establish an Office of Naval Research in the Department of the Navy," with Senate amendments, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 2, line 4, after "initiation", insert "and."

Page 2, lines 23 and 24, strike out "in addition, report to the Chief of Naval Operations, and shall."

Page 5, after line 5, insert:

"(b) Any funds appropriated to enable the Office of Naval Research to carry out its functions as provided for herein shall, if obligated during the fiscal year for which appropriated, remain available for expenditure for 4 years following the expiration of the fiscal year for which appropriated. After such a 4-year period, the unexpended balances of appropriations shall be carried to the surplus fund and covered into the Treasury."

Page 5, lines 9 and 10, strike out "(acting through and under the Chief of Naval Research)."

"SEC. 7. The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to transfer to the Office of Naval Research, as in his judgment may be necessary and appropriate, such research and development functions as are now assigned to the various bureaus and other agencies and offices of the Navy Department, together with any or all personnel, buildings, facilities, and other property used in the administration thereof, including without limitation the Special Devices Division and the Naval Research Laboratory."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DREWRY]?

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill as amended by the Senate is in substantially the same form as passed by the House and the Senate amendments are acceptable.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DREWRY]?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REHABILITATION ON THE ISLAND OF GUAM

Mr. DREWRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 1466) authorizing rehabilitation on the island of Guam.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the House committee reported a bill covering the same subject matter, authorizing $15,000,000. The Senate bill which it is now asked to be considered, authorizes $6,000,000 for the same purpose, to rehabilitate the island of Guam. It is our purpose to accept the Senate authorization of $6,000,000 and to yield on the $15,000,000.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DREWRY[?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to construct such permanent facilities for the civil populace of the island of Guam as he may deem necessary for their economic rehabilitation at a cost not to exceed $6,000,000 in aggregate amount.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to effectuate the purpose of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

ACQUISITION OF CERTAIN LANDS ON THE ISLAND OF GUAM

Mr. DREWRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2246) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to acquire in fee or otherwise certain lands and rights in land on the island of Guam, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as indicated by the title, the purpose of the bill is to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to acquire additional lands in Guam for two purposes. One, to make available for the Navy lands which can be exchanged for lands confiscated under private ownership because of the war operations, and also to make available to the Navy lands which can be used for the construction of naval establishments and military works on the island.

I should like to point out that this is the first time the Navy Department has requested of Congress authority to fortify the island of Guam. This grant of authorization to acquire lands is the initial step to that end.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to acquire in the name, and for the use, of the United States, by purchase or otherwise, land and rights pertaining thereto situated on or within the island of Guam, including interests in fee, leasehold interests with or without option to purchase interests in fee, and rights-of-way and easements both temporary and perpetual for highways, drainage system, water supply and water distribution facilities, power lines, communication systems, and communication distribution facilities, upon conveyance of title acceptable to him or to such other officer as he may designate without regard to and notwithstanding section 355 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C. A., title 40, sec. 255), or any other provision of law requiring approval of title by the Attorney General of the United States. The authority contained herein may include, but shall not be limited to, acquisitions for the purpose set forth in Public Law 225 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, approved November 15, 1945.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,630,000 to effectuate the purposes of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 6547) was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BARRY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a short letter written by himself.

Mr. SAVAGE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a column from the Southern Teamster in the remarks he made on the OPA conference report.

UNIFORM ADMINISTRATION OF EFFICIENCY RATINGS

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 5590, an act to provide for the uniform administration of efficiency ratings, with a Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

After line 15, insert:

"SEC. 2. The provisions of this act shall be effective upon enactment, except that, with respect to employees in the field services whose positions are not subject to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, such of the provisions of section 9 of the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, as require the Civil Service Commission to approve reductions in compensation and dismissals for inefficiency, or confer the right to a hearing and review of efficiency ratings by boards of review, shall not become effective until such boards of review in the field services are established as provided in section 7 of the act of November 26, 1940 (54 Stat. 1215), under regulations prescribed by the Civil Service Commission, with the approval of the President."

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RESOLUTION LAID ON THE TABLE

The SPEAKER. Without objection, House Resolution 638 will be laid upon the table.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WASIELEWSKI asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in six separate instances and to include a newspaper article in each.

Mr. SOMERS of New York asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a short editorial.

Mr. WOODRUFF (at the request of Mr. MICHENER) was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. KNUTSON (at the request of Mr. MICHENER) was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances and include articles.

Mr. PITTENGER (at the request of Mr. MICHENER) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include newspaper items.

Mr. McDONOUGH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a Nation-wide survey of the veterans' housing program.

Mr. WEICHEL (at the request of Mr. REED of Illinois) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include newspaper articles.

Mr. D'EWART asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include certain remarks he made in connection with REA.

Mr. McCORMACK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial recently appearing in the Boston Globe.

EXPLANATION

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, I have been in my district over the week end. I started back in ample time to be here to vote for House Joint Resolution 371. Unfortunately, the plane on which I was to have traveled was grounded south of my city and there was no other way to travel, so I was a bit late. I arranged by wire, however, for a live pair with my distinguished colleague the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RIVERS].

Had I been present I would have voted for the passage of the measure.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes today at the conclusion of the other special orders.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes today following the other special orders and to include a telegram from the Federation of Labor regarding the bill to provide cars for amputees.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I have a special order of 10 minutes today. I ask unanimous consent that it may be vacated and transferred to tomorrow, following the legislative business of the day and special orders heretofore granted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the special order I had to address the House for 30 minutes today may be transferred to a week from today, following the legislative business of the day and other special orders heretofore entered for that day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MADDEN] is recognized for 30 minutes.

LEGISLATIVE PROBLEMS FACING THE CONGRESS

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the American people are more interested in congressional legislation today than at any time in our history. Two generations of Americans now living have suffered and endured the sacrifice and grief of two World Wars. The veterans, their families, and all other Americans are concerned with discussions and agreements between nations which will guarantee to their children and future generations a permanent peace.

The Seventy-ninth Congress has been in session almost continually since January 3, 1945. This Congress has been called upon to solve unprecedented domestic and international problems which are the natural aftermath of a world war.

It is the duty of every citizen to give serious thought to the problems which confront our Government. After all, the decisions of Congress is a reflection of public opinion back home.

PERMANENT PEACE

It is my belief that our people have not forgotten the sad and costly lesson they learned by following the pathway of isolation after World War I. This fact was demonstrated over a year ago when 51 nations sent delegates to San Francisco to write a United Nations Charter for a new world organization to insure future peace. From now on the one supreme task not only of America but of every nation is to build a new world relationship on a foundation of just social, economic, and spiritual principles. Law must take the place of brute force everywhere. Understanding and mutual helpfulness must gradually smother the fires of class and racial hate, suspicion, and fear.

We stand at this moment in the dark dawn of a new age. For the first time in the long and tragic history of man we face a task which only the entire human race, working together, can finish.

Every brave boy who paid the supreme sacrifice in war did so with the thought that the future generations would not be called upon to repeat the destruction and slaughter of another world conflict.

In the preliminary meetings already held by the United Nations delegates difficult problems have been solved, but we must realize that we are pioneering in the art of world arbitration—the road will not be smooth. Time and experience will gradually educate the nations of the world as to the necessity of compromise and mutual understanding.

Our greatest obligations to the World War II veteran and future generations is to do everything possible to construct barriers against the possibility of World War III. Our Government has already assumed its rightful place of world leadership, and it would be a calamity if we retreated at this time.

TRADE AND COMMERCE

Last week the Congress passed the resolution ratifying the British loan. One of the prime reasons for favorable action on this loan was that international trade, on a sound and nondiscriminatory basis among nations is the best preventative of an economic war which might be the seed for future armed conflict.

The A. F. of L., CIO, chambers of commerce of the United States, American Bankers Association, several Farm Bureau groups, and about 50 other outstanding national organizations ratified the British loan proposal as not only good business for America, but a forward step in international cooperation.

The testimony of witnesses, experienced in finance and international commerce, who appeared before the Banking and Currency Committee, revealed the necessity of reestablishing Britain and her colonies so they can resume their former export and import business with America. Furthermore, without England as a member of the Bretton Woods financial agreement, it would be impossible for America to support a world bank alone. Financial isolation would cripple American industry, destroy the hope of full employment, and our much-needed, after-war prosperity.

DOMESTIC PROBLEMS

Many people recollect the period of inflation and industrial strife which our country endured after World War I. This abnormal condition threw our economy off its equilibrium and brought us the fabulous years of real estate and stock market speculation which led us to the crash of October 1929, and four sad years of panic and depression. That was truly the "boom and bust" period. I am fearful that the unfortunate policies of the 1920's may be reestablished. We must not set into motion the forces of inflation as there will be but one result—the most chaotic depression this country has ever known. The American people are entitled to a firm assurance from Congress that rents and the prices of food, clothing, and other essentials will be held in line. These controls should not be removed until this war emergency has passed and the supply can meet the consumers' demand.

Unfortunately sufficient Members on the Democratic side of the House joined the great majority of the Republicans to pass crippling amendments to the price control bill.

In 1945 the Federal Reserve Board and the Bureau of Agricultural Economics made a survey to determine the annual income levels of the Nation's families. Their report follows:

One out of five families (approximately 9,300,000 families), under $1,000 a year.

One out of two families (12,400,000 families), under $2,000 a year.

Two out of three families (10,300,000 families), less than $3,000 per year.

Seven million families, less than $4,000 per year.

Three million one hundred thousand families, less than $5,000 per year.

Two million two hundred thousand families, less than $7,500 per year.

The study showed that savings, to an even greater extent than incomes, were concentrated in relatively few hands. In the first low-income group set out above, the report showed that these families spent more than they earned in 1945, thus dipping into their past savings to make both ends meet. Their liquid assets, on the average, were $20 per family. This group offers little market for anything except the bare necessities of life; and a sharp rise in prices would eliminate approximately 30,000,000 families as possible purchasers for automobiles, refrigerators, washing machines, and so forth.

The above should convince the average manufacturer and retailer that an effective OPA is their greatest insurance policy for prosperity.

It is amusing to observe that individuals and pressure groups who oppose price control have in the past consistently fought the demand for increased wages. It is fundamental that higher wages to the workers of America is of no value if living costs continue to rise. This would create a vicious cycle which will end only in industrial ruination and chaos.

MINIMUM WAGE

The minimum-wage legislation which we are now trying to bring on the floor of the House by a discharge petition should have been passed by this Congress long ago. This legislation would have given millions of our citizens the right to earn enough to provide adequate food, clothing, recreation, and security for themselves and their families. It would add to national contentment and prosperity.

FEPC

Two years ago both political parties incorporated in their platforms a program calling for the abolition of discrimination in employment. This legislation outlawed the injection into our economy of racial or religious prejudice as a yardstick for the right to secure a job.

It is my firm belief that had Congress enacted President Truman's legislative recommendations on full employment, minimum wages, FEPC, social security, and other progressive measures, most of our industrial and management's disputes of the last year would have been averted.

VETERANS

This Congress can indeed be proud of the legislation is has passed in behalf of the war veteran. Although legislation of this magnitude is not perfect, nevertheless, Congress has willingly amended and revised parts of this legislation whenever the necessity arises or requested by the Veterans' Administration. It is indeed a difficult task to properly administer to over 12,000,000 veterans without mistakes and inequalities. Time does not permit me to review the extended provisions of veterans' legislation passed by this Congress.

Owing to curtailment of building material to civilians during the war period, home building was suspended almost 5 years. When the war ceased, millions of veterans returned to their homes to face the problem of an already acute housing shortage. The Congress has made every effort to bring about mass production of houses in the shortest possible time to provide homes for the veterans and their families. The accomplishment of this task will require patience and sacrifice, not only on the part of the veterans, but also civilians, and industrial management.

Unfortunately the veterans' housing legislation was sadly crippled by the defeat of the provisions for ample subsidies for building materials. In spite of the above mentioned handicaps, surprising progress is being made in the difficult task of providing homes for veterans.

Our greatest housing problem and bottleneck today is the lack of low-priced houses now under construction. Bankers and government officials have had to tell many veterans that a man who cannot afford more than $40 a month rent, is ill-advised to buy a house costing more than $5,000. The original goal of building half of the new houses to sell for $5,000 or less, has been abandoned as building costs have gone up. Instead of $5,000, the price of what is called low-cost housing has been raised to $8,000 or $9,000.

I hope the Congress does not recess for the summer without acting favorably upon the pending Wagner-Ellender-Taft housing bill. At present, construction is being channeled into speculative building for quick sale and most of the houses will meet a minimum standard of quality.

LABOR

Over 2 years ago, Congress enacted the so-called Smith-Connally bill for the purpose of curbing industrial difficulties and strikes. This legislation proved to be a great mistake and a failure. Its sponsors have openly admitted that it was ill-advised and impractical. Recently during the confusion and frenzy incident to numerous labor-management disputes, the Congress passed the so-called Case bill. This legislation would practically nullify the National Labor Relations Act and the Norris-LaGuardia Anti-Injunction Act. If this bill became a law, labor would lose almost all the gains it has made during the last 15 years. President Truman vetoed the Case bill and the Congress sustained his veto by only a margin of 5 votes. The Case bill was overwhelmingly supported—152 to 16—by Republican Members of the House. Had this legislation become a law, it would have haunted its sponsors, contributed to industrial strife, and postponed reconversion and peacetime prosperity indefinitely.

SOCIAL SECURITY

The Committee on Ways and Means has, for a number of weeks, been holding hearings on legislation calling for the expansion of our social-security program. Numerous witnesses from all parts of the country testified, urging the necessity for an expansion and complete revision of our social-security laws. Unfortunately the committee has reported out a bill which fails to deal with the most important aspects of social-security expansion. It is my firm hope that one of the first acts of the new Congress will be to pass comprehensive and broad legislation dealing with social security.

Our democracy can thrive only when it adequately respects and preserves the dignity of the common people. Only by strengthening and upholding the economic freedom, independence, and self-respect of the aged, the individual and the family, can we guard democracy against the world-wide challenge of communism and socialism.

AGRICULTURE

For the first time in our history, farm income has risen more rapidly than the income of any other group in our economy. The farmers of America should not forget the deplorable 1920's when they paid a great penalty for governmental misrule.

In 1932, corn was selling for 8 cents a bushel, wheat for 32 cents, and milk for $1.08 per hundredweight. We will recollect in the Middle West farmers gathered in certain localities and defied judges and lawyers against foreclosure proceedings on their farms. Since March 4, 1933, our Government has cooperated in every way with the farm organizations in America to enact laws and inaugurate policies which has placed agriculture on its present high pedestal of prosperity.

UNITED NATIONS

The future of modern civilization is dependent upon the success of the United Nations organization. This experiment in world government to prevent war must function carefully until firmly established.

The United Nations eventually must enforce the principles of the Atlantic Charter. There can be no permanent peace unless liberty and self-government is given to all nations, great and small. Freedom's greatest ally is the truth. One of the future tasks of United Nations organization is to give the world true information on freedom and self-government in Poland, Czecloslovakia, Italy, Romania, Hungary, Yugoslavia, Lithuania, Greece, and other Balkan areas where oppression might furnish the seed for future conflict. This equally applies for the necessity to establish a permanent Jewish homeland in Palestine.

This organization must start to enforce the provisions of the Atlantic Charter. Aggression on the part of any nation will eventually culminate in another terrible war.

The United Nations must exercise vision, courage, and world leadership now to establish respect and permanence. It must succeed or America, the world, and future generations will live under the dark cloud of fear, suspicion, world insecurity, and the constant threat of war.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] is recognized for 10 minutes.

AMENDMENTS TO SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, on tomorrow, as I understand the present plans, it is anticipated that we shall consider a resolution, or rule, determining the manner of considering a bill amending the Social Security Act. The mere fact that Congress is to consider amending the Social Security Act and to consider the question of increasing direly needed benefits to the needy old people of the country and the blind and the dependent children must gladden the hearts, mus kindle a flame of hope in the hearts of these unfortunate people; but, Mr. Speaker, that hope will be dimmed in the hearts of those needy people in a great many States and turned into disappointment, disillusionment, and despair if the rule which is proposed is not amended because it is a closed rule, closed tight, airtight, closed so tight that, if adopted unamended, the membership will foreclose themselves from offering amendments or even considering amendments. Indeed, they will foreclose themselves from any opportunity to give adequate consideration to the needs of the millions of these unfortunate of our citizens.

These people who have reached the evening shadows of life and face stark want, these people with unseeing eyes, these dependent children, unable now to speak for themselves, deserve better treatment at our hands. Shall we, by our own votes, put upon ourselves a yoke of impotency to give succor to the wants of the poor old, blind, and dependent children? Not I, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RAMEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. RAMEY. I agree in toto with what the gentleman says. However, is there any need for the Congress having to shackle itself? Have we not an opportunity to take the shackles off and enact proper legislation?

Mr. GORE. We will be afforded the opportunity of determining the manner in which we will consider this bill. The Congress is the master of itself tomorrow on this question. The issue will be between adequate consideration of a problem vital to millions of American people and an inadequate consideration, indeed, a denial of an opportunity to consider. It is also a denial of the rights of these needy old people, the dependent and blind, to have their problems considered by the Congress.

An effort will be made to vote down the previous question on the rule which, if voted by a majority of the Congress, will make the rule subject to amendment and thereby the Congress itself can determine how we will consider this question. The issue is plain. It is an issue between a careful, full consideration of the country's social security needs by Congress on the one hand and a hasty go-home, quick abandonment of our responsibility on the other. It is an issue between tying our own hands or keeping them free to work our majority will on questions affecting the millions of American citizens concerned with social security. It is an issue between fair and more equitable treatment of the country's needy old, the blind, the dependent children, or in increasing the existing discrimination and unequal treatment. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, it is an issue between giving adequate consideration to a vital question and a self-imposed denial of an opportunity to do so.

Even if we, the Members of this body, were willing to deny ourselves the right of full consideration of this question, I say we should not deny the right of these millions of needy old people, the dependent children, and the helpless sightless to have their problems considered by the Congress. This is their problem as well as ours, and I dare say more pressing to them.

Mr. WASIELEWSKI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. WASIELEWSKI. The bill that comes before the House tomorrow provides for an increase in the grants that the Federal Government will make from $20 to $25 and the State is to match the payments made by the Federal Government. There are many States, however, that have not been taking advantage of the full amount that the Federal Government is contributing today.

Mr. GORE. And for that reason it is a snare and a delusion to hold out this hope to the needy old people in those States where the State governments cannot even match that which is already available. How does it cperate? It operates only to bring increased benefits to those people who live in States that have already qualified, or in the future qualify, to meet the matching requirements. The program would begin October 1. Only a few States are now qualified to take advantage of the increased benefits and a great many States simply cannot qualify. The bill results in 90 percent of the new Federal expenditures under present circumstances going to five States; in fact nearly half going to one State; while the increase for 17 States is exactly zero.

Mr. WASIELEWSKI. Early in the first session of the Seventy-ninth Congress $50,000 was appropriated by the House for the Ways and Means Committee to make a comprehensive study of the social-security structure.

A committee of experts has been working on this matter for over a year and a half. Last January they brought in a comprehensive study under the leadership of Commander Calhoun, and the committee then went into hearings on this matter late in February and concluded its hearings, I think, early in June. But we were interrupted repeatedly with other important legislation, and as a result the committee has not had adequate time to make a full evaluation of the recommendations of its experts. This legislation is merely temporary to carry us over into the next session when it is expected that a comprehensive social-security study will be made by the committee and a total revision of the whole act will be made. We did not feel that it would be proper for us to do this job in a piecemeal fashion, and for that reason this bill will probably, on its face, seem inadequate and probably is inadequate but was introduced because this was all that could be brought out at this time without getting into an extended controversy.

Mr. GORE. The gentleman is a member of the great Committee on Ways and Means which is headed by a great citizen, a gentleman who is held in the highest esteem, love, and respect by this body, the gentleman from North Carolina, the Honorable ROBERT L. DOUGHTON.

It is true that the Congress authorized this committee to expend $50,000 for the employment of a technical staff to study the social-security program and to make recommendations for needed changes. The gentleman says that this staff of experts gave to the committee a comprehensive report away back last January. And yet, the gentleman pleads inadequate time for consideration. I do not wish to criticize the gentleman's committee; I think it is one of the great committees of the House; but the Congress and the country have a right to expect of the committee expeditious consideration of a problem so pressing as the need for amendments to the Social Security Act. The record of the gentleman's fine committee, however, is not as laggard as this colloquy thus far would indicate, because on July 1 his committee reported a bill much more comprehensive than the one for which a closed rule will be proposed tomorrow. This was H. R. 6911 and, although it did not go far enough, it was a great improvement over the bill which his committee reported on July 15. For reasons unknown to me, the gentleman's committee reversed its position within this 2-week period which, incidentally, shows that the gentleman's committee can act with dispatch under certain circumstances. I think the first bill which the gentleman's committee reported received the most careful consideration. Indeed, according to the gentleman's statement, his committee considered the question for 5 months and then after this diligent consideration reported H. R. 6911, so this bill must have represented the best judgment of the Ways and Means Committee. I am not acquainted with the executive sessions of the gentleman's committee, but I have heard it said several times that H. R. 6911 was reported by the Ways and Means Committee by the overwhelming vote of 17 to 8. On the other hand, the last bill reported by the committee on which a closed rule is now reported of necessity must have been conceived rather hastily.

So, Mr. Speaker, the Ways and Means Committee has reported two bills amending the Social Security Act within a 2-week period. It is unreasonable, then, to ask that the House be allowed to consider the contents of both of these bills? This seems entirely reasonable. And, yet, by the rule we would not only be denied the right to consider both bills but we would not even be allowed to select the bill which must have represented the best judgment of the Ways and Means Committee after an unusually long period of consideration.

If the rule is amended so as to permit it, I propose to offer H. R. 6911, the better and more comprehensive of the two bills reported by the Ways and Means Committee, as a substitute for the hastily contrived, inadequate bill, H. R. 7037, which only worsens the existing unfairness and inequity.

H. R. 7037 is wholly inadequate. It gives more to those who need it less, and nothing to those who need help most.

It increases the present inequity and discrimination in treatment of the country's needy citizens.

It increases rather than diminishes the disparity in the amount of Federal grants for old-age assistance, aid to the blind, and aid for dependent children.

It will do nothing to help raise the admittedly inadequate assistance payments in those low-income States which are unable to match Federal funds already available.

It but beguiles the majority of our old citizens and the blind by showing them the promised land which they can never reach because they live in the wrong State.

It is contrary to every sound principle of social justice, equality of treatment, public finance, and national policy.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I am in accord with the gentleman's view that this legislation should not come before the House under a closed rule. I have at other times objected or found fault with the Committee on Ways and Means for bringing legislation to the floor under a closed rule. But I think that this legislation, of all legislation that we have had, ought to come out on the floor and be fully and completely discussed, and above all things, the Members ought to certainly have a right to offer amendments. As the gentleman has suggested, the only way to get at it now is to vote down the previous question on the rule. I think also that it is extremely unfortunate that this great committee of ours, for whose members we have the highest respect, should bring this legislation to the floor at this late hour. It should have come up before now so that we would have had a chance to get at it and discuss it and know what it contains, because as I view it, in looking at the tables already placed in the RECORD it is certainly inequitable.

Mr. GORE. The able gentleman is eminently correct. You know, when I hear it said here that this great House of Representatives cannot consider by an open rule a bill dealing with the Social Security program, I wonder how the great august body on the other side of the Capitol ever manages to pass a Social Security bill. They have no gag rules. They have open debate. Cloture is only voted about once every decade. They can consider any and all amendments that any Member offers. And yet, by some legislative miracle I suppose, they succeed in passing every bill that becomes law. I resist the suggestion that this House is incapable of giving adequate consideration to a measure so vitally affecting millions of people.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Can the gentleman tell me, is there a provision in the bill that would allow the widows of veterans to collect the sums that would be due their husbands if they had lived?

Mr. GORE. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. WASIELEWSKI. Yes; it gives them the same rights as would go to anyone under the Social Security Act.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I mean that if the veteran had lived he probably would have had certain moneys coming to him. This bill takes care of that? Up to now the widow could not collect that money.

Mr. WASIELEWSKI. It takes care of his social-security credit for 3 years after he leaves the Army.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Then it accrues to her?

Mr. WASIELEWSKI. That is right.

Mr. GORE. Both H. R. 6911 and H. R. 7037 contain these provisions. And I understand that a separate bill embodying those features of this bill which affect veterans passed the Senate. It could be called up by the Chairman and I am sure passed by unanimous consent.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I have introduced a bill myself for that purpose, in connection with the accrued money.

Mr. GORE. I congratulate the gentlewoman.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Do I correctly understand this bill will not be subject to amendment under the rule?

Mr. GORE. If the rule is adopted unamended, but I propose that we vote down the previous question in order that we can offer amendments to this bill, which is vital to our people. Even if we ourselves are willing to foreclose our own rights, we ought not to be willing to foredoom the right of these needy people to have the problem of increasing their benefits considered in the House.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I am not defending a closed rule, but it is a fact that this whole problem of social security is extraordinarily intricate and complicated. It is not an easy matter to understand unless you make a special study of it. Is not that a fact?

Mr. GORE. It certainly is, but I think the gentleman from Ohio and every Member of this House have made a special study, because it affects so vitally the people whom they represent. I know the gentleman, for instance, has given long hours of study to the whole question of social security in order that he can represent the best interests of the many elder citizens in his district who need assistance and also the best interests of his blind and dependent children constituents.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Yes, but the gentleman from Ohio does not claim to understand it.

Mr. GORE. The gentleman is modest.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HOBBS. I simply wish to voice my appreciation, both personally and officially, for the leadership which the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee is giving us in this matter. I hope that he may rally the support which I am sure his zeal and his knowledge of this subject challenge and demand.

Mr. GORE. I thank the distinguished gentleman from Alabama. His great State, for instance, would receive only a measly $4,000 increase over the 1943–44 rate of Federal expenditure for old age assistance for the entire State. This might be a nickel apiece.

Before going further I would like to insert a table which shows the actual amount of increased Federal expenditure provided for each State by H. R. 7037 for old age assistance.

Source: Social Security Board.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that this is wrong; that by this bill the gross inequity now prevailing is only made worse.

I am not opposed to providing an increased Federal grant to the more favored States, nor am I trying to defeat it. Indeed, I favor a greater increase than is provided in H. R. 7037. H. R. 6911 provides larger increases in benefits for all States than H. R. 7037, but recognizes, also, differences in the ability of the States to finance their share of public assistance.

I object, and I think my objection is reasoned, to any bill which further increases the disparity, inequity, and unfair discrimination by the Federal Government between its citizens. Already the Federal Government is paying more than three times as much in assistance grants to citizens of one State as to citizens of some other State. Under the 50–50 matching system the Federal Government grants most assistance to the States which need it least and grants least to the States which need it most. Both the Social Security Board and the committee's technical staff recommended that the formula be modified so as to correct these gross inequities. After long and diligent consideration, the Ways and Means Committee itself said in its report on July 1, 1946:

Increase in Federal share in low-income States: Federal grants-in-aid for public assistance are intended to help in aiding needy aged and blind persons and dependent children in all parts of the country and to some extent to equalize the financial burden throughout the Nation. The present system of equal matching, however, has not adequately fulfilled these objectives. The present 50-percent basis for Federal participation does not recognize differences in the ability of States to finance public assistance, nor does it recognize the greater incidence of poverty in States with low economic resources. To assist their needy people, the low-income States must make greater tax effort than States with larger resources where relatively fewer persons are in need. This is illustrated by the fact that, in 1942, the latest year for which complete information is available, two-thirds of the States with less than average per capita income appreciably exceeded the average for all States in tax effort to finance the special types of public assistance. In contrast, only one-sixth of the States with per capita income above the national average exerted above-average tax efforts for this purpose.

The variable matching formula is not a perfect method for allocation of Federal funds for old-age assistance, but, at least, it is an improvement over the present method, and an even greater improvement over the provision of H. R. 7037. It is a step in the direction of equality of treatment.

I would like to quote an explanation of the variable matching formula from the Ways and Means Committee report of July 1:

For States with per capita income below the average for the Nation, the committee proposes an increase in the proportion of assistance costs borne by the Federal Government. The share of the cost to be paid by each low-income State will depend upon how its per capita income compares with that for the country as a whole. The State proportion will be equal to one-half the percentage which its per capita income is of the national per capita income. For example, a State whose per capita income is only 80 percent of the national per capita income would contribute 40 percent of its expenditures for assistance; the Federal share would be 60 percent in this State. All States whose per capita income falls below two-thirds of the national per capita income will pay 33⅓ percent of assistance costs from State and local funds and will receive 66⅔ percent of such costs from Federal funds.

No change in relative State and Federal shares of assistance payments is proposed for the States with per capita income equal to or greater than that for the Nation. In no State will the increased Federal share apply to individual payments in excess of $60 in old-age assistance and aid to the blind, and, in aid to dependent children, in excess of $27 for the first child in the home and $18 for each additional child. Though the Federal Government stands ready to pay a larger percentage of the cost of individual payments in low than in high-income States, it will not contribute a larger sum to any payment in low-income States than in those with relatively more resources.

The bill provides that the relative State and Federal shares shall be published by the Social Security Board in even-numbered years, to take effect the following July, so that the public-assistance agencies and State legislatures will have ample time to plan their requirements and to make appropriations. Legislatures in 39 States meet only every other year in odd-numbered years. Such shares shall be determined on the basis of the per capita income figures determined by the Department of Commerce and shall be computed from figures for the three most recent years for which data are available. The percentages of Federal and State participation, based on per capita income data for the 3 years 1941 to 1943, are given for each State in table 1.

The variable matching formula would give additional Federal funds, varying in amounts, to 31 States. These States and the proportion of Federal assistance funds under H. R. 6911 are as follows:

Federal proportion under H. R. 6911

Alabama	66⅔
Arizona	59
Arkansas	66⅔
Colorado	53

Both H. R. 6911 and H. R. 7037 contain provisions relating to World War II veterans and unemployment compensation for maritime workers.

There is another big difference, however, between H. R. 6911 and H. R. 7037. H. R. 6911 provides an increase in the Federal contribution of from $20 to $30 to those States which will match same, while H. R. 7037 increases the Federal contribution to $25. In order that the Members may see just how H. R. 6911 would apply to each State, I am inserting below the amount of Federal expenditures for old-age assistance to each State in the 1943–44 period, and the amount which would be provided by H. R. 6911:

Old-age assistance from Federal funds in 1943–44 and under H. R. 6911

While H. R. 7037 provides a freezing of the social security tax rate, H. R. 6911 provides that the social security tax rate be modestly increased. That, too, was recommended by the supporting staff which the Ways and Means Committee employed. Along with the recommendations of the committee's technical staff and of the social security order, I hold it imperative that the social security tax rate undergo a gradual increase. Other Members, however, may feel differently about this question. Surely this simple question of whether the social security tax rate should be increased is not too complicated for the Congress to pass judgment upon it. I see no reason why we should deny or shield ourselves the responsibility of reaching a decision upon the question apart from other considerations. If the rule is amended so as to permit it, the majority could easily determine this question. That is our right and that is our responsibility.

Mr. Speaker, I see no reason why we should be asked to delegate all responsibility for righting the country's social-security laws to one committee and then gag our own selves out of an opportunity to represent the will of our constituents on so vital a subject.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VOORHIS of California asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter and a petition.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, on June 13, at page 6882 of the RECORD, and on June 14, at page 6971 of the RECORD, I was given permission to extend my remarks. I ask unanimous consent to extend that permission granted previously.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Massachusetts is recognized for 3 minutes.

DISABLED VETERANS

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the following telegram has come to me from Mr. W. C. Hushing, chairman, national legislative committee, American Federation of Labor:

Because of the fact that many of our million and a half members who served in the armed services are amputees and as a humanitarian act of justice to all amputees the American Federation of Labor approves H. R. 6304 now before the House Committee on World War Veterans legislation and hopes that you will use every effort possible to secure enactment by Congress.

Mr. Speaker, the American Federation of Labor has endorsed this measure a number of times and, as was stated, has done a great deal of work for it just as have members of the CIO. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation said that he is going to call the members of the committee together and has received permission from the House for the committee to sit while the House is in session in order to consider legislation for the amputees and paraplegics.

Mr. Speaker, while we were at war these halls rang and rang and rang with speeches about our love and gratitude to our veterans we promised so much. Mr. Speaker, today, these halls ring, ring, and ring with speeches about loans to England and loans to other countries and gifts to other countries, about our debt to other countries, and there are hours and hours and hours of debate upon those measures and the benefits that should be given to other countries. What about the debt to our own? Even our Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation spent an entire morning 2 days ago on legislation to help the Filipino. That was administration "must" legislation. What is being done for our own amputees? The administration should make that "must" legislation.

Mr. Speaker, our disabled are being forgotten during this past year. We are doing very little in the way of benefits for them. We spend no time in debate upon them. Comparatively, we have done so much more for the able-bodied than for the disabled. They are our first duty and our great and endless responsibility. They ought to be our first privilege and not just a duty or an obligation. Mr. Speaker, I hope this will be the last speech I will have to make in appealing for help for the amputees and the paraplegics, the men whom it will be too late to help as they should be helped. These men need proper conveyances at once in order to get to and from their work. Many of these boys are not going to be able to wear their artificial legs for 2 years.

The Veterans of Foreign Wars have suggested a bill which I introduced today and which they call the VFW's bill for amputees and which they endorse. Its objective is the same as 6304 only they leave out the cash payment provision of 6304. The bill reads as follows. They are forward looking as always:

A bill to authorize the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to furnish funds for the purchase of an automobile by certain disabled veterans and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be available to any veteran having a service incurred disability due to loss, or loss of use of, one or more limbs, a credit not to exceed $1,500 toward the purchase price of an automobile, which amount shall be payable to the seller by the Veterans' Administration upon the submission of evidence as to the value of the automobile involved, the terms of the sales agreement, and evidence that a good title will pass to the veteran upon complete settlement of the purchase price: Provided, That the Administrator may issue such rules and regulations as may be appropriate to accomplish the purpose of the act which is to facilitate the rehabilitation of such veterans by enabling them to purchase an automobile for their own use: And provided further, That only one such payment on the purchase price on an automobile shall be made for the benefit of any one veteran.

SEC. 2. The penal provisions under Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, as amended, shall be for application under this act.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mrs ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for another minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentlewoman may proceed for an additional minute.

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I hope I will not have to ask for any more time upon this subject after this.

Mr. RAMEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. RAMEY. Is the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation going to meet tomorrow morning? I have not been notified, but I understand that the committee is going to meet tomorrow morning.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I hope so, in order that a bill may be brought up and passed. A bill for this purpose has been before the committee for months. May I say to the gentleman from Ohio that it is incredible to me that something should not be done to rehabilitate these veterans. In 2 years the stumps of their legs will be in better condition and they may then perhaps be able to walk to their jobs. By then they may have better artificial legs. Many can never walk. It is just a matter of rehabilitation, a matter of their treatment. The condition of the servicemen's amputations are different from that of civilian amputations. Their injuries are different and last longer. Many doctors and many persons in the armed services have expressed a great hope that this bill will pass. It is just a question of giving the men prosthetic appliances, an added crutch for awhile. I do not and cannot believe that the Congress will adjourn sine die without doing justice or at least a measure of justice to these men. Persons stop me and ask, Has Congress a heart? This is not a matter of just the heart. It is a matter of the head. But has Congress a heart? Has it?

The letter referred to is as follows:

JUNE 26, 1946.

Representative EDITH NOURSE ROGERS, House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MRS. ROGERS: Regarding your bill now before Congress which would provide, at Government expense, specially equipped automobiles for amputees and paralyzed veterans of World War II.

As delegate to the county convention on the Democratic Party ticket to represent ward 1, district 44 here in Detroit, I speak not only for myself but for all the people in my ward and district, when I say that we heartily approve of this bill.

I have, at various meetings, asked the people of my county to write to their Congressmen in favor of your bill. Naturally, I have also written personally to my own Congressman, GEORGE D. O'BRIEN, pleading for the passage of this bill.

Inasmuch as I feel that you did an unusually fine thing to introduce this bill, I wish to give you all the support I can. Please advise in what manner I can further help.

Sincerely,

DOROTHY SCHOENBRUN.

DETROIT, MICH.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, JULY 24, 1946

(Legislative day of Friday, July 5, 1946)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Edward Gardiner Latch, D. D., minister, Metropolitan Memorial Methodist Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O eternal God, who art man's rock of refuge in every age, without whom no one is strong and no one is secure, we pray that our lives may be built not upon the shifting sands of those who hear Thy word and do it not but upon the eternal rock of those who hear Thy word and do it daily. So we dedicate ourselves to Thee in body, in mind, and in spirit.

Keep our hearts, O God, in the realm of the spirit where love abides, where wisdom abounds, where insight is inspiration, and where desire is devotion to the highest. Help us courageously to contend against all evil, to make no peace with oppression, to be just to all men, and to so use our freedom that men everywhere may be free. By Thy spirit may we learn to love mercy, do justly, and walk humbly with Thee.

We pray in the name of Him who ever summons us to life that is noble and true and just, our Lord and Master, Jesus Christ. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar days Monday, July 22, and Tuesday, July 23, 1946, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 1466. An act authorizing rehabilitation on the island of Guam; and

S. 2246. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to acquire in fee or otherwise certain lands and rights in land on the island of Guam, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5590) to provide for the uniform administration of efficiency ratings.

The message further announced that the House had severally agreed to the amendments of the Senate to each of the following bills of the House:

H. R. 5311. An act to amend Revised Statutes, 4921 (U. S. C. A., title 35, Patents, sec. 70), providing that damages be ascertained on the basis of compensation for infringement; and

H. R. 5911. An act to establish an Office of Naval Research in the Department of the Navy; to plan, foster, and encourage scientific research in recognition of its paramount importance as related to the maintenance of future naval power, and the preservation of national security; to provide within the Department of the Navy a single office, which, by contract and otherwise, shall be able to obtain, coordinate, and make available to all bureaus and activities of the Department of the Navy, world-wide scientific information and the necessary services for conducting specialized and imaginative research; to establish a Naval Research Advisory Committee consisting of persons preeminent in the fields of science and research, to consult with and advise the chief of such office in matters pertaining to research.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 78) for the relief of the estate of William Edward Oates.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2091) for the relief of Joseph E. Bennett.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4718) to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, to provide annuities for certain officers and employees who have rendered at least 25 years of service.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 305) providing for membership and participation by the United States in the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization, and authorizing an appropriation therefor.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6702) to clarify the rights of former owners of real property to reacquire such property under the Surplus Property Act of 1944; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. MANASCO, Mr. WHITTINGTON, Mr. HART, Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan, and Mr. BENDER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4051) to grant to enlisted personnel of the armed forces certain benefits in lieu of accumulated leave; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. MAY, Mr. THOMASON, Mr. BROOKS, Mr. ARENDS, and Mr. CLASON were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 160) authorizing the printing of the handbook entitled "Laws Relating to the Physically Handicapped" as a House document, and providing for additional copies thereof, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED

The Secretary of the Senate reported that on July 23, 1946, he presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills and joint resolution:

S. 346. An act to amend section 21 of the act of May 28, 1896 (29 Stat. 184; 28 U. S. C., sec. 597) prescribing fees of United States commissioners;

PRINTING OF ADDITIONAL COPIES OF SENATE DOCUMENT NO. 244, REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON INVESTIGATION OF PEARL HARBOR ATTACK

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Printing, I ask unanimous consent to report favorably, without amendment, Senate Concurrent Resolution 74, submitted by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] on July 23, 1946, and I request its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 8,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 244, being the report of the Joint Committee on the Investigation of the Pearl Harbor Attack pursuant to Senate Concurrent Resolution 27, a concurrent resolution to investigate the attack on Pearl Harbor on December 7, 1941, and events and circumstances relating thereto, including the additional views of Mr. KEEFE and the minority views of Mr. FERGUSON and Mr. BREWSTER, of which 6,000 copies shall be for the use of the said joint committee, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate document room, and 1,000 copies for the use of the House document room.

REPORT ON DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

Mr. BARKLEY, from the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers, to which was referred for examination and recommendation a list of records transmitted to the Senate by the Archivist of the United States that appeared to have no permanent value or historical interest, submitted a report thereon pursuant to law.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MORSE (for himself, Mr. GEORGE, Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado, Mr. FULBRIGHT, Mr. CORDON, Mr. STEWART, and Mr. HILL):

S. 2477. A bill to authorize the Veterans' Administration to reimburse State and local agencies for expenses incurred in rendering services in connection with the administration of certain training programs for veterans, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

INVESTIGATION OF CONTROL BY FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION OF RADIO BROADCASTING PROGRAMS

Mr. TOBEY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 307), which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation with respect to (1) the exercise of control by the Federal Communications Commission over radio broadcasting programs and the extent to which said Commission claims to have the right, and exercises the right, to censor or control the operating and program policies of radio broadcasting stations, and the extent to which such censorship or control has restricted or may restrict freedom of speech in radio broadcasting as guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States; (2) the effect upon the public interest of such censorship and control or attempted censorship or control; (3) the manner in which the Commission has administered the matter of allocation of frequencies to broadcasting stations; (4) the effect which the Commission's order transferring frequency modulation from its former position in the radio spectrum would have on the rural population of our States and whether there is not involved discrimination against the farmers of America in the matter of facilities for radio reception; (5) the matter of allocation of frequencies to that type of broadcasting known as frequency modulation, and the effect of the recent reallocation of frequencies to such type of broadcasting stations, and the reasons therefor, together with the matter of the effect of such reallocation on the public and the radio and broadcasting industries and also the effect thereof on the measure or extent of control generally of radio broadcasting by said Federal Communications Commission; and (6) the administration generally by the Federal Communications Commission of those provisions of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, which relate in any manner to radio communication. The committee shall report to the Senate, at the earliest practicable date, the results of its investigation, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-ninth and succeeding Congresses, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such records, transcripts, correspondence, books, papers, rules and regulations, orders, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of —— cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed ——— dollars, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

INVESTIGATION OF SENATORIAL CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES—INCREASE IN LIMIT OF EXPENDITURES

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 308), which was referred to the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the special committee authorized by Senate Resolution 224, Seventy-ninth Congress, to investigate senatorial campaign contributions and expenditures in the 1946 elections is authorized to expend from the contingent fund of the Senate $40,000 in addition to the amount heretofore authorized for the same purpose.

INVESTIGATION OF NATIONAL DEFENSE PROGRAM—INCREASE IN LIMIT OF EXPENDITURES

Mr. MEAD submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 309), which was referred to the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the limit of expenditures under Senate Resolution 71, Seventy-seventh Congress, first session, agreed to March 1, 1941; Senate Resolution 6, Seventy-eighth Congress, first session, agreed to January 25, 1943; and Senate Resolution 55, Seventy-ninth Congress, first session, agreed to January 29, 1945 (relating to the investigation of the national defense program) is hereby increased by $65,000.

AUTHORIZATION FOR SPECIAL COMMITTEE INVESTIGATING NATIONAL DEFENSE PROGRAM TO FILE ADDITIONAL REPORTS AFTER ADJOURNMENT

Mr. MEAD submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 310), which was ordered to lie on the table:

Resolved, That the Special Committee Investigating the National Defense Program be authorized to file additional reports with the Secretary of the Senate following the sine die adjournment of the Senate and that they be printed as parts of Senate Report No. 110.

AMENDMENT OF RAILROAD RETIREMENT ACTS, ETC.—AMENDMENT

Mr. HAWKES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 1362) to amend the railroad retirement acts, the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, and subchapter B of chapter 9 of the Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

PRINTING OF REPORT ON LEWISTON ORCHARDS PROJECT, IDAHO (S. DOC. NO. 247)

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I present a report on the Lewiston Orchards project, Idaho, by the regional director of the Bureau of Reclamation, region 1, concurred in by the Commissioner of Reclamation and the Acting Secretary of the Interior, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed as a Senate document, with illustrations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR WHEELER—ARTICLE BY GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY

[Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article on Senator WHEELER, by George E. Sokolsky, published in the Washington Times-Herald of July 24, 1946, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE ARMY AND PUBLIC OPINION—ADDRESS BY MAJ. GEN. FLOYD L. PARKS

[Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD and address on the subject, The Army and Public Opinion, delivered by Maj. Gen. Floyd L. Parks, United States Army, Chief of the Public Relations Division, War Department, at the State American Legion Convention at Greenville, S. C., July 22, 1946, which appears in the Appendix.]

TRADE WITH GREAT BRITAIN—ARTICLES FROM THE NEW YORK TIMES

[Mr. BREWSTER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD two articles from the New York Times of July 24, 1946, the first entitled "Britain To Relax Policy on Imports," the second entitled "Would Drop Order To Ship Tractors," which appear in the Appendix.]

[Mr. MAGNUSON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by Victor Riesel, dealing with the Ku Klux Klan, published in the July 22, 1946, issue of the New York Post, which appears in the Appendix.]

ASCERTAINMENT OF CAUSE AND CURE OF CANCER—STATEMENT BY REPRESENTATIVE MATTHEW M. NEELY

[Mr. PEPPER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a statement made by Representative NEELY, of West Virginia, on the bill authorizing expenditures by the Federal Government for the purpose of finding the cause and cure of cancer, which appears in the Appendix.]

RECOGNITION OF SERVICES OF CERTAIN CIVILIAN OFFICIALS AND EMPLOYEES ENGAGED IN CONSTRUCTION OF PANAMA CANAL

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3748) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the recognition of the services of the civilian officials and employees, citizens of the United States, engaged in and about the construction of the Panama Canal," approved May 29, 1944, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. STEWART, Mr. MAGNUSON, Mr. HAWKES, and Mr. BUSHFIELD conferees on the part of the Senate.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

TIDELAND PLUNDER—EDITORIAL FROM THE WASHINGTON POST

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a very strong editorial entitled "Tideland Plunder," which appeared in the Washington Post this morning. I commend it to the Members of the Senate.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TIDELAND PLUNDER

The Senate's concurrence in the joint resolution to renounce all Federal claim to the mineral resources of the tidelands amounts almost to a direct demand for a Presidential veto. The sponsors of this raid upon the national heritage could scarcely have supposed that any President of the United States would acquiesce in it. The question at issue here is not whether the rich oil deposits lying off the shores of this country belong to the separate States or to the Nation as a whole. That is a question for the courts to decide. The question here is simply whether the judiciary should be circumvented by legislative action. We think there is only one answer which the President can give.

The whole history of the tideland oil issue has been one of circumvention and evasion. When Harold L. Ickes as Secretary of the Interior instituted legal proceedings to determine if there is any valid Federal claim to this oil, the attorney general of California at once sought to evade a court test by having Congress renounce a title which he insists it does not possess. If he is right in his contention, and if the title of the States is indisputable, then he has nothing to fear from a verdict of the Supreme Court which now has the case before it, and the action taken by Congress would be altogether meaningless. But if there is validity to the Federal claim, then the action taken by Congress is irresponsible and profligate.

Under State control, the tidelands have been extensively leased for private exploitation. The most conspicuous of the private exploiters, Mr. Edwin W. Pauley, was recently denied confirmation as Under Secretary of the Navy on the ground that his private interests were in conflict with those of the Navy and the Nation. This was transparently the case. It is ironic, however, is it not, that the same Senate which so sanctimoniously blocked his appointment has now put its stamp of approval on the very piece of plunder he advocated? There is irony, too, perhaps, in the sudden return of Mr. Pauley to Washington from his reparations duties abroad at the precise moment when this slick legislative deal is being passed on to the President. There is now a splendid opportunity for him to exhibit the disinterestedness with which Mr. Truman has credited him.

By obfuscation and delay, the attorney general of California has managed to prevent a Supreme Court ruling on the tideland issue prior to the action by Congress. The Supreme Court should be heard, nevertheless. The President has it within his power, by a simple veto, to afford the Supreme Court an opportunity to speak. It was precisely for the purpose of checking irresponsible legislative acts of this character that the prerogative of the veto was conferred upon the President by the Constitution.

REPORT OF THE SENATE DELEGATION ON THE BERMUDA MEETING OF THE EMPIRE PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, last evening near the end of the session the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] made his report on the Bermuda meeting of the Empire Parliamentary Association. I intended to follow his remarks, but due to the confusion at the end of the session, I did not do so.

Mr. President, in view of the fine report on the Conference to the Senate by the chairman of our delegation, the distinguished and able Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], there is not much that I can say. We were very fortunate in having as our Chairman the Senator from Rhode Island. The dignity and wisdom of his remarks at the Conference and at the informal meetings in every respect upheld the finest traditions of the Senate of the United States.

The discussions at the Conference being informal, off-the-record meetings were much more informative and interesting than is usually the case. I feel that the delegates stated exactly what they had on their minds, and I came away from the Conference with a much better conception of the points of view of the other countries than I had when I arrived in Bermuda. It was very interesting to me to find how similar to our own are the problems, the trials, and tribulations of the legislators of other countries.

Within the past few days we have had reports from the recent Conference of Foreign Ministers at Paris. They met for the purpose of reaching definite agreements on urgent controversies now disrupting the orderly return to peace. At Bermuda we did not meet for the purpose of making decisions on anything. We met for an exchange of ideas, for the development of understanding among the representatives who in turn will undoubtedly carry that understanding back to their people. It is my belief that from such meetings as we had at Bermuda conditions may be developed which will make it possible for our foreign ministers to reach more progressive and enlightened decisions in the future.

Quite often the decisions of the diplomats are predetermined by conditions which have been developing over the course of many years. I believe that meetings such as the one at Bermuda will tend to create conditions favorable to the conclusion of rational agreements among the various nations concerned.

I think these meetings of elected representatives of the people can do a great deal to dissipate the silly and ridiculous prejudices which plague the world today and which contribute so greatly to the recurrence of war and strife and consequently to the misery and wretchedness of the people.

I realize that in matters of human relationships and government it is not easy to prove definitely and conclusively the causal connection between conferences and specific results, but I cannot help believing that regular meetings of the legislators of democratic countries will contribute to more effective cooperation among these peoples, and therefore to a strengthening of democracy and the preservation of peace.

I hope such conferences will be held annually from now on, and that the various Members of both the House and the Senate will be permitted to participate.

THE LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, before I begin a very brief statement concerning the conference report on the OPA legislation, I wish to state to the Senate that I think it desirable that beginning tonight we hold some night sessions, in order that we may clear our program, looking forward to a sine die adjournment next week. We have two or three matters which will consume some time, and I think it is the general feeling that there is no need for Congress to be in session any longer than next week, and I hope not longer than Wednesday or Thursday. Therefore I am sure Senators will be willing to remain at night a reasonable length of time in order that we may clear up the program, looking toward an adjournment.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, could the Senator give us any indication as to what will be the program for the remainder of today?

Mr. BARKLEY. For the remainder of today the program is to consider and dispose of the conference report on the OPA as soon as possible, and then proceed with the bill to amend the railroad retirement acts, which is the unfinished business.

Mr. WILEY. That means night work.

Mr. BARKLEY. Perhaps so. That is what I suggested, that we begin tonight to hold some night sessions in order to clean up our business.

THE MEDITERRANEAN FRUITFLY

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, our distinguished leader will recall that I addressed a letter to him, together with a partial report, on the Mediterranean fruitfly reimbursement bill. That question has been before the Senate for about 7 years, and we have spent a good deal of money making inquiries into the justice of the claims of the people of Florida arising out of that situation. The Department of Agriculture has gone into the subject thoroughly, and, although it seems comparatively very trivial, has determined on the basis of computing the amounts, on each class of fruit and vegetables what should be allowed in the way of damages.

A joint committee went to Florida in 1940, held several hearings and made a report, in which they recommended reimbursement for certain damages, which were caused by the Federal Government, and they gave their reasons why they thought the Federal Government should pay the claims.

Citizens of Florida, myself among others, and of owners in 25 other States, suffered damages to the extent of millions of dollars. The bill now on the calendar authorizes the appropriation of only $10,000,000, and I do not know how much of that would be required to settle the claims. Many of those who suffered losses have died or moved away in the meantime, and probably only the larger proportion of the $10,000,000 will be required.

The bill is S. 1250, Calendar No. 494. Inasmuch as I do not know whether the Senate will reconvene again before January next, after we adjourn in a few days, and inasmuch as I do not expect to be a Member of the Senate after January 1 next, I should like very much indeed to have the bill considered on its merits. In addition to the letter and report which I have recently sent to various Senators, I should like to give notice now that I wish to call up the bill either some day the latter part of this week or early next week. I want to be fair about the matter. I wanted Senators to know what was in the bill; therefore I submitted to all of them information respecting it. I should not ask for consideration of the bill on its merits if I did not feel that the bill represented justifiable claims.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the Senator's statement. He has written me a letter and also spoken to me in person about it. There are several odds and ends in the way of legislation that the Senate will no doubt want to consider on their merits before we conclude our work. So far as I am personally concerned, I certainly should have no objection to the bill referred to by the Senator from Florida being brought before the Senate at some convenient time before we finish, and let it be passed upon on its merits.

Mr. ANDREWS. I thank the distinguished leader. The reason I have made this statement, Mr. President, is that I did not want the bill to be brought up suddenly and Members of the Senate not know what it contained. I wanted to be sure that Members of the Senate would be advised about it. The older Senators, Senators with longer periods of service, know about the subject. Senators now have an up-to-date report on the subject. It happens that the chairman of the Claims Committee, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], who introduced the bill, is away in the Pacific, and I have been waiting for him to return. Let me state the reason why we have not brought up this claim during the past 5 years. The reason for delay was because the question always arose, "Will it help win the war?" We delayed bringing it up because we believed the war should be won first. We have waited now a year after the war is over, and I have waited the last few days for the Senator from Louisiana to return from the Pacific. I do not know whether he will return before we adjourn, but if he does not, I should like to call up this measure. I thought I should make that explanation.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks copy of a letter which I sent to Senators, and a statement by the Special Committee on Claims on the subject under discussion, for the further information of the Senate. I hope the Senators will read it.

There being no objection, the letter and statement were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JULY 10, 1946.

Re: S. 1250, Report 492, Mediterranean Fruitfly.

Hon. ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR BARKLEY: The attached statement is being called to your personal attention at this time for the reason that I plan to call up S. 1250 within the next few days and I wanted you to be informed on the facts involved. Attached also is copy of Senate Report 491 which sets forth all the essential facts upon which I recommend the payment of this long-delayed and just claim, and I will appreciate your using whatever spare time you may have in looking into this matter.

I am retiring from the Senate on January 3, 1947, and if we adjourn sine die during July or August, we may not meet again until I am no longer a Member of the Senate.

I am vitally interested. I made a pledge when I was elected to the Senate, to the people who were damaged, many of whom lost all they had, that I would do everything in my power to see that they were compensated and justly treated for the damage done them in the effort to save the whole Nation from what might have been a terrible catastrophe. I was a rather extensive fruit grower and was also at the time vice president and general counsel of the Florida Citrus Growers Association and personally experienced these damages first-hand. Thus my knowledge of these facts is neither hearsay nor guesswork.

Your assistance will be personally appreciated by me.

Most sincerely yours,

CHARLES O. ANDREWS.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR CHARLES O. ANDREWS ON S. 1250 WITH ACCOMPANYING SENATE REPORT NO. 491, WHICH IS A BILL TO REIMBURSE FLORIDA GROWERS FOR DAMAGES WHICH THEY SUFFERED IN THE CAMPAIGN FOR THE ERADICATION OF THE MEDITERRANEAN FRUITFLY

Senate bill 2020 was introduced in the Seventy-seventh Congress for the relief of certain claimants who suffered loss and sustained damages as a result of the campaign carried out by the Government for the eradication of the Mediterranean fruitfly in the State of Florida.

Before the Senate Claims Committee would pass on the matter, a joint resolution was adopted by the House and Senate in March and April, of 1940, authorizing and directing a special committee of the Senate and House to make a full and complete investigation with respect to the losses sustained by the campaign and quarantine conducted by the United States in 1929 and 1930 with a view to determining, among other things, the circumstances under which such losses occurred, the nature, character and amount of such losses and the persons by whom such losses were sustained; and that the committee should report to the Congress the result of its investigation, together with its recommendations if any, for necessary legislation. The special committee was composed of Senators Swartz, Ellender, and Wiley, on the part of the Senate, and Congressmen Ramspeck, Thomas, and Kennedy, on the part of the House.

The committee held hearings in Florida in several locations from December 4 to 7, 1940, taking the testimony of approximately 114 witnesses. After consideration of the facts and the extent of the methods pursued with consequent unnecessary damages to those engaged in the citrus and vegetable industries, the joint committee in its Report No. 491, Seventy-ninth Congress, found that obligation rested upon the Congress to compensate those who suffered losses under certain circumstances and among others for reasons set forth, as follows:

(a) That the Mediterranean fruitfly eradication campaign, carried out in Florida during 1929 and 1930, was a Federal Government undertaking, and that the Federal Government has accepted full and complete responsibility for everything that was done at its direction in carrying out the eradication program.

(b) That the Mediterranean fruitfly is not and never was indigenous to Florida, and that under the Constitution the Federal Government has exclusive jurisdiction of foreign commerce and inspections at all receiving ports and therefore the responsibility for the original infestation is theoretically Federal.

(c) That the unnecessary damage suffered by fruit and vegetable growers was due mainly to failure of the Federal Government to formulate a safe and effective plan of eradication and prevention, as in the case of other insect pests which have heretofore threatened crops in other parts of the United States.

(d) That some of the damage suffered was due to direct infestation but the greater portion of the damage was due to the drastic method and manner of eradication.

(e) That the records show that official statements were made to growers at the time the eradication program was being carried out that they would be entitled to compensation for the losses suffered.

The committee further finds:

1. That the agricultural program of the Federal Government and particularly the policies of the present administration furnish ample precedent for reimbursing the losses sustained as a result of the fruitfly-eradication program.

2. That the citizens of Florida suffered other losses much larger than the damages claimed which they have from the beginning expressed a willingness to absorb, but it is the opinion of the committee that morally, if not strictly legally, they are entitled to be compensated by the Federal Government for losses they sustained for the protection of the fruit and vegetable industry of the other States of the Union.

In addition, the price measure of damages for fruits, vegetables, and field crops were made through the Department of Agriculture (H. Doc. No. 290), transmitted May 10, 1939, to the Senate and House by the Secretary of Agriculture containing carefully tabulated report made by Dr. Ben Galloway, then connected with the United States Plant and Quarantine Commission. His report was made from the records of the Department of Agriculture, together with a personal examination of all other pertinent records available which would aid in securing definite data and figures on the price measure of damages for fruits, vegetables, and field crops destroyed.

Dr. Galloway's report shows the number of commercial crates and boxes of oranges and bushels of vegetables and other fruits destroyed, together with prevailing prices; also other losses caused by poison spray and other damages set out in Report No. 491, Calendar No. 494, which accompanies Senate bill 1250, reintroduced by Senator ELLENDER early in this session.

This matter has been postponed from 1940 to the present date because of war conditions. We were advised and so agreed that every dollar we could afford should be devoted to the winning of the war. The war is now over and although many of the original claimants, being elderly people, have passed on and many are living in other States of the Union, I feel that the matter should now be acted upon.

EXTENSION OF PRICE CONTROL—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 371) extending the effective period of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the conference report now before the Senate on the OPA extension does not call for any lengthy explanation, in my judgment, and I hope it will not elicit lengthy debate before it is finally acted upon.

I might say in a general way that the joint resolution which is before us, with two or three exceptions, is in substance the measure which Congress passed previously and which the President vetoed. The general pricing formula and the general provisions for decontrol of agricultural products on initiation of the Secretary of Agriculture, and also on his initiation with reference to the adjustment of prices of agricultural products, remain practically as they were in the original bill, and as it was in the bill which I submitted in the committee as a substitute for the House joint resolution extending the price-control law until the 20th day of July.

The provisions of the original bill setting up the Decontrol Board are retained, with some minor differences, practically as contained in the original bill and in the joint resolution which the Senate passed the other day. It will be recalled that the Board is created as a Decontrol Board; that industrial committees may make application to the Administrator for the decontrol of nonagricultural products, and they can go from him to the Decontrol Board. The Decontrol Board has the authority to direct the Administrator with respect thereto, and give him not to exceed 30 days in which to act, at the expiration of which time, if he does not act, the product involved in the application becomes automatically decontrolled. That is practically what was in the original bill. It is practically what was in the joint resolution we passed the other day, so far as the general powers of the Decontrol Board are concerned.

The two main problems before the conference committee involved the specific decontrols in the joint resolution, some of which were put in by the committee, some of which were added here on the floor, and the so-called Barkley substitute to the original Taft amendment involved in section 11 of the joint resolution which would set up a new section 6 of the Price Control Act.

I think I shall discuss the specific decontrols first. When the joint resolution was passed by the Senate and went to the House, and the House disagreed to the amendment of the Senate, and accepted our invitation to a conference, the conferees met, and the House conferees took the same position in this conference that they had taken in the previous conference, that they would not agree to specific decontrols. The Senate conferees felt it their duty, although some of them had not supported the specific decontrols either in committee or on the floor, to represent the Senate viewpoint as long as it was reasonably expected that they would, recognizing that one side or the other, or both sides, must make some concessions if we were to get any bill at all.

The House conferees voted a number of times in their capacity and separately as House conferees, with reference to decontrols, and at each session of the House conferees separately they declined to yield with respect to decontrols. So it became necessary to work out some basis on which the two Houses could get together.

The Senate had specifically decontrolled livestock, and food and feed products processed therefrom; poultry and eggs, and food and feed products processed therefrom; milk and dairy products, and food and feed products processed therefrom; grains as a whole that come under the Grain Stabilization Act, and in addition to that feed products produced from grain for livestock and poultry purposes. It did not specifically decontrol the products of grain for human food. So that the Senate rather split the situation in regard to grains. It decontrolled all grains coming under the Grain Stabilization Act, but did not go beyond that, except as to livestock and poultry feed processed from grain.

The Senate also decontrolled specifically petroleum, tobacco, cottonseed, and soybeans. I think that is the list of products which the Senate specifically decontrolled.

The conferees finally arrived at this sort of compromise, which I think is fair, in view of the fact that the OPA law and price control had lapsed during the period from the 30th of June, and in view of the fact that in these categories it was recognized that it was impossible overnight to slap on the ceilings with reference to some of these products, especially meats, and put them back under control.

The conferees divided these specially decontrolled items into two categories. They put grain, livestock, and meat, dairy products, cottonseed, and soybeans in one category, and provided that they could not be decontrolled prior to the 20th day of August 1946; and that the Decontrol Board was authorized and directed in the meantime to consider whether, at the expiration of that period, any or all of those five commodities should be recontrolled. The Board would have no power to recontrol them prior to August 20, although it is expected to go into the question immediately as to whether they should be recontrolled on that date.

I may say that August 20 was fixed because of the situation existing in the cattle industry. The conferees first considered a period of 30 days after the enactment of the law, but that might take the period beyond the time when feeders are beginning to assemble cattle in the feed lots for feeding purposes. That activity begins around the 10th of August, or the 15th. So there would be a period of uncertainty in which those who engage in the feeding of cattle for market, and who begin that process about the middle of August, would not know what to do until they knew what to expect. The 30-day period might extend beyond a reasonable date for that activity, so we agreed on the 20th of August as a suitable date. Assuming that the President will appoint the Decontrol Board promptly, which he has indicated that he would do, and that the Senate will promptly confirm the Decontrol Board, it would have from the day on which the bill was signed until the 20th of August to go into the question of whether these five commodities should be recontrolled on that date or whether they should be left free from control.

The conference measure provides that if the Decontrol Board takes no action by the 20th of August these items automatically go back under control; but they are subject later to be decontrolled under a formula and a category of requirements set out in the joint resolution and which I shall read later.

As to the other specifically decontrolled items, such as tobacco, petroleum, and poultry, they do not automatically go back under control until the 20th of August, nor at any other time unless they are affirmatively put back under control, under the same formula applicable to the other five commodities which I have just mentioned.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to ask a question with regard to the recontrol of dairy products. In permitting the Board to recommend reestablishment of maximum prices for milk on a regional basis, is it intended that that provision shall apply to the so-called marketing agreement areas, as well as areas where no marketing agreement is in effect?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the language of the joint resolution merely authorizes decision on a regional basis. The Board can consider the marketing agreements; or in regions where there is no marketing agreement I think the Board would have the authority to decide whether dairy products should come under control on a regional basis.

Mr. AIKEN. If price ceilings are reestablished for milk in specific marketing areas, does that mean that products derived from milk, produced in the particular area, would also automatically come under control?

Mr. BARKLEY. The Board would have discretion in that regard, and so would the Administrator. They are not required automatically to put everything made from milk under control if they put milk in any given region under control and fix ceiling prices.

Mr. AIKEN. I think the Senator's interpretation is correct, but I wished to make it clear.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is my idea about it.

The provision with respect to decontrol is subdivision (B) of paragraph (8), on page 4 of the conference report:

(B) The Price Decontrol Board shall proceed forthwith to consider whether the commodities listed in subparagraph (A) shall continue, after August 20, 1946, to be free from regulation under this act and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended. Such Board, after due notice of a public hearing and full opportunity for representatives of affected industries and consumers to present their views orally or in writing, shall have power to determine whether or not any commodity listed in subparagraph (A) shall be regulated after August 20, 1946, under this act and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended. Such Board shall direct that any such commodity shall not be so regulated unless it finds—

(i) that the price of such commodity has risen unreasonably above a price equal to the lawful maximum price in effect on June 30, 1946, plus the amount per unit of any subsidy payable with respect thereto as of June 29, 1946, and

(ii) that such commodity is in short supply and that its regulation is practicable and enforceable, and

(iii) that the public interest will be served by such regulation.

If, in the case of any commodity listed in subparagraph (A), such Board fails to direct, on or before August 20, 1946, that such commodity shall not be regulated under this act and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, maximum prices and regulations and orders under such acts shall be applicable with respect to such commodity without regard to this paragraph (8).

In other words, if the Board fails to act by the 20th, either to leave them out of control following the 20th, or to take them in on the 20th, they automatically go back under control for such period as would be determined, but they would be subject to decontrol thereafter, as other products are subject to decontrol.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I think the Senator should point out in connection with that statement, however, that under subparagraph (8) (B) the Price Decontrol Board is directed to proceed forthwith to consider whether those commodities shall be controlled or decontrolled, and shall have public hearings and shall determine whether they shall be decontrolled after August 20, which I think is a direction by Congress that the Decontrol Board shall give consideration and shall make determination one way or the other as to what is to be done on August 20.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. I have just read subparagraph (8) (B), which specifies that the Price Decontrol Board shall proceed forthwith to consider the situation in regard to the five commodities that are listed in subparagraph (A). The Board is to give affected industries and consumers an opportunity to be heard, and this subparagraph is a direction to the Board to proceed forthwith to consider these matters, in order that it may come to a conclusion not later than the 20th of August as to whether any of them or all of them shall remain under control or shall be taken out from under control. But if for any reason the Board fails to act either way, those commodities go back under control on that date.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. Do I correctly understand that in case the Price Decontrol Board fails to act, the several classes of commodities listed go back under price control, without reference to whether or not any of the conditions set out in subparagraphs (i), (ii), and (iii) of subdivision (8) (B) obtain? In other words, the Price Decontrol Board does not need to find that those conditions obtain, if it fails to find them. Is that correct?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator propound that question again, please? I was examining some of the provisions of the report, and I may not have correctly understood the import of his question.

Mr. CORDON. On the 21st day of August, if no action has been taken by the Price Decontrol Board, the five commodities mentioned by the Senator from Kentucky will go back under control, without any necessity for anyone's finding that the several conditions exist, namely, the conditions under which the Price Decontrol Board would act. Is that correct?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true.

Mr. CORDON. In other words, if the Board goes into this matter, in case the conference report becomes law, and if by the 20th day of August for any reason the Board has been unable to make up its mind, then on the 21st day of August all these commodities will be back under control, and will remain under control, unless under the succeeding subdivision (C) the Price Decontrol Board thereafter finds that these several conditions exist. Is that correct?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct. In other words, if the Board takes no action at all and makes no finding of any kind up until the 20th of August, all five commodities will automatically go back under control. As to the conditions to apply thereafter, subdivision (C) goes on to say that—

If in the case of any commodity listed in subparagraph (a)—

Which are these same ones—

such Board, on or before August 20, 1946, does direct that such commodity shall not be regulated under such acts, the Board may at any subsequent time direct that such commodity shall be so regulated if it finds:

(i) that the price of such commodity—

Practically the same three categories which I mentioned in regard to their finding prior to the 20th of August with respect to whether they should go back under control.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield first to the Senator from California.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I should like to ask the distinguished majority leader if it is his understanding in reference to the Board that the members of the Board will be appointed prior to the adjournment of Congress, so that the Senate will have an opportunity to act upon the nominations.

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, yes. I may say that I have conferred with the President about that; and if the conference report is signed and becomes law, he is as anxious as anyone that the Board shall be set up as promptly as possible and that that will be done before the Congress adjourns, so that the Senate will have an opportunity to pass upon the nominations.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. YOUNG. What would happen in the case of a contract for the delivery of grain? Frequently farmers contract with their local elevators, millers, and others to deliver grain at a future date, perhaps 30 days in the future, perhaps in September. Will those contracts be voided if controls are restored?

Mr. BARKLEY. I may say to the Senator that this morning I talked with the Price Administrator about that very problem, because it presents a serious situation. In the case of grain, I think, probably as much as, if not more than, in the case of any other commodity, elevators and other purchasers of grain were compelled, if they bought any grain at all, to pay the current price for grain, which was greater than the ceiling prices existing on the 30th day of June. The Administrator feels, and I think properly and wisely so, that in such a situation as that, efforts will have to be made to work out an adjustment of those matters that will not require elevators or other purchasers of grain who are legitimately in the market to suffer by reason of that transaction.

Of course, if the transaction had been completed, if the elevators had bought grain and had sold it during the interim, that would present no problem. But where they have bought grain at increased prices and where those commodities automatically go back under control on the 20th of August and the purchasers have on hand a large amount of grain for which they have paid during the interim more than the ceiling price, I have the very positive assurance and statement on the part of the Administrator that an effort will be made to work out and to adjust prices in such cases, so as to go as far as possible toward bailing out people who are caught in that situation. Of course, they naturally have until the 20th of August to dispose of such grain as they may have purchased under such circumstances, and I imagine they may do so in many cases.

Mr. YOUNG. I come from a State where most of the grain is marketed in September and October. There may be a rush now for farmers to contract for September and October delivery of their grain.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think I can say that the Administrator thoroughly understands that situation and is disposed to adjust the matter in order to be fair to everyone, under those conditions.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. Does not the Senator agree with me that when, as, and if the authorities of the OPA start to roll back and make the adjustments to which the Senator has been referring, the natural result and the expected result will be a number of severe headaches?

Mr. BARKLEY. There will be, obviously. Yet under the new pricing program and formula contained in the conference report, the administrator will be required to adjust prices in such a way as to take account of possible increases above the ceilings which existed on June 30, because the very formula itself would require the consideration of elements not theretofore necessarily considered.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. GURNEY. At the time when the Price Control Act was before the Senate on the previous occasion, I called to the attention of the Senator the fact that operators could not make delivery of grain which they had purchased from the farmers. As the Senator knows, in Kansas there is much grain on the ground. The same condition prevails in the States farther north, all because there are not sufficient railroad boxcars to move the grain. Therefore, an elevator man purchasing at the interim prices has not been able to make delivery to the terminal elevators. He has not been able, through no fault of his own, to make delivery and sale of grain; and he surely will not be able to deliver all of it by August 20. In fact, new grain is coming in every day. The farmers must get rid of it. They cannot pile it up on their farms. The elevators are compelled to take it and to spread it out on the ground, to await arrival of empty boxcars with which to make shipments to the terminal markets. Therefore, as I see the situation, unless some exact provision is made in the conference report in order to save the elevator men, they will be liable to have an extremely large loss.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator in that regard that we discussed before, and we discussed in the conference, the question of what constituted a completed contract. It was the consensus of opinion, and I think as a matter of law it would hold, that where the purchaser takes title to the grain, regardless of whether it has been delivered, it is a completed transaction within the meaning of the statute. In other words, if he purchases grain at a certain price per bushel and has paid for it, or has entered into a contract with the owner of the grain so that the purchaser takes title to it, it is just as much his grain out in the field as if it had been delivered to the elevator.

Mr. GURNEY. The Senator has given a different answer than he gave to me when I propounded a similar question about 2 weeks ago when the price-control matter was before the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not so sure.

Mr. GURNEY. At that time the Senator said that delivery must be made.

Mr. BARKLEY. I may have been under that impression at that time. It was a perfectly sincere answer, but it was a mistaken answer. If the title is taken by the purchaser, that fact controls the question of whether the transaction has been completed.

Mr. GURNEY. Let us assume, then, that the transaction is supposed to be completed. The flour mill has bought the grain and will receive it later when the boxcars are available. In what position does that place the millingman?

Mr. BARKLEY. While flour is still retained under control, regardless of what happens to grain, the Price Administrator will have to take into consideration, in fixing ceilings on flour and other products of grain, the conditions under which the grain was bought. If grain is decontrolled, flour will not necessarily go out from under control. But in determining the price of flour and in determining the ceiling to be placed on flour and flour products, the Price Administrator will, of course, be required to take into consideration the increased price of the grain which the miller had purchased, out of which he ground the flour.

Mr. GURNEY. The Senator says that the Price Administrator will, of course, be required to do that. Is he required to do it under the conference report? Will he do it?

Mr. BARKLEY. There is no specific requirement to that effect in the language of the conference report, but I believe, as a matter of equity, fair dealing, and good administration, he would be required to do it. I think that the Administrator would expect to do it.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, while we are on the subject of grain, I should like to have the majority leader clear up one other point.

As is well known, in certain parts of the country there was a grain famine during June. When controls were removed the commercial feed mixers found that they were able to obtain corn and other grains, but in the case of corn, in particular, they were required to pay much higher than the ceiling price in order to obtain the corn. I understand from what has been said here that if the feed mixers have taken title to the corn at a price, say, of $2 or $2.20 a bushel, even though it has not been delivered to their own feed-mixing establishments in the East, and if on August 20 the price of corn is rolled back, they would not be required to absorb the loss which might be incurred by paying the higher price for the grain, after the grain is received, and is put into the dairy and poultry feed which they will later sell.

Mr. BARKLEY. I believe that the same rule would apply where they have direct title to the grain, no matter where it is, that would apply if the grain had actually been delivered into the bin, elevator, or whatever the receptacle may be that is used for storing the grain.

Mr. AIKEN. Then, if they have already taken title to the grain they will not be required to take a loss on the grain by reason of prices being rolled back at a later date. It would amount to some $8 to $10 a ton in the case of dairy feed. They bought the grain while they could get it. Now they are apprehensive lest they will be required to take a loss on it.

Mr. BARKLEY. The price of mixed feeds is now fixed on a cost-plus basis. So under that situation they would not be required to absorb the cost.

Mr. AIKEN. It is apparent, then, that the committee believes those persons are protected from being required to sustain an abnormal loss on this commodity.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator be kind enough to explain his interpretation of the concluding sentence of paragraph 8 (B) on page 5 of the conference report? The sentence there reads:

> If in the case of any commodity listed in subparagraph (A) such Board fails to direct, on or before August 20, 1946, that such commodity shall not be regulated under this act and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, maximum prices and regulations and orders under such acts shall be applicable with respect to such commodity without regard to this paragraph (8).

Mr. BARKLEY. From what page is the Senator reading?

Mr. DONNELL. From page 5, beginning at about line 14.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is the Senator reading the paragraph which provides as follows:

> If in the case of any commodity listed in subparagraph (A) such Board fails to direct, on or before August 20, 1946, that such commodity shall not be regulated under this act and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, maximum prices and regulations and orders under such acts shall be applicable with respect to such commodity without regard to this paragraph (8)?

Mr. DONNELL. Yes; that is the language to which I have reference.

Mr. BARKLEY. What is the Senator's question?

Mr. DONNELL. My inquiry relates particularly to the last two lines of the paragraph which has just been read.

Suppose that the Decontrol Board waits until the 20th day of August to make its determination and then fails to direct that some commodity embraced under this paragraph shall not be regulated. I understand that maximum prices and regulations and orders, under this act and under the Stabilization Act of 1942, shall then be applicable. Suppose that up until and including August 20, 1946, the Office of Price Administration shall not have taken any action toward revising the maximum prices of a given commodity, so that on the morning of August 21 no action has been taken by the Office of Price Administration with respect to the price of that commodity; does this language, in the opinion of the Senator from Kentucky, mean that the price of that commodity would be the price prevailing on June 30, 1946, or would it be necessary to wait until the Office of Price Administration had thereafter fixed a new maximum price in order to determine what maximum price shall be applicable with respect to the said commodity?

Mr. BARKLEY. In that case my opinion is that the price would be the price which prevailed on June 30. The conference report provides that maximum prices and regulations and orders in effect on that date shall be regarded as being in effect thereafter. Of course, I may say to the Senator that what this language does is to put these commodities back under control. If there is any failure to act on the part of the Board those commodities go back under control under the same standards as those pertaining to other commodities, just as if the paragraph was not in the bill.

It may be that some institutions or persons may be caught for a brief period of time by reason of the fact that prices go back to those of June 30. But in the interim it is provided that the Price Administrator shall not institute or maintain maximum prices except under the standards of this act, and the Office of Price Administration would be compelled to reconsider the price structure of any such commodity so as to work it out under the more liberal standards which are contained in the bill, although for a brief period of time it might be possible that some prices would go back to where they were on June 30.

Mr. DONNELL. As I understand, then, if there has been no fixation of a price by the Office of Price Administration after the conference report goes into effect, and up to and including August 20, it is the opinion of the Senator that the price which prevailed under the orders in effect on June 30, 1946, would still prevail.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the paragraph which the Senator has read pertains to the commodities referred to in paragraph (8). The Office of Price Administration is out of that picture until after the 20th of August, because the Decontrol Board moves in to consider whether any of them shall go back under control or shall be allowed to remain free of control. So there is nothing the Price Administrator can do between the enactment of this legislation and the 20th of August; and there would not be anything the Price Administrator could do after that if the Decontrol Board decided that any or all of the commodities set out in paragraph (A) should remain out from under control. In that event the Price Administrator would have no function to perform.

Mr. DONNELL. Might there not, then, in some cases be an interim at any rate after August 20 during which the prices which prevailed on June 30 as to any given commodity might not accord with the standards set up in this bill, and would it not be impossible for the price of such commodity to be made to accord with the standards of this bill until the Board or the Office of Price Administration had adequate time to investigate and determine?

Mr. BARKLEY. In a case where one of these commodities went back under control automatically as of August 21, we will say, it is possible that for a brief interval, until the Price Administrator could work out a new price for the commodity, there might be a brief hiatus during which the price prevailing on June 30 would have to be enforced.

Mr. DONNELL. I thank the Senator.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. I merely want to say on the subject that has been raised as to elevators and also processors there are certain provisions of the bill which protect them. In other words, even under the abbreviated Wherry amendment, they are entitled to cost plus a reasonable margin. The bill now provides:

> In establishing maximum prices applicable to wholesale or retail distributors, the Administrator shall allow the average current cost of acquisition of any commodity.

People who bought in this interval bought legally and whatever they paid in this interval, it seems to me, is clearly cost. So, I believe the provisions of the act require both in the case of distributors and processors that that cost be recognized as an actual cost and that they shall be allowed a margin on that cost in the disposition of those goods in such a way as to return them a reasonable profit and the prewar mark-up.

So, while it is true, as the Senator says, that these rules are automatically effective when recontrol is established, there certainly is a direction to the Price Administrator to change them immediately and to recognize the increased costs that have occurred by reason of paying more during the interval.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think that is generally true. I do not think it would go to the extent of requiring the Administrator to add increases in labor costs not approved by the Wage Stabilization Board, or to include black-market prices paid indiscriminately for products during the interim or at any other time.

Mr. TAFT. There were no black-market prices during the interval because there was no law.

Mr. BARKLEY. What I mean is I do not think there is anything in this bill to require the Administrator to add in all costs to the price which he must take into account, such as unauthorized increases in wages, not approved by the Wage Stabilization Board, or black-market prices or what is equivalent to black-market prices, since there was no such thing as black-market prices during the interval because no ceilings were fixed.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DONNELL. I desire to ask a further question. Is it not possible that considerable confusion might arise in this interim? If, for example, the price of a given commodity were, we will say, $5 as of June 30, and in the meantime, between then and August 20, the cost of that article had gone up, so that its actual cost was $5.50, and yet there had been no order made by the Office of Price Administration in the interim in accordance with the standards set forth in this act, Would it not be true that a reversion must be had to the price as of June 30? Would there not be very great confusion in the mind of the person who had such a commodity as to what price he could charge, namely, that of June 30 or that which would be defined subsequently?

Mr. BARKLEY. Undoubtedly there would be a few days in which there would be some confusion but the conferees of the two Houses had to determine whether to revert back to June 30 in the orders and regulations as to prices or to equalize the prices prevailing now, which have increased in many cases 50 percent. The conferees felt—and I think the two Houses of Congress felt—that we could not justify undertaking to freeze present prices, which have gone up in many cases since the 30th of June, and that the fairest and best thing to do, recognizing that there would be some confusion for a period, was to make the law effective as of June 30, just as if it had been enacted on that date. We thought less injustice would result by adopting that course than by undertaking to legalize the prices prevailing on the day when this law becomes effective.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a brief observation?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. In making this observation I am not at all critical but am simply seeking information.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand.

Mr. DONNELL. The thought in my mind at this moment is whether or not there is any assurance that the interim between August 20 and the time when the Office of Price Administration can fix new maximum prices will be brief or whether, if great numbers of commodities will be embodied and embraced within these categories, a very considerable period may be necessary before the Office of Price Administration can accommodate itself to the changes made by the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the number of applications or of such situations would necessarily have some effect on the promptness with which the Administrator could adjust them, but I think I may say with assurance, after conferring with the Administrator about this very problem, that he fully appreciates it and realizes that there is bound to be a brief period—as brief as it can be made—after the enactment of this bill in which adjustments must be made. It is his purpose to facilitate and expedite the consideration of all those questions as promptly as possible so that whatever confusion may arise will be as brief as possible. It is impossible to say on what day or how many days after the enactment of this legislation that can be done. If we could say that the bill would be signed tomorrow, tomorrow being the 25th of July, it would be impossible to say whether by the 30th of July or any other day these problems could be considered by the Administrator and adjusted; but I think the Administrator thoroughly understands the difficulties growing out of this hiatus between the 30th of June and the effective date of the enactment of the law, and he will, to the fullest extent possible, facilitate the consideration and the termination of those matters, so as to work as little injustice as possible.

Mr. DONNELL. I appreciate the very courteous and helpful response of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CORDON. I am somewhat concerned with reference to a reconciliation of the provisions of the conference report, appearing on page 3, subsection (e), entitled "Agricultural commodities." This subsection provides authority to the Secretary of Agriculture within 30 days to certify prices to the Administrator agricultural commodities which are in short supply. Succeeding provisions provide for decontrolling unless the commodities are certified to be in short supply.

Referring to those provisions, and then to the provisions beginning on page 4 which refer to the five commodities which were decontrolled, and with reference to which there is provision for continuing decontrol to the 20th day of August, and for action in the interim by the Decontrol Board, or for the application of price control on the articles on the 20th of August, with reference to those five agricultural commodities after the 20th day of August, what authority does the Secretary of Agriculture have, under the report, to certify them in short supply, and if he does so certify them, in what position is the Decontrol Board with reference to such certification under the provisions which seem to give it exclusive control of those commodities?

Mr. BARKLEY. I would say to the Senator that in my judgment no matter what the Decontrol Board does up to the 20th of August, these commodities thereafter are subject to the certification of the Secretary of Agriculture, just as they are under the general provisions of the agricultural sections of the bill. In other words, if the Decontrol Board should decide by August 20 that these items should return under control, and they do return under control, or if the Board does nothing and they go back under control, they are subject to certification later by the Secretary of Agriculture under this provision, as if the Board had taken no action at all.

Mr. CORDON. Then would they not be subject to certification by two different authorities, the Secretary of Agriculture on the one hand and the Decontrol Board under paragraph (C) on the other?

Mr. BARKLEY. No. In case the certification is made by the Secretary of Agriculture to the Administrator that they are not in short supply, then it is the duty of the Administrator, under the provision, to decontrol them. If he does not do so, then, of course, the matter can be taken to the Decontrol Board. It is the same Decontrol Board which may or may not have decided on the 20th of August to return them to control. That is my interpretation of the provision, that these five commodities are not taken out of the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture after the 20th of August to certify to the Administrator that they are not in short supply, in which event it is his duty to decontrol them.

Mr. CORDON. The reason which prompted my inquiry was the fact that poultry and tobacco, two products which the Senator discussed as being in a different category with reference to decontrol——

Mr. BARKLEY. They are in a different category in this respect, that they do not go back under control unless ordered.

Mr. CORDON. And that is up to the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is up to the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I am sorry to say that I differ with the Senator's interpretation as to the conflicting powers of the Secretary of Agriculture and the Price Decontrol Board. My understanding is that, so far as these special products, both kinds, are concerned, they are absolutely placed under the jurisdiction of the Price Decontrol Board until the Price Decontrol Board determines that they shall be regulated again, or until, in the case of some commodities, they return to regulation on August 20. So long as they remain decontrolled, I do not think the Secretary of Agriculture has any power whatever to recontrol them. However, if the Decontrol Board returns them to control, then I think the ordinary operation of the act becomes effective, and the Secretary of Agriculture may at a later date certify that they are not in short supply, and thereby decontrol them. But I do not think there is any machinery in the act for recontrol of any of these commodities except that stated in paragraph (8).

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to state that my answer to the Senator's question was based on the assumption that these articles had been placed under control, had been recontrolled.

Mr. CORDON. If they once have been recontrolled——

Mr. BARKLEY. Then they come under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture. So long as they are out of control, of course, there is no occasion for him to take jurisdiction, unless he should certify, under the general provisions of the act, that they are in short supply.

I was assuming that the Senator from Oregon had in mind the fact that all these 8 articles, the 5 in one category and the 3 in another, had come under recontrol, in which event the Secretary of Agriculture would have the same right to certify to the Administrator with reference to their short supply that he would regarding other agricultural products.

Mr. TAFT. I was speaking of meat and other items. The Senator is more interested, perhaps, in poultry and eggs, and I agree that under paragraph (7) on page 4—

> No maximum price and no regulation or order under this act or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, shall be applicable with respect to poultry or eggs or food or feed products processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part therefrom, or in the case of leaf tobacco or tobacco products processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part therefrom, except that, after August 20, 1946, maximum prices with respect thereto may be reestablished pursuant to the provisions of paragraph (3) of this subsection (e), but only under the standards prescribed in paragraph (8) (C) of this subsection (e).

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct.

Mr. CORDON. Then, if I have the correct understanding of the legal effect of these provisions with reference to poultry and eggs and products manufactured therefrom, and leaf tobacco and products manufactured therefrom, there will be no control until the Secretary of Agriculture affirmatively finds—

> (i) That the price of such commodity has risen unreasonably above a price equal to the lawful maximum price in effect on June 30, 1946, plus the amount per unit of any subsidy payable with respect thereto as of June 29, 1946; and
> (ii) that such commodity is in short supply and that its regulation is practicable and enforceable; and
> (iii) that the public interest will be served by such regulation.

In other words, those findings must be made by the Secretary of Agriculture with reference to these two major products and these two only?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true, these two, speaking of tobacco and poultry. The Secretary of Agriculture would have to be governed, as to those, by the formula set out in provisions (i), (ii), and (iii), which the Senator has just read. I might say also that the finding has to be concurred in by the Board itself.

Mr. CORDON. The next question, then, is with reference to livestock, cottonseed, soybeans, and so forth, the products mentioned in paragraph (8) (A). Is it the Senator's view that the direct intervention of the decontrol board into this price picture, authorized and directed to be made on or before the 20th day of August, under which, let us assume, prices are again authorized to be fixed, is not exclusive authority after that date, and that thereafter the general provisions of subparagraph (e) being the provision fixing authority in the Secretary of Agriculture, will attach to not only these agricultural products, but all agricultural products, and they will remain under control or without control, depending upon the finding of the Secretary of Agriculture that they are or are not in short supply?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is my interpretation of those provisions.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCMAHON in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. YOUNG. I am not quite clear on the matter of the validity of the grain contracts. Would a contract for grain be valid if made after the date of the going into effect of the proposed law, or would it be valid until August 20, whether delivery was made or not?

Mr. BARKLEY. A contract under which title has been taken and ownership has been transferred would be valid either before or after August 20. I mean that if title had been taken by a purchaser there is in my judgment no time limit as to the existence of that title.

Mr. YOUNG. That contract would be valid until August 20?

Mr. BARKLEY. If it is a contract in which the title has passed, it would not only be valid up to the 20th of August, but it would be valid after the 20th of August.

Mr. TAFT. If title has passed before the 20th of August.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; if title has passed before the 20th of August.

Mr. YOUNG. I imagine that with respect to at least half the grain contracts delivery is not made until 30 days afterward.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think the date of delivery has anything to do with the legality of title. If purchasers have bought the grain and have taken title to it, it is their grain, although it is still in the granary of the farmer who produces it, or is in the possession of someone else.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. I find it necessary to come back again to this question. I cannot get my thinking clarified.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator from Oregon cannot get his clarified, I wonder what he thinks is going to happen to mine?

Mr. CORDON. Assuming, Mr. President, that the Decontrol Board does not act until the 20th day of August, and livestock, grain, and so forth, should come again under price control, then assuming that 30 days elapsed thereafter with no other action excepting that the prices are fixed, and the OPA goes forward with its controlling of prices, what happens with reference to the sentence which I am now reading from subsection (e), paragraph (1), about the middle of page 3:

> No maximum price shall be applicable with respect to any agricultural commodity during any calendar month which begins more than 30 days after the date of enactment of this section, unless such commodity is certified to the Price Administrator—

I interpolate "by the Secretary of Agriculture"—

> under this paragraph as being in short supply.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think this sentence would apply. This would be the law by which the Secretary of Agriculture would be governed.

Mr. CORDON. Then it would operate substantially in this way: If the Decontrol Board does not function before the 20th of August, and these commodities go back under price control, they remain under price control for 30 days, and no longer, unless the Secretary of Agriculture certifies they are in short supply.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. It might be longer than 30 days. It might be 10 days beyond the 1st of September.

Mr. CORDON. Yes; I understand.

Mr. BARKLEY. But this provision would apply, that at the end of the 30 days beginning on the first of the month following the enactment of this legislation, if the secretary should certify that these commodities are no longer in short supply, they would be released from control, and at another date subsequent to that 30-day period, if the Secretary certified, they would be released, although they came back under control automatically on the 20th of August.

Mr. CORDON. I suggest that I do not envy the Secretary.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. It would appear that the processor and distributor and manufacturer and wholesaler and retailer are in some way protected under the measure by having their margins and mark-ups protected. I am asking if there is any such protection for the livestock producer, the milk producer, the farmer? Is he part of an industry, or is his cost guaranteed?

Mr. BARKLEY. There are two cost formulas in the joint resolution, and they have not been changed materially except by the addition of the words "plus a reasonable profit" in subsection (f) of the so-called Barkley substitute for the previous Taft amendment. We put in the words "producer, manufacturer, and processor," so as to include the farmers, the producers of whatever they produce. Originally the measure did not carry the word "producer." It carried the words "manufacturer and processor." We added "producer" in order to be sure to cover the situation which the Senator from Wisconsin has in mind.

Mr. WILEY. Then it is clear in the mind of the Senator that the livestock producer, the milk producer, the farmer, is covered so that he is more or less guaranteed his cost?

Mr. BARKLEY. He is put on the same basis and under the same formula as manufacturers and processors.

Mr. WILEY. There is one other question, and that relates to rent. I understand the general proposition is that the OPA rent control authority continues unchanged.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. WILEY. Since this measure may become law, it might be well to obtain the Senator's own idea as to the power to do equity, as the law provides, in case of rents. Putting it concretely, in communities such as Washington, when OPA began to operate rents were relatively high. In other communities rents were very low because they had not felt the impact of war. I think it is important that the people generally should know, and especially that the OPA officials should realize their obligation, if this measure should become law, as to what they should do by way of seeking to do equity in the low-rent areas; what the function of the Administrator is in such cases.

Mr. BARKLEY. The rent control law is not changed. There is no formula in this measure for rent, like there is for producers, manufacturers and processors. Of course, in cases where rents have been raised since the 30th of June and the increased rent has been paid, I take it for granted that the Rent Administrator cannot compel a refund of that money, because it was a legal transaction, especially if agreed to and the increased rent was paid by the lessee. But in the District of Columbia of course rents are not controlled under the OPA. For the District of Columbia there is a special law, and rent control has continued without any hiatus at all. But in the other areas which are described as defense areas, where provision is made for rent control, rents revert to the rates of the 30th of June. The Administrator of course has the same power, in view of what has taken place, to consider whether increases should be allowed from now on, whether there has been an increase in rent, or whether there has not been an increase in rent, and in determining that question he has of course the perfect right, if not the duty, to consider any increased cost in the operation of the apartment house, if it happens to be an apartment house, or whatever increases in outlay have been necessary. He has a right to consider such factors, and no doubt would consider them on any application for an increase in rent in any given community where the law operates, but it does not operate in the District of Columbia.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TAYLOR in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. The Senate amendment which provided that "whenever a State has established or establishes provisions for control and regulation of the rent of housing accommodations," and so forth, does not appear in the conference report.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; the conferees eliminated that, because it was the general feeling that even in States which had temporarily undertaken to take over during the hiatus, on the theory that a Federal law might not be enacted, it was the feeling and information of the conferees that the States and communities really preferred the National Government to handle this matter from now on during the remainder of the year, until the time of the expiration of the law. At any rate, only four States had acted to undertake to control rents within their boundaries. Under all the circumstances the conferees felt that it was better for the next year to pursue the course we had pursued during rent control, and allow it to be exclusively a Federal function. Therefore it was eliminated from the bill.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. What happened to petroleum under the conference report?

Mr. BARKLEY. Petroleum is in the same category as tobacco and poultry.

Mr. CORDON. It is not mentioned in that paragraph.

Mr. BARKLEY. No. Petroleum was mentioned in another paragraph, and we left it there—like Niobe, in all her solitude. Was not Niobe the mythological character who stood alone?

Mr. CORDON. I think perhaps she had something to do with crying; and I suspect there will be a great deal of that before we are through.

Mr. BARKLEY. At any rate, petroleum occupied a special paragraph in the bill, and we left it in its special situation, but fixed for it the same standard and the same requirement with regard to recontrol which applied to tobacco and poultry.

Mr. CORDON. What was done with reference to price control of raw cotton?

Mr. BARKLEY. There has never been any ceiling on raw cotton, and under one of the paragraphs of the bill which previously passed the Senate, and which was in the bill which the President vetoed, and is now in this joint resolution, there can be no ceiling put on raw cotton, because that paragraph provided that no regulation, order, or anything else that had not been in effect prior to April 1, 1946, could have any application with reference thereto. So raw cotton is still king.

Mr. CORDON. What about wool?

Mr. BARKLEY. If there has been a price ceiling on wool it will, of course, come under the same provisions as other commodities. If there has been no price ceiling on wool it will come within the terms of the same paragraph to which reference has been made.

Mr. CORDON. I merely wondered if any special action was taken.

Mr. BARKLEY. I should like to say a brief word with reference to the much-disputed and controversial Taft-Barkley-Taft amendment.

Mr. WILEY. Which comes first?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the name "TAFT" comes first. I was rather squeezed in the middle.

The provision in the joint resolution which is now before the Senate is precisely the same as the bill passed by the Senate, with the exception that in subdivision (f) on page 13 the words "reasonable profit" were added. The provision reads as follows:

> If the maximum prices of a product on the average equal its average current total cost—

The conference added "plus a reasonable profit"— > nothing herein shall require any further adjustment of such maximum prices for any period with respect to which it appears that a substantial expansion in the production or use of the product would not be practicable or would be practicable only by reducing the production of at least equally needed products.

That is the language as it was in the joint resolution when it passed the Senate, with the exception of the addition of the four words "plus a reasonable profit." The conferees felt that under the circumstances that was not out of harmony with other provisions of the joint resolution and of the law which expired on June 30, when the Administrator was required to consider increases and decreases in cost, profits, and other factors. We have never eliminated from the joint resolution consideration of profits, so we felt that it was not inconsistent with the general provisions of the joint resolution to add those four words in the formula. Otherwise the provision is just as it was when it passed the Senate.

After we had finished our work in the conference on Saturday night I was asked by representatives of the press whether this was a better or worse measure than the one which the President vetoed. I said I did not know. That was a perfectly honest answer. We had been in session for 8 or 10 hours, and I was in no mood to try to assess the advantages or disadvantages as between this measure and the bill which the President vetoed. However, on the whole, I believe that this is a better measure than the bill which the President vetoed. In the bill which the President vetoed no decontrol of anything was stipulated by Congress, and therefore he was under no obligation to discuss the question of decontrol. It was not in the bill. He did not have to pass upon it. He did not discuss it, and he did not pass upon it. To the extent that there are decontrols in the joint resolution, or were decontrols in it when it was passed by the Senate, I should say that from the standpoint of the President and the Price Administrator, that is a disadvantage and a defect as compared to the bill which the President vetoed. But inasmuch as the law expired, and inasmuch as there has now been a period of nearly 4 weeks during which there has been no law at all, and inasmuch as the Senate added eight specific items of decontrol, it was necessary for the conferees to recognize the situation and to deal with it in a practical and realistic way. I think we have done so by providing a period up to the 20th of August, which gives time to the Decontrol Board to give consideration to all the items and elements involved. I felt that that provision was necessary because price controls could not be slapped back on overnight with respect to things which had been specifically decontrolled. This provision is better than the outright decontrol of specific items by the Congress, without any right to recapture control unless later there should be some provision under the existing law or the general provisions for recapture which might make it possible. So I believe that so far as the decontrolled items are concerned, the joint resolution is better than it was when it left the Senate. That is one category.

On the question of the price formula involved in the dispute as between section 11 of the bill which the President vetoed and the joint resolution as it now stands, I think there is a distinct advantage in the present joint resolution over the bill which the President vetoed 3 or 4 weeks ago.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. It may be that the Senator has already answered the question. If so, I apologize. I was not able to be present to hear the beginning of the Senator's remarks.

In considering paragraph 8 (B) on pages 4 and 5 of the conference committee report, was it the intention of the committee that the Price Decontrol Board could force certain commodities back under price control simply by failure to act? Or was it the intention that the Board should be required to make a definite finding or determination before milk, for example, could be recontrolled? To put it another way, would those who would be affected by failure of the Board to act be given an opportunity to present their case before August 20?

Mr. BARKLEY. With respect to the five items which automatically go back under control on August 20 or 21 in the event the Board fails to do anything, the committee felt that the Board was given a direction to give priority to the consideration of those matters, because the Board is directed promptly to consider whether, on the 20th of August, those commodities shall go back under control. The Board is ordered to hold a public hearing to give interested parties, both producers and consumers, an opportunity to be heard. We recognized that it might possibly turn out that there would be such a demand or request for hearings on the part of both sides that in some cases the Board might not be able to make a finding by August 20. That provision was not inserted for the purpose of encouraging the Board to do nothing. But the situation was that if, for good and sufficient reasons, the Board should not take action by August 20, we had to decide whether those commodities should go back under control or should be decontrolled until recaptured by some other conditions. So we had to take one of two alternatives. The conference committee felt that, even with all the diligence which the Board might exercise in arriving at a decision and making a finding, after giving the interested parties an opportunity to be heard, it might not be able to reach its decision or make its findings by that time, and in that case the commodities would go back under control.

Mr. MORSE. I think I understand the Senator's explanation, but I should like to restate it in my own words, if I may, in order to make sure that I correctly understand.

Mr. BARKLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MORSE. It is my understanding that in case the Price Decontrol Board does not decide or is unable to decide by August 20 that dairy commodities shall not be regulated under the Price Control Act, such commodities will automatically come under control on August 20 I further understand that it is the intention of the committee that if that should be the situation on August 20, the Price Decontrol Board shall proceed as soon as possible thereafter to hold hearings as to those commodities.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Board is required to do that before August 20. All these items are held in suspense and are held out from under price control until August 20. In the meantime the Board is charged with the duty of giving priority of consideration to those matters and to hold hearings, if they are requested, and to reach a finding, and by August 20 to determine whether any of these items shall come back under control or whether any or all of them shall remain out from under control.

Mr. MORSE. Then, it is the intention that the parties affected by the decontrol of such items on August 20 shall have a right and an opportunity to be heard before August 20?

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, yes; that is true.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I wish to ask a question in this connection. Rather large subsidies have been paid for the production of milk, during recent years. Of course, the subsidies were to have been increased on July 1, but actually they simply went out of existence, instead.

However, on July 5, the Department of Agriculture issued a release in which Secretary Anderson asked all the dairymen to hold the line and not increase their prices. He stated that he would urge the Congress to provide funds to cover dairy production subsidy payments during the period when milk producers held the line pending settlement of the price control and subsidy issues.

Dairymen in some parts of the country did not hold the line more than 2 days. Dairymen in other parts of the country held the line for 10 days, before they increased the price of milk. In large sections of the country, strange as it may seem, the dairymen are still holding the line and are still receiving for their milk the same price which they received on June 30. Is there any provision at all in the conference report that if the subsidies are restored, those who held the line in accordance with the request of the Department will not be severely penalized for doing so?

Mr. BARKLEY. I may say that the conference report contains provision for payment of the same amount of subsidies—namely, a billion dollars' worth—and it requires that the subsidies shall end by the 1st of next April, just as was required before. The Secretary will have authority to retain the subsidies until April 1. He is not required to do it, but he has authority to do it.

Mr. AIKEN. On page 9, paragraph (4) of subsection (a) of section 6 provides in part that—

Operations shall not be carried out under authority of this subparagraph (4) with respect to any commodity for any period occurring after the date of the enactment of this act during which maximum prices on such commodity are not in effect under the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended.

It would seem that that is a directive for him not to pay the subsidies between the time of the adoption of this conference report and August 20, when they might be restored again. This was in the non-crop-subsidy program. But I believe some of the subsidies on cheese and butter have been paid out of the noncrop subsidies.

Mr. BARKLEY. That applies to the situation after the enactment of this joint resolution. They have the right to go back to June 30 and to pay those subsidies in any case in which a milk producer has not increased the price of his milk, under the advice of the Secretary of Agriculture or the request of the Secretary of Agriculture or if for any other reason he has not done so. In other words, it is optional with the Secretary whether those subsidies shall be paid retroactively. He has the power to do that.

Mr. AIKEN. Is the Senator sure about the situation?

Mr. BARKLEY. The subsidy appropriation in the amount authorized is sufficient to enable him to do it.

Mr. AIKEN. But I wish to be sure that this is not a directive for him not to pay subsidies on cheese, let us say, between the date of the enactment of this measure and August 20.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is the Senator from Vermont referring to cheese alone?

Mr. AIKEN. I refer to any commodity.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I do not think he could, in that case, pay subsidies as between June 30 and the date of the enactment of this measure.

Mr. AIKEN. I did not mean that.

Mr. BARKLEY. Perhaps I did not understand the Senator's question.

Mr. AIKEN. I mean that paragraph (4), with respect to the noncrop subsidy program, states that—

Operations shall not be carried out under authority of this subparagraph (4) with respect to any commodity for any period occurring after the date of the enactment of this act—

Which may be tomorrow—

during which maximum prices on such commodity are not in effect under the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended.

Mr. BARKLEY. According to my judgment, that provision means that after this measure is enacted, subsidies shall not be paid upon any of these commodities upon which maximum prices are not in effect from now on.

Mr. AIKEN. That would mean that the man who has held the line up to now will be penalized for the next 3 weeks if he continues to hold the line.

Mr. BARKLEY. If there is no price on his product, it is one of those little hiatuses where someone will be burnt. There is no way to avoid that. Because of the fact that there has been a hiatus, it is simply impossible to write any law which will take care of every human being who gets caught during that period.

Mr. AIKEN. But the Senator from Kentucky does feel, does he not, that in regard to the milk subsidies, at least, the subsidy payments could be retroactive until June 30?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I feel sure that the Secretary can have authority to do that, although he is not required to do so.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I appreciate the fact that the Senator from Kentucky has been on his feet a considerable length of time, and I shall make the question I have as brief as possible.

I call the Senator's attention to subsection (f) of section 6 on page 13 of the conference report, which, in turn, is a new section incorporated under section 11 of the conference report. As I understand the Senator's explanation, subsection (f), to which I have referred, is the same as the one which was in the previous bill, except that the words "plus a reasonable profit" have been added. Is that correct?

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator means the previous bill, the bill which the President vetoed, the answer would be "No." This is the same provision as the one which was in the bill passed by the Senate the other day.

Mr. DONNELL. That is what I should have said.

Mr. BARKLEY. With the exception of the addition of the words "plus a reasonable profit."

Mr. DONNELL. I am not quite clear as to the purpose of the inclusion of those words. Under the bill which was recently passed by the Senate, there appeared the following language:

If the maximum prices of a product on the average equal its average current total costs, nothing herein shall require the adjustment of such maximum prices for such period, if any, as it appears that a substantial expansion in the production or use of the product would not be practicable or would be practicable only by reducing the production of at least equally needed products.

In other words, that provision, as I understand, was designed to cover the situation in which the prices reached a point equivalent to total costs and in the particular situation described in that subsection there was no obligation to raise the price. As the language now reads, it provides that if the maximum price equals its average current total cost plus a reasonable profit, nothing herein shall require a further adjustment of such maximum prices for certain specific periods. That would seem to imply, would it not, that there are periods other than those mentioned in this subdivision as to which the law at some place requires a further adjustment of the maximum price even though the maximum price already equals the cost plus a reasonable profit? My inquiry of the Senator is: Is there, to his knowledge, anything in the conference report which requires a further adjustment of the maximum price where the maximum price already equals the current total cost plus a reasonable profit?

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator will recall that this subsection is a part of section 11 which added section 6 to the existing law. This is the substitute which I proposed in the committee to the original Taft proposal which was the subject of some critical comment on the part of the President. This was a new section designed to take the place of the other, and creating a new formula. We went on to fix the base period as 1940. Then, in order to undertake to tie in price increases with production and employment, we provided that:

(b) In order that adequate general price levels shall be established for all commodities to bring about maximum production and employment, no maximum prices shall be established or maintained for any product of a producing, manufacturing, or processing industry (including any industry furnishing service or transportation the charges for which are subject to the Administrator's control) which do not return on the average to the industry not less than the average dollar price of such product during the base period, plus the average increase in cost of producing, manufacturing, or processing the same accruing since the base period, but the maximum prices for a product shall be deemed in compliance with this standard if such prices on the average are equal to the average current total cost of the product plus the industry's average over-all profit margin on sales in the base period.

In other words, we said that an industry is entitled to its over-all average current costs plus its margin of profit during the base period; that is, 1940.

Subsection (f) is a part of the section to which I have referred. The language reads:

If the maximum price of a product on the average equals its average current total costs, plus a reasonable profit—

And so forth. That may be a little different from what is stated in the paragraph above, which is based on the average price in 1940, the base period. The words "plus a reasonable profit" were not in the joint resolution as it passed the Senate. The House conferees insisted that they be put in. What the language says is that if the maximum price of a product on the average equals its average current total cost, and in addition to that there is reasonable profit allowed, nothing here shall require any further adjustments. That is, any additional adjustment unless the chances are that it will not bring about increased production. So we tried to tie in not only the current total cost of the product, but also the reasonable profit.

Mr. DONNELL. There might be contingencies under which, even though there was a reasonable profit on a certain commodity, there would be an obligation on the part of the OPA authorities to authorize the higher maximum price.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, with regard to the provisions of subsections (A) and (B) of section (8) on pages 4 and 5 of the conference report, as the Senator will recall, the Director of Economic Stabilization on April 15 announced a program for increasing the level of the return to dairy farmers in order to offset higher costs. In that statement he repeated the assurance that the returns to the producers would either be by subsidy or by price. He announced, effective during May and June, an increase of 20 cents per hundredweight for milk and 5 cents per pound for butterfat over the subsidy rates paid in the same months of last year. If the Senator will recall, the Director of Economic Stabilization then announced there was to be further increases of subsidy rates of 20 cents and of 5 cents, respectively, over last year's levels after July 1 and that these subsidies were to be 40 cents per hundredweight for milk and 10 cents a pound for butterfat higher than during the same months in 1945.

On May 29 he announced another 20-cent increase in dairy returns in order to compensate for higher feed costs resulting from increases in feed-price ceilings. This increase, together with the increase of 20 cents on July 1, was made effective by price-ceiling adjustments during June. As I understand, the Administrator of Economic Stabilization had, by July 1 committed himself to a program of subsidies or price ceiling increases of 60 cents per hundredweight for milk and 15 cents a pound for butterfat over last year's seasonal levels of ceiling prices, plus subsidies.

The question which arises in my mind is this: Since the date inserted in subsection (1) of section 8 (B)——

Mr. BARKLEY. What page does the Senator refer to?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Page 5. I refer to the following language:

That the price of such commodity has risen unreasonably above a price equal to the lawful maximum price in effect on June 30, 1946, plus the amount per unit of any subsidy payable with respect thereto as of June 29, 1946.

My question is this: Could those commitments which were made by the Office of Economic Stabilization to go into effect on July 1, be taken into consideration, or would the date fixed in the conference report preclude their consideration? In other words, the program had been announced. Of course the OPA law died, and the program did not go into effect. Could the Board, in taking into consideration the subsidies, consider that what had been in effect was really an order which was put into effect 2 days after its date?

Mr. BARKLEY. Those were orders which were to become effective on July 1, but because of the lapse of the law did not.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no doubt that they would be taken into consideration in determining the reasonableness or unreasonableness of any price under that subparagraph.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In other words, any order that was to go into effect, but which was cut off because of the fact that the law expired, could be put into effect, even though it was to go into effect on July 1 instead of June 29?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think undoubtedly it could be taken into consideration in regard to the reasonableness or unreasonableness of any price, and also in regard to any moral obligation which might grow out of the fact that there was an order which was to go into effect on a day when it could not take effect.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I shall not consume any more time. A while ago I was attempting to say what I thought as to whether the present bill, on the whole, is a better bill than the one which the President vetoed. I had said that, insofar as there were no decontrols at all in the bill which the President vetoed, and inasmuch as there were decontrols put into this joint resolution by the Senate, which are still retained in a modified way, subject to action on the part of the board, from the standpoint of the President and from the standpoint of the Administrator I would say that the fact that the joint resolution contains any specified decontrols at all would be a defect as compared with the other bill, because it contained none. But inasmuch as these decontrols were put into the joint resolution by the Senate and inasmuch as nearly a month has elapsed since there has been no law at all, I think the provisions which the conferees wrote into the joint resolution with reference to these decontrolled items, and the requirements of the board, constitute a decided improvement over the bill as it passed the Senate in respect to those matters.

Now in regard to the original Taft amendment, with which the President found himself in disagreement, and the provision of this particular joint resolution, I think that from the standpoint of the President, and from the standpoint of the administration of the act, and from the standpoint of the general public, the provision in the pending measure, from my viewpoint, is decidedly better and more workable, as compared with the similar provision of the bill which was vetoed by the President.

I shall not go into details to analyze the original Taft amendment or the present Barkley amendment. They speak for themselves. I am sure this provision can be administered. I know it is workable. I feel that the Administrator of the OPA feels himself that it is workable and that it can be administered.

As I have said, I have not been told by the President whether he will sign the bill. I have not asked him to tell me whether he would sign it. I have every reason to believe he will, and I certainly express the fondest hope that he will.

On the whole, as a completed piece of legislation I state without reservation that in my judgment the conference report bill is an improvement over the bill which the President vetoed.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, before the Senator concludes, I should like to make one thing perfectly clear in my own mind; I would go back to the colloquy we had regarding the purchase of grain by the feed mixers at higher than ceiling prices, in order to break the feed famine which existed in the Northeast.

The Senator expressed the opinion that if the title to the grain had been passed and a contract completed, the feed mixers would not be penalized, but would be permitted to pass on the additional cost of the grain in the price which they would charge for the dairy and poultry feed.

What I should like to make sure of is this: Would any contracts completed between the date of the passage of the act and the 20th of August be subject to the same interpretation? In other words, can the purchasers continue to buy on the open market, without fear of being caught in a squeeze if prices are rolled back on that date?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think similar contracts made between now and the 20th of August and those heretofore entered into since the 30th of June would be on a parity.

Mr. AIKEN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. I apologize to the Senate for taking so much time, but my remarks have been made in an effort to elucidate the bill so far as I could do so, and I appreciate the patience of the Senate.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I intend to vote for the conference report, although I am not very well pleased with it. The main reason why I am not pleased with the report is that it has become interminably complicated, to such an extent that it is very difficult to understand exactly the meaning of the compromises which have been made. I do not think it is anything like as satisfactory, from the standpoint of straightforwardness, as the original bill passed by the Senate and the House and vetoed by the President, nor is it as clear as the joint resolution passed by the Senate.

I should like to explain what I think the conference report means, because, as I have said, it is certainly extremely complicated.

First, I should like to deal with section 11, which, is the Barkley amendment, proposed by the distinguished majority leader in lieu of the amendment which the Senate adopted, and which I offered in the Senate when the original bill was passed.

Under the formula as originally passed it was required that the cost of each product of an industry should be figured as of 1941, and that the industry should be entitled to add to the price which it received in 1941 the increased costs since that date. That was a fairly simple idea. The OPA contended that it was difficult to administer, but the formulas contained in the pending conference report, or some of them at least, are just as difficult of administration. In fact, the basic theory of the Barkley amendment is almost exactly the same as that of the Taft amendment.

I think it is fair to say that, as an over-all proposition, the Barkley amendment, like the Taft amendment, destroys the over-all industry standard which the OPA has used and insisted upon for the last 3 years. That was the standard under which they said that, if an industry was making a profit on one or two things, it could be made to sell some other product at a loss or at cost. The principal purpose of the amendment I offered was to destroy that standard and to provide that every product had to stand on its own feet, and had to return to the industry, on the average, at least, the cost of production, plus a reasonable profit; although I made the exception that, if the industry had never sold a product at a profit, it was not entitled to do so now.

Under the Barkley amendment three different formulas are applicable at the discretion of the OPA, either this way or that way or some other way. Each of those standards is different. All of them destroy the over-all industry standard. All of them for the first time put the pricing of products on a product basis under all circumstances. So that I think they accomplish the main purpose of the Taft amendment, and are in every way similar to it.

The differences are rather minor and complicated, and also difficult to explain. The basic Barkley formula, contained in section 11 (6) (B), provides that—

> No maximum prices shall be established or maintained for any product of a producing, manufacturing, or processing industry * * * which do not return on the average to the industry not less than the average dollar price of such product during the base period—
> Which is 1940—
> plus the average increase in cost of producing it since the base period.

That formula is exactly the same as that of the Taft amendment, except that 1940 is used instead of 1941, and that the costs, instead of being added to the individual manufacturer's price of 1941, are added to the average price of 1940. I do not think that is very important, but so far as it has any effect, it discriminates against the smaller manufacturer. The smaller manufacturer is usually getting more for his product, his costs are somewhat higher, and by reason of his being closer to his customers, or furnishing some special service, or having friends over a long period, he got little more than the regular large-scale manufacturer, and had to get a little more in order to pay his increased costs. The Barkley formula abolishes that difference and says the two must sell at exactly the same price.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. WILLIS. I have been very much disturbed about that feature of the conference measure. As I interpret it, we are going to do business on an average in America under this plan. We are going to have average production, are we not? Will we get the production out of the bill that we need to supply the quantity of things America needs, and will it be necessary to bring the prices down in competition?

Mr. TAFT. I do not think it is quite so promising as the Taft formula, but I think it does something, because it does away with that iniquitous practice of the OPA to make a producer sell an article at a loss. It makes the OPA allow the manufacturer a profit at least. Now that profit is on the average.

Mr. WILLIS. What happens to the man who can not make it on the average?

Mr. TAFT. It is true that for various reasons, the small producer often received a higher price, and when everything is reduced to a standard such as this, he loses that advantage. While it may encourage production for the large manufacturer, it is not so effective to accomplish that purpose for the small manufacturer, or for the encouragement of the establishment of a great many smaller manufacturers. I think that is unfortunate. As to the total overall production, I think probably it would have the same effect, but I believe we ought to encourage the small business instead of the large business.

Mr. WILLIS. It is likely to work a hardship on the small producer.

Mr. TAFT. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. Who has suffered under OPA during the 4 years of its existence.

Mr. TAFT. Yes. The small producer suffers under price regulation. He can not adjust himself as well as can the large manufacturer.

There was put in at the end of paragraph (b) an alternative standard for OPA. This language was inserted:

> but the maximum prices for a product shall be deemed in compliance with this standard if such prices, on the average, are equal to the average current total cost of the product plus the industry's average over-all profit margin on sales in the base period.

That means it must be done on a product basis. But the OPA can say every product must be sold on the basis of its present cost, but there must be added a profit margin, and that profit margin may be the average profit margin the manufacturer had on all his product in 1940, instead of the profit margin he had on the particular product. That, Mr. President, is another average. But I do not think it changes substantially the net result, except that every one will have to figure both ways, and the OPA will have to figure both ways before they can apply the standard. It simply makes the work more complicated.

The joint resolution as it passed the Senate contained two provisions which practically gave the OPA power not to apply the standard if it did not want to do so. Both provisions have been changed by the conference committee on the insistence of the conferees on the part of the House of Representatives. So, in effect, to a large extent, we have accomplished what I was attempting to accomplish when I tried to strike out those three provisions. The first provision was one which said that after the Administrator had figured these costs he could then say, "Well, that is all very well. You are figuring that on the basis of a million and a half automobiles this year, but I think a normal production, say next year, will be four or five million automobiles. So I am going to give you this year's profit on the basis of what you are going to do next year in the way of costs, which will be lower, I think, than the cost you are going to have this year with a smaller volume." That is changed so that in figuring cost they can only look 3 months ahead. I think that met entirely the objections which I had.

Subparagraph (f) provided originally that if maximum prices of a product equal its costs, and if the Administrator found that increased production was not necessary in his opinion, or would interfere with some other production, then he did not have to apply the formula. Instead of that he could simply say "Here are your costs without any profit at all," and perhaps even without overhead. As changed by the conference committee it is now required that, even if the Administrator finds that increased production is not practical or necessary, still he must apply a formula on the product basis. He must still say that every product must return its costs, plus a reasonable profit.

That is a third formula in section 11. But again it preserves the principle that it must be figured on a product basis; that every product must stand on its own feet, and that the OPA cannot force a product to be sold at cost or at a loss. The only change is that if increased production is not practical the Administrator may then say "This is a reasonable profit," instead of having to apply the 1940 profit. As a matter of fact, the Administrator in many cases has held that the 1940 profit was reasonable. He might chisel 1 or 2 percent off the formula by making the finding that increased production is not possible, but the total result, I think, Mr. President, of the change in this formula, when we get all through, is that possibly there might be a 4 percent lower price on manufactured goods than there would be under the Taft formula as originally proposed.

That is certainly not of tremendous importance to the people of the United States, and while I do not think it is as encouraging to production, or as fair, I believe that this formula, like the other formula, abolishes the over-all industry standard and forces the OPA to price every product so that there will be an encouragement to people to produce, and fill up the shelves, which in so many respects today are completely empty.

So, I would say that the net result of this change over the former measure meets in some respects the criticism of the President, but substantially carries out the principle of the amendment which I offered. Apart from the complication of 3 different formulas, the chief difference is that it is based on 1940, instead of 1941. I chose the 1941 date, because that was in the price control law, but it is true that the margin before taxes was about 3 percent higher in 1941 than in 1940. The margin after taxes was less. Both those matters have to be taken into consideration. So that while this basis is somewhat slightly lower on manufactured goods, it is not very much different.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. Was it not a fact that under the Senator's amendment in the original bill the Office of Price Administration was forced to do certain things in respect to which it is now left very substantially, in my opinion, to their option or judgment as to what is reasonable under certain conditions? I think that is a very important change.

Mr. TAFT. No, that is not entirely true. It is true of the measure passed by the Senate, but the changes made in conference result in this, that OPA must apply a cost plus formula, and they must apply it to every product. That is not in their discretion. They do have discretion to vary the profit, and instead of being forced, as they were under my amendment, to apply the 1941 profit, if you please—that was the effect of the formula, to state it backward really—they now may apply the formula of a reasonable profit. A reasonable profit is a profit, but it is not so adequate as the provision of my amendment. They can only do that if they find that increased production is not practicable, but they can always find that.

Mr. HAWKES. The distinguished Senator from Ohio has done a tremendous amount of work in this connection, and I believe it has been in the interest of the welfare of the ordinary people of the United States. But I cannot help feeling, from what I have heard here today, and from what I have read and seen in connection with the conference report, that the Office of Price Administration has a power in connection with determining what is a reasonable profit that it was never the intention of the Senate should be left to the judgment of one man. I know the Senator feels that there are certain instructions given to the Decontrol or the Control Board, or whatever one has in mind to call it. I wonder whether we will know what those instructions will be when we get through with the measure. I know the Senator feels there are certain definite instructions in the report, but I contend that when it gets down to the point where it says that the Price Administrator does not have to do this thing, or that he can determine what is a reasonable profit, and, under certain conditions which are left entirely in his discretion and control, he can reach a decision from which there is only an appeal to the Emergency Court of Appeals, the result will be to stymie business throughout the United States and very seriously interfere with the production we are all seeking to obtain in order to get the prices down where they belong and thereby to give the people what they need.

Mr. TAFT. Of course, the decontrol matter has nothing to do with this, and the discretion given with respect to decontrol has no relation whatever to the question of what price shall be fixed if an article is recontrolled. As I have stated before, the respect in which this is completely similar to the Taft formula is that it destroys the over-all industry standard once and for all. It requires every product to be priced on a product basis, on the basis of the cost of the particular product, and to the cost of that product must be added a reasonable profit. I agree that the difference is that the Price Administrator is given some discretion and power to say that he is going to apply the formula, with a reasonable profit, instead of the 1941 or 1940 profit which formerly existed. But as I say, I do not think that that will make a tremendous difference. I know it will not make much difference in prices. I do not think the President has gained a great deal by that particular concession, and it still forces every product to be priced in such a way as to bring about greater production of it.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. McMAHON. I assume the Senator is discussing section 11?

Mr. TAFT. Yes.

Mr. McMAHON. I have received an inquiry with respect to roofing material. The particular concern I have in mind is engaged in roofing, siding, and insulating work. Is it the Senator's interpretation as to the meaning of the language that those engaged in doing this kind of work come within the meaning of subparagraph (e) and are protected the same as producers, manufacturers, and processors?

Mr. TAFT. The Senator is referring to a company which repairs roofs, is he not?

Mr. McMAHON. That is correct.

Mr. TAFT. Such a company is subject to control as a service industry; and service industries are included in the provisions of section 6 (b). After referring to the product of a producing, manufacturing, or processing industry, that paragraph contains the following language in parentheses:

(including any industry furnishing service or transportation the charges for which are subject to the Administrator's control.)

So the general formula of section 6 (b) applies to such a concern. In other words, initially it is permitted to charge what it charged in 1940 plus increased costs since that date. But the Administrator may apply another formula which provides, in effect, that it must get his present costs plus a reasonable profit.

Mr. McMAHON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. TAFT. The part of the joint resolution which I like least, and the change with which I most completely disagree, and against which I voted at every point, is the change in the Wherry amendment, in paragraph (t) on page 12. In the joint resolution as it passed the Senate the provision was as follows:

In establishing maximum prices applicable to wholesale or retail distributors, the Administrator shall allow for the current cost of acquisition of any commodity, plus such percentage discount or mark-up as was in effect on June 29, 1946.

The date in the bill which originally passed the Senate was January 1, 1946. The Senate passed the joint resolution with the date June 29, 1946, and the conference made it March 31. It so happens that very few of the distributors' margins were cut before January 1, so the original bill in effect provided that the distributor should not be forced to absorb increases made since January 1, when prices began to increase. From the 1st of January to the 1st of July there were approximately 650 general price increases made for manufacturers. Of those, about 150 were prior to March 1, and approximately 250 prior to April 1. About 400 were made since April 1. The result is that those who were required to absorb before March 31 are still required to absorb. Those who were required to absorb after March 31 may now return to their original margin. That is a discriminatory provision. It was said that it was discriminatory when the date was made January 1. It was, but there were very few price increases prior to January 1, so that was a rather minor fault. But it seems to me that this date is very unsatisfactory. I think it is unfair to the distributors who were forced to absorb prior to March 31, and now must continue to absorb forever, or as long as price control lasts.

The decontrol section is the most important section of the joint resolution. Under the terms of the bill originally passed by the Congress and presented to the President, the only substantial change that was made was with respect to the requirement for the pricing of manufactured products. I do not believe that in any event the increase could have amounted to more than 10 percent over present prices. In many cases there would be no increase at all. In many cases increases had already been granted. The President chose to veto the bill because of the threatened increase, which, incidentally, would not have occurred until 90 days after the passage of the measure, and in most cases not until the first of the year, when we would have been in sight of the end of price control anyway. Because he chose to object to that particular provision, he decontrolled everything, and everything is now decontrolled. Particularly he decontrolled foods and rents, and by his veto he brought about an increase in the price of food which is general and which undoubtedly it will be almost impossible to reverse. He decontrolled foodstuffs and rents.

My general impression is that, so far as the people are interested in continuing OPA, the great majority of them are interested only in food and rents. One of the newspapers in Cincinnati conducted a poll on the basis of the general question, "Do you think OPA ought to be continued?" The vote was perhaps 2 to 1 in favor of it. Another question was, "Do you think it ought to be confined to food and rents?" A slight majority were in favor of confining it to food and rents. In general, the people are interested only in food and rents. So far as manufactured goods are concerned, they are willing to wait. If they think the price is too high today, the will waft until the price is lower. In many instances they do not have to buy clothing. Suits and other things can be made to last a great deal longer than we thought possible before the war. But we must have shelter and must eat food every day. Those are the things with respect to which it was important to continue price controls. The President, by his veto, has decontrolled food, and has permitted increases in the price of food which may or may not be justifiable, but which in any event it will be almost impossible to reverse.

We have the problem of what we are going to do. Personally, I feel that the things which have been decontrolled had better stay decontrolled. We have had the shock. I feel that in time the law of supply and demand will bring prices into line, particularly in the case of grain. We have large grain crops. Other conditions will take care of grain prices. In the case of meat I feel that it is almost impossible to control or recontrol meat. I think it is unfortunate that we could not obtain the provisions of the joint resolution as it passed the Senate. What we have is an unsatisfactory compromise, but it is a compromise; and, if carried out in good faith, in my opinion, it must result in the decontrol of a great many products.

The decontrol provisions have been described. We took the commodities which were decontrolled by the Senate and divided them into two categories. By this measure, poultry, eggs, tobacco, and petroleum are decontrolled. In the case of tobacco, poultry, and eggs the Secretary of Agriculture is given the power, with the approval of the Price Decontrol Board, to put those controls back at any time when prices appear to be getting out of line. But he must find three things——

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. MOORE. That is an entirely different formula from what was provided as to decontrol of petroleum in the other bill. The other bill provided that if there were a short supply, if supply did not equal demand, it could be recontrolled. Nothing was said about profits.

Mr. TAFT. That is correct; but the pending measure would make it more difficult to recontrol petroleum than would the original bill. The provision with respect to petroleum in the pending measure is as follows:

> Nothing contained in this act shall be construed to authorize the Administrator to impose or maintain price controls with respect to petroleum or petroleum products processed or manufactured in whole or in substantial part from petroleum, except that, after August 20, 1946, maximum prices with respect thereto may be reestablished pursuant to the provisions of paragraph (3) of this subsection (d), but only under the standards prescribed in paragraph (8) (C) of subsection (e).

That means that the Administrator, with the consent in writing of the Price Decontrol Board, may reestablish control, but only under the standards prescribed in paragraph (8) (C) of subsection (e).

In order to recontrol, the Price Administrator and the Price Decontrol Board must find, first, that the price of such commodity has risen unreasonably above a price equal to the lawful maximum price in effect on June 30; and second, that such commodity is in short supply. In other words, they must make the finding which they had to make under the Senate provision, and in addition they must find that the price has risen unreasonably. In the third place, they must find that the regulation is practicable and enforceable.

Mr. MOORE. Does the word "supply" mean supply for world needs, or supply for domestic demand?

Mr. TAFT. My impression is that it is exactly the same as in the original amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. MOORE. Under the former amendment it was confined to the domestic demand.

Mr. TAFT. The commodity must be found to be in short supply. That means supply in this country. As I understand, we do not export any substantial amount of petroleum. So I do not think that makes any difference. I should say without question that the provision with respect to recontrol of petroleum is better than it was in the original amendment offered by the Senator, which permitted recontrol. I believe that petroleum is treated better under the terms of this measure than is any other commodity, when we compare the present measure with that which was previously passed.

As to the commodities to which reference has been made, there must be a finding that the price has gone up unreasonably. In the case of dairy products, as suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], an increase already granted by the Price Administration, and which did not go into effect because the Price Control Act expired, must be admitted by the Price Administrator to be a reasonable increase. So unless the prices of dairy products go up more than the subsidy plus the granted increase, there could be no claim that prices had risen unreasonably.

As to the other three commodities, the provision is less satisfactory. It depends upon action by the Price Decontrol Board before August 20. If the Board does not act at all, controls are restored. I think that would be a gross breach of faith on the part of the Board and a failure to follow the instructions, which are that—

> The Price Decontrol Board shall proceed forthwith to consider whether the commodities listed in subparagraph (A) shall continue, after August 20, to be free from regulation under this act and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended.

The Board will be considering a question which will become a moot question on August 20. So it seems to me perfectly clear that the Board is directed to make a finding before August 20.

The report also contains the following provision:

> Such Board after due notice of a public hearing and full opportunity for representatives of affected industries and consumers to present their views orally or in writing.

In other words, we do not want the Board to be permitted to say, "Well, these people want to be heard; and since they want to be heard, we cannot decide it."

The Board may shut off oral hearings, as we considered, 3 weeks before August 20, and in the time intervening between then and August 20 they will be able to consider the matter and to arrive at their decision. That situation would apply to all categories of commodities mentioned at this point in the report—namely, grain, wheat, dairy products, feed, and meat. So I believe the Board must act before August 20 one way or the other. The Board might not have as much information as it would like to have, but the problem is a very definite one. The decision is not dependent upon the collection of a great many statistics. It is a decision which, I think, the Board will be able to reach—namely, whether the price has risen unreasonably and whether the commodity is in short supply. Those matters can be determined. The Secretary of Agriculture can give the Board figures on those matters overnight.

As I have said, the report provides that—

> Such Board shall direct that any such commodity shall not be so regulated unless it finds—

Not only that the price has risen unreasonably above the price on June 30 and that the commodity is in short supply, but—

> That its regulation is practicable and enforceable, and
> (iii) that the public interest will be served by such regulation.

In other words, even though the Board may find that there is a short supply and that there is an increase in price, the Board still may find that the public interest does not require control.

I personally do not see how the Board can find, particularly as to meat, and certainly as to beef, that such a regulation is practicable and enforceable. Certainly it will be much less practicable and enforceable after the period of freedom from OPA, which by that time will have amounted to 7 weeks.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Then why did not the Senate conferees adhere to the Senate's provision for the specific decontrol of meat, as provided for in the joint resolution as passed by the Senate.

Mr. TAFT. I was in favor of it, and I voted for it every time I could.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Ohio may have been in favor of it, but the conference report does not provide for the decontrol of meat.

Mr. TAFT. That is obvious, and we have so stated.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I should like to emphasize that the Senate conferees made repeated efforts to have the conference report include the decontrol of meat, as provided by the joint resolution as passed by the Senate. The point of divergence is that the provision now under consideration was not accepted by all of the conferees until the conferees on the part of the House took the attitude that they would not accept the proposal originally submitted by the Senate. We were in deadlock for days. We had reached a stalemate, and both groups of conferees were about to report a disagreement. Then my first proposal of compromise was made by me, in the hope that an agreement could be reached. This was rejected but my modified proposition was eventually adopted with some slight change. But I think the conferees on the part of the Senate pressed their points and emphasized the position of the Senate about as far as they could with any prospect of success.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. TAFT. I do not yield for the moment, Mr. President.

Let me say that this amendment providing this formula for decontrol or recontrol was offered by the distinguished Senator from Maryland, who throughout the conference stood out against giving up provision for decontrol. As I have said, I thought that one night we were going to reach a disagreement. Then the Senator offered this amendment. It was somewhat better in the form in which he offered it than it was in the form in which the conference finally wrote it in. But in substance the formula is here, and it still governs all action under the amendment. I think the Senator was justified in trying to reach a compromise. I say frankly that my only doubt is whether this amendment will be carried out in perfectly good faith from a judicial standpoint, applying this formula, and not from an ideological standpoint, as I fear it may be carried out.

I was very much pleased, indeed, to have the assurance of the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, which I may say we also had in the conference committee, that the Decontrol Board will be immediately appointed, before the Congress adjourns, and that the Senate will have an opportunity to pass on the members who are appointed to the Board. I think that is the most important key to the whole question of decontrol.

I have stated that under this formula I do not see how meat can be recontrolled, because I do not think any reasonable man can maintain that its regulation is practicable or enforceable under present-day conditions.

As to the matter of unreasonable price, I myself do not think wheat can be reasonably recontrolled. Wheat has gone up about 5 percent. There is every prospect for the largest wheat crop we have ever had in this country. There is a prospect that wheat will be received from other countries. I hold in my hand a telegram which I have received from the president of the New York Produce Exchange, who is well informed, although of course I do not vouch for the facts that are stated in the telegram. He says:

NEW YORK, N. Y., July 19, 1946.

Hon. ROBERT A. TAFT,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

I hope you will stand firm for the decontrol of grain and grain products as well as meat, poultry, and dairy products, especially in view of the fact that I today learn that Russia is now soliciting the various European governments seeking buyers for one and a half million tons of wheat, rye, and barley and of course it is possible that they have larger stocks available for export than these figures would indicate. Certainly in view of the prospects of large crops of grain in this country according to the most recent figures issued by the Department of Agriculture and the necessity to export some of this grain in order to enable the American farmer to obtain good prices for his products it now seems possible that Russia is about ready to disrupt the entire world price structure as far as grains are concerned. If I am correct in my assumption regarding this situation so much more reason for releasing controls on meat, poultry, and dairy products since the farmer will necessarily have to look to the feeding of animals for the disposal of a good part of his crops which in turn will naturally mean a tremendous production of meat and other dairy products. I am more concerned about the prospective decline in farm prices than I am of the possibility of sharp advances above former OPA ceiling prices. For your further guidance oats declined 5 cents per bushel today in the leading markets of the country and are now selling 16 cents per bushel under the previous ceiling established by OPA. For your guidance I have also wired Senators GEORGE L. RADCLIFFE and CHARLES W. TOBEY.

CHARLES B. CROFTON,
President, New York Produce Exchange.

That is a fair indication that if the Board acts according to the facts, it will be wholly unable to find that wheat, in any event, is in short supply or that its price has risen unreasonably above a price equal to the price in effect on June 30.

Corn is in a somewhat different status, because the old corn crop has gone, and corn is selling at a very high price. I assume there would be justification for the recontrol of corn and perhaps for the recontrol of hogs. But I certainly see none for the recontrol of wheat or the recontrol of meat, after the Board is set up.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. CAPEHART. I should like to have the Senator from Ohio explain why he thinks corn and hogs should be recontrolled?

Mr. TAFT. I did not say I think they should be recontrolled. I said I think they might be recontrolled. Corn is now selling at $2.25 a bushel on the Chicago market, because there is very little corn left. That is the reason for that price. With a three and one-half billion bushel crop of corn coming in, I suppose that strictly speaking, the Board should take that into account and should find that corn is not in short supply. But I do not think that is a perfectly clear case, or as clear as the others are.

Mr. CAPEHART. I think the records show that there is a 550,000,000 bushel carry-over of corn, and that there is the possibility of the largest corn crop in the history of the Nation—approximately 3,500,000,000 bushels, as against a previous high mark of 3,200,000,000 bushels.

Mr. TAFT. I am in favor of decontrolling corn. I was then discussing whether under this formula the Board would have to recontrol it. I do not think it would have to. Of course, today corn is selling for more per bushel than wheat is selling. Certainly that shows an abnormal condition, insofar as corn is concerned. As the Senator from Indiana knows, corn always sells for probably 30 percent or 40 percent less per bushel than wheat sells for.

Mr. CAPEHART. Let me ask this question: Suppose that when the corn crop is harvested in October and November, we find that we have a crop of 3,500,000,000 bushels, which in normal times would be a crop which would reduce the price of corn approximately 50 percent; in normal times, if corn had been selling for 80 cents a bushel, with a crop of that size corn would automatically drop to a price of 40 cents a bushel. Does not the Senator think that decontrol is justified under those circumstances?

Mr. TAFT. As I understand the matter, if the Board decides not to control on August 20, its powers to recontrol then cease. But thereafter the Secretary of Agriculture, with the consent of the Decontrol Board, may decide that the short supply justifies control, and then control may be placed on the commodity. The sole question is whether corn is in short supply. It could be decontrolled by the Secretary of Agriculture later, even though the Board should refuse to decontrol it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator has repeatedly referred to the necessity for good faith in the administration of this compromise proposal, if it is to succeed. I have always been under the impression that the fundamental reason why there has been a long stalemate between Congress and the OPA in respect to this whole problem has been the stubborn and often stupid refusal of the OPA to recognize the congressional desire for maximum decontrol at the earliest possible safe moment, and a complete refusal to cooperate with that point of view.

I now ask the Senator whether we are confronting a similar situation in respect to the conference report? Does not the Senator agree with me that the conference report and the system created by it will not succeed, either to the satisfaction of the country or the Congress, if it continues to be administered by an OPA and an associated authority which undertakes to see how long and how much control can be maintained, instead of undertaking to see how soon and how safely decontrols can be made permanently effective?

Mr. TAFT. I agree entirely with what the Senator has said, and the success of this measure will depend on the Decontrol Board. Of course, that Board, so far as we can make it so, will be completely independent of the OPA and the Price Administrator. It will be appointed directly by the President. It will set up its own organization and will be, therefore, a new body. Provision for it was made in the original bill. It did not have the extensive powers that it will have under the present measure, but it did have considerable powers. The OPA is dominated by what I believe to be an ideology instead of common sense, and unless we get away from it I do not believe we will accomplish what we want to accomplish in respect to petroleum, tobacco, poultry, and eggs. If we mean what we have said we mean, we are starting to decontrol. What I have strenuously objected to heretofore is that we were only renewing controls. We are now actually starting to decontrol, but, in my opinion, we have not gone far enough.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is it not true that, even from the point of view of those who will support the conference report, it would be better not to adopt this compromise if it is to be administered in the same old spirit of total opposition to the congressional point of view that maximum decontrol should be brought about as soon as it can be safely obtained?

Mr. TAFT. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. CAPEHART. Does the Senator care to comment on the statement which the former OPA Director, Mr. Porter, made, namely, that the present measure is much better than the one which the President vetoed?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. Porter will have to say that if the President signs this measure; otherwise the President will be made ridiculous.

Mr. CAPEHART. I do not know how we can have much confidence in a man who makes a statement that the measure which we are now considering is a better one than the one which the President vetoed a few weeks ago.

Mr. TAFT. What is a good bill and what is a better bill depends on from what point of view the bill is looked at. I would say that the present measure will hold down by a few percent the price of manufactured products, which is not important in connection with inflation. But, at the same time, the bill increases prices in the case of some foodstuffs, which is important from the standpoint of inflation. The President certainly has succeeded in getting considerable decontrol of a great many food products which will be almost impossible to roll back to the point where they previously were. Any attempt to roll meat back under control would simply result in a complete elimination of the supply of meat. There would not be any. The President, by his veto, has, himself opened the door to a condition with which he can no longer interfere. We are asking that some of the decontrols be continued. Therefore, I should think that the net result, from the standpoint of inflation, if that be a danger, is that the pending measure will be far more inflationary than was the bill which the President vetoed.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I questioned the sincerity of the former OPA Director when he made the statement to which I have referred. It seems to me that any 6-year-old child should know that the measure which is now before the Senate is, from the President's standpoint, a much worse measure than the bill which he vetoed a few weeks ago. The pending measure decontrols many things which the former measure did not decontrol. The pending measure decontrols many products until August 20. Unless the President dictates to the Decontrol Board—of course he will appoint the members of the Board—they will keep under decontrol livestocks, grains, and other commodities which are in long supply. So I question the sincerity of the former Administrator of the OPA, just as I have questioned it for many months, ever since I became a Member of the Senate.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Indiana is entirely correct in what he has said. The measure now before the Senate is more inflationary than was the bill which the President vetoed. So, I would think that it is a worse bill from the President's standpoint. I do not think that it will result in an increase in prices greater than will be absolutely required because of increases in costs and wages which have already taken place, and largely as a result of the policy of the Administration itself. But, from the standpoint of higher prices, the pending measure undoubtedly is more inflationary than was the one which the Senate passed a few weeks ago and which the President vetoed.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, what commodities does the conference report operate to decontrol except at the discretion of the Decontrol Board and the Administrator?

Mr. TAFT. The joint resolution, which is the subject of the conference report now before the Senate, decontrols many commodities from now until August 20, or a period of several weeks. That alone will be a substantial freeing of the market for a while. In the second place, formulas have been laid down on which recontrols may be imposed, and I have tried to explain to the Senate that, in my opinion, if the act is administered in good faith, almost all the decontrols will continue in effect. That is my answer to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. MOORE. Does the measure permit the Decontrol Board and the Administrator to recontrol every commodity produced in the country?

Mr. TAFT. Yes, if they find first, that a commodity is in short supply; second that the price has risen unreasonably; third, that control is practicable and enforceable, and fourth, that it is in the public interest—which, I agree, does not mean very much. But those requirements are laid down by the Congress, and certainly we have the right to believe that some attention will be paid to them.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I have been attending a very important meeting of the Judiciary Committee and therefore was not able to be present in the Chamber during the entire time the conference report has been under discussion. I should like to ask one or two questions.

The threshing season in South Dakota and Nebraska will be over by August 20, whereas in North Dakota and Montana the grain will be coming in. Just how will the law affect that situation?

Mr. TAFT. The Senator is talking about wheat primarily?

Mr. LANGER. Yes; and also flax.

Mr. TAFT. In my opinion, as I stated before the Senator came into the Chamber, those commodities are to be decontrolled until August 20, in any event. If the grower of wheat can dispose of it by August 20, he may charge whatever price he can receive for it. Of course, that depends somewhat on whether the grower can get his wheat to the market. If wheat is recontrolled, the present measure will result in the cancellation of contracts for wheat after August 20. The Board of three, as provided for under the measure, will decide whether wheat will be decontrolled, or recontrolled. I do not think the Board will be able to find that wheat is in short supply; but if it refuses to make that finding and permits recontrol, the situation thereby created will be very complicated. Then the OPA may roll back the price. If they are wise they will not roll back the price on wheat. They will accept a new price which will not be unreasonable, as the Senator knows. On the other hand, they have the power to roll back the price and thereby leave many persons holding the bag, they having paid more for wheat than they could sell it for. Legally, I believe they would have a right to go to the OPA and insist that what they had paid for wheat was a legitimate transaction, was therefore a legitimate cost, and must be reflected in their prices. Whether they would be able to obtain favorable action from the OPA I cannot assure the Senator.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Where a local elevator has purchased wheat and actually has it on hand, and bought at a higher price, how would that be affected in case the bill should be enacted?

Mr. TAFT. The elevator may have paid a higher price and since it has not disposed of the wheat and still owns it, it may, under the ceiling price which will be imposed, be unable to sell except at a loss. I think the distinguished Senator from Kentucky made the statement, which I think the Senator might examine in the RECORD, that the Price Administrator assured him that that situation would be taken care of in a higher price for wheat, which could be obtained by the elevator. But that is not required by the conference bill.

Mr. LANGER. I was going to say that if it is not required, it might break nearly every elevator in the Northwest.

Mr. TAFT. That is correct.

Mr. STANFILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. STANFILL. Let me ask the Senator from Ohio a question about subsidies. How much does the Government subsidize meat, for instance, and poultry? How much has it subsidized dairy products and the other products?

Mr. TAFT. The subsidy on meat has run about 5 or 6 cents a pound. It has cost the Federal Treasury $720,000,000 a year.

Mr. STANFILL. On meat alone?

Mr. TAFT. On meat alone. The subsidy on dairy products runs 2 cents a quart on milk, 12 cents a pound on butter, and I think 7 or 8 cents on cheese. In a good many places it runs 3 cents a quart on milk. The increases in the prices of the milk and butter and cheese, which have taken place recently, have been almost equivalent to the subsidy; very little more. The actual increase in the price of butter from 57 cents to 69 or 71 cents wholesale has just about reflected the amount of the subsidy which was removed. That cost the Government about $515,000,000, and was going to cost it around $750,000,000 if the OPA had gone on with the plans they had for increasing the subsidy instead of increasing the price.

Mr. STANFILL. Approximately how much, in all, during the period just prior to June 30, 1946, did the Government pay out in subsidies in order that OPA might say it was holding the line on prices?

Mr. TAFT. The total subsidy program submitted, which was in force in June, was at the rate of $2,000,000,000 a year. That $2,000,000,000 was reduced by the committee to $1,000,000,000, and the conference report measure requires that subsidies be eliminated, with a few exceptions, on April 1 of next year. So all subsidies will have to be reduced, even if there is recontrol. No subsidy can be paid on a commodity which is not controlled. If the commodity is controlled, the subsidy may be paid, but not in the volume in which subsidies have been paid in the past. They have to be gradually reduced.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Is there any way to estimate, with a degree of accuracy, the difference between the subsidies paid in the past, per annum, by the OPA, and the subsidies which will be paid if the joint resolution shall be enacted?

Mr. TAFT. The difference is just one-half.

Mr. REVERCOMB. It will reduce it 50 percent?

Mr. TAFT. It will reduce it 50 percent, with the requirement that subsidies will end on the 1st of April. Because of the President's action subsidies were taken off all at once, and the increases in the price of food which are widely advertised are largely the result of the removal of the subsidies, which were brought about by the President's veto, not gradually, as we contemplated, but all at once. Of course, the increase in the price of food is not a real increase. It simply means that the increase is paid by the citizen as a consumer instead of as a taxpayer. We now pay more for food, but it should be reflected in a decrease in the percentage of the income tax that is taken off consumers, or most of the consumers.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I did not get the figure as to the total subsidies which had been paid on food during the period of the war.

Mr. TAFT. I do not think I can give the Senator that figure. In the year ended, on the first of July, it was about $2,000,000,000. It had been an increasing amount. It started in 1943, I think, and probably built up gradually from $500,000,000 to about $2,000,000,000 a year. Now we have reduced it to $1,000,000,000.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That means that the population was eating food and was to pay for it on a deferred basis in the future?

Mr. TAFT. At a time when the consumer was well off and wages were high, I never could see why the consumer should not have paid the real cost of what he ate. I always thought the policy adopted was unsound. I was always fighting to limit subsidies. The only question now is how fast we can get rid of them. I think it is generally agreed they should be brought to an end.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. But they will have to be paid for out of taxes in the future?

Mr. TAFT. They will have to be paid for out of taxes in the future, and at the present moment they have to be paid for out of bonds, and that is, therefore, to my mind, more inflationary than increasing the price of food to take care of them.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. In connection with what the able Senator from Ohio said to the able Senator from North Dakota regarding wheat, I should like to ask if there is any means provided in the conference report of protecting the feeder or producer of livestock. At the moment probably 50 percent of the lambs have been contracted, in my State certainly, and many of the feeder beef steers have been contracted. Is there any paragraph or clause which would protect the feeder who purchased that livestock for feeding, if the conference report should be agreed to and be signed by the President, and the prices were reduced?

Mr. TAFT. The feeder who bought them for feeding?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Who contracted for them, which they do generally months ahead.

Mr. TAFT. The feeder would have made a mistake, I think, to make a contract at the higher price. I doubt if many feeders made contracts at higher prices than the ceiling prices, if there were ceiling prices.

Mr. ROBERTSON. About 50 percent of the lambs in Wyoming have been contracted for September and October delivery.

Mr. TAFT. The feeders are not protected under the joint resolution.

Mr. ROBERTSON. In no way?

Mr. TAFT. In a general way, yes; in that there are a good many provisions all through the joint resolution that the Administrator must recognize actual costs, and of course what the dealers pay are actual costs. But whether they can succeed in getting that change made before they lose money I do not want to promise, because that has not been the history. The history has been that the delay in securing the adjustments is material. I think the Senator might propound his inquiry to the Senator from Kentucky. The Senator from Kentucky gave assurance that the Administrator was going to take care of grain bought at higher prices, but whether that related to livestock I do not remember. I do not remember the exact wording of his statement.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I shall try to seize the opportunity to ask the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANFILL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield again?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. STANFILL. The sum of $2,000,000,000, which the Senator from Ohio says was paid out by OPA in subsidies during the year just ended, June 30, 1946, is so staggering to me that I can hardly conceive of that amount of money. I heard the Senator from Ohio some days ago, when we were considering the price-control bill in the Senate, speak about OPA propaganda. Did the Senator ever find any part of their propaganda in which they said that they paid out $2,000,000,000 of the taxpayers' money in order to try to hold down prices?

Mr. TAFT. I think the Senator is correct in his implication. I think that subject was avoided in the propaganda. Subsidies were referred to in a general way. They said they should be continued, but I do not think the sums paid were ever mentioned, certainly not emphasized.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask for information, because I have not observed the subject covered in the bill. There was a practice on the part of OPA, which was very detrimental to industry, of making a new price on current costs to a new producer of an article, while the old producer, whose costs were based on those of 1941, which, as I recall, was the base period, was obliged to hold to his old price, and he could not meet the competition of the new article. Is there any provision of the bill which requires that when a price is fixed for a new producer it shall also apply to all the industry?

Mr. TAFT. No; there is no such provision.

Mr. WILLIS. There is nothing done to remedy that discrimination?

Mr. TAFT. The only remedy is that we have forced them to let the old producer obtain a more reasonable price. That is the general effect of section 11, but it is not quite so good as the original Taft amendment in that regard.

Mr. WILLIS. It does not require that the old producer be taken care of?

Mr. TAFT. There is a general provision in the original act that the Administrator may treat anybody as a hardship case and give him the right to charge a higher price. In the long run, that is not going to do him much good. He is not going to be able to get a higher price, as in the case of the larger manufacturer who is manufacturing in quantity. The difficulty has been that the established manufacturer has been forced to sell his goods at a loss, and the new manufacturer is able to get a much higher price. The general effect is to raise the price of the whole product. If the old established manufacturer is given a fair price, computed on his present costs with a reasonable profit, his production will soon reach such a point that the new manufacturer is not going to be able to get away with the higher price granted by the OPA.

Mr. WILLIS. But there has been a great divergence, a widespread difference, in the prices. The prices allowed to the old producer are low when compared with those allowed to the new producer.

Mr. TAFT. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. And great hardships have been worked on old established producers. Some have been obliged to reduce their production. Some have refused to continue to produce.

Mr. TAFT. That comes about more from the fact that they have not been given any return at all, rather than from the fact that someone else was given a higher price. The average businessman under ordinary circumstances does not mind having a competitor who charges 50 percent more. He marks him off the book. He is not afraid of him.

Mr. WILLIS. And the old established producer would have been willing to produce at a higher price than that fixed by OPA, and produce a better article, than if he were allowed merely enough to take care of his current costs.

Mr. TAFT. Yes.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. I should like to ask the Senator if he deems the period between the time of the passage of this measure and August 20 to be an adequately long period within which the Decontrol Board can perform the various duties required of it? May I indicate the particular illustration I have in mind. Under subparagraph (B) of paragraph (8), on pages 4 and 5, it is provided, as I understand, that if the Price Decontrol Board shall fail to direct on or before August 20, 1946, that the respective commodities therein mentioned shall not be regulated, such commodities go back under maximum prices, regulations, and orders, under the two acts. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. TAFT. That is correct.

Mr. DONNELL. Therefore, if the Price Decontrol Board shall find that the task of determining whether or not all types of livestock, milk, food or feed products, processed or manufactured in whole or in substantial part from livestock, from milk, cottonseed, soybeans, or food or feed products processed or manufactured in whole or in substantial part from cottonseed or soybeans, and grains which have been established under the United States Grain Standards Act, or livestock or poultry feed processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part therefrom—if the Board during the period between the time of the enactment of this law, or rather the time of the appointment of the Board, and August 20, shall find it impossible to ascertain whether any of those commodities should or should not be decontrolled, then they go back under the control. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. TAFT. Yes.

Mr. DONNELL. Now may I ask the Senator: Is there any provision in the conference report which designates how long a time the President has within which to appoint the Decontrol Board?

Mr. TAFT. If the Senator was present at the time, he heard the distinguished Senator from Kentucky assure the Senate that the Board would be appointed immediately before the adjournment of the Senate. As we expect to adjourn on the 1st of August, I take it that the Board will be appointed before that time. I covered this question when the Senator was not in the Chamber. I stated that the Board would have presumably 3 weeks, and I estimated that it might take them a week to get organized, and they may have a week for the public hearings, which would have to be short. We placed in the measure language providing that the views of those interested would have to be presented in writing, so it was clear that the Board did not have to let everyone talk indefinitely. The Board could assign 2 or 3 days, we will say, to hearing the industries, and the OPA, and would then have a week to decide. Of course the Board may say, "We cannot decide." But I notice the Senate did not have any trouble in deciding for instance, on cottonseed and soybeans in 10 minutes the other day when that question arose, without previous notice. I see no particular reason why a group of intelligent men, after spending a week in listening to the two sides, should not make a decision yes or no on these questions. But it does depend, as I have pointed out, upon the President's action in appointing the Board immediately, which he has assured us he will do.

Mr. DONNELL. May I add to the Senator's comment, with his permission, this statement: As I see it, under the wording of lines 7 and 8 on page 7 of the conference report the Decontrol Board is to be composed of three members appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. It seems to me that with the tremendous importance attached to this particular Board, the Senate of course will desire to use at least reasonable care in giving its advice and consent. Now, suppose, for illustration, that the President shall make his appointments, as we will estimate, on next Monday, and the Senate desires to adjourn on Wednesday or Thursday, we will say. It is entirely possible, is it not, that the personnel which he might select might be men comparatively unknown to the Senate, or with respect to whose views the Senate might desire to make very considerable investigation? Suppose, for illustration, that the appointments are made on Monday; that the action of the Senate with respect to them is not taken until, we will say, Thursday. There would only remain approximately 20 days within which the Board could exercise the various functions under the act prior to August 20? That is correct, is it not?

Mr. TAFT. That is correct.

Mr. DONNELL. Now returning to the first question I asked the Senator, Does he regard that length of time as sufficient to enable the Decontrol Board adequately to make the various findings of fact contemplated by subparagraph (B) on pages 4 and 5 of the conference report?

Mr. TAFT. I think the Board can do it just as I think the Senator could do it if he were a member of the Board. I think he could make up his mind and come to a decision on the basis of the evidence presented to him, and I think he could do so in 2 weeks.

I may say that there is this difficulty about making the time longer, namely, that while that time lags the country is in a state of uncertainty and indecision. In fact, I think it is a very proper criticism of the measure that we are not making this decision ourselves now instead of leaving it to the board. But it seemed to be impossible to have a measure which contained such a provision. It is important, for instance, in the livestock industry that the feeders know by August 20 whether they can go ahead. Cottonseed is now being brought in in Texas, and no one knows what can be paid for cottonseed. No one has the faintest idea of what can be paid for cottonseed. In fact, it probably will result in there not being any purchases made of cottonseed until the question is settled as to whether or not it shall be controlled, and what the price shall be. So we have a balancing of convenience. The longer we put it off the longer we keep the country in uncertainty. And also the shorter the time is, the more difficult it is for the Board to decide. But I see no reason at all why the Board should not decide. It is directed to do so. Its decision may not be correct, but certainly I see no reason why it should not make a decision.

Mr. DONNELL. I well understand the Senator's position, and I thank him for his statement.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I should like to say to the Senator from Missouri that this date was not reached casually or without most careful consideration. The first suggestion was that the moratorium be fixed at 30 days. The Senate conferees felt that even such a period would be too short a time, but the House conferees insisted upon 15 days. Reluctantly they then agreed to the date of August 15. The point was made that the problem was so complicated and there was so much for the Board to do, that it would be almost physically impossible for it to move efficiently in that time. After further consideration, the date of August 18 was proposed and was acceptable. It was considered by some, including myself, that the concession of 1 day or 2 days more on the part of the House conferees would be of real value. I felt very strongly that every day was exceedingly vital, because there was so much to be done that even a day's grace would be very helpful. Then with considerable reluctance the House conferees finally agreed to move the date to August 20. That was as far as they would go, and that date was fixed only after the various stages to which I have just referred had been gone through.

Mr. DONNELL. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. My inquiry goes to the question of whether if the conference report is adopted, the provision found on page 16, section 18, that all orders, price schedules, and so forth, in effect on the 30th day of June shall be deemed in effect under this extension of the act or reenactment of the act, or whether under the terms of that section, the several industry advisory committees which were appointed under the Price Control Act which expired on June 30 will be continued as advisory committees.

I ask the question because the provisions of section 11, beginning on page 12, limiting the authority of the Office of Price Control in the fixing of prices and providing certain standards, with the requirement that such standards shall be followed, also carries the provision that the only way that the action can be tested is by an application by an industry advisory committee. If there are no industry advisory committees there is no way by which to test it.

Mr. TAFT. I would suppose that the words "all regulations, orders, price schedules, and requirements under the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, in effect on June 30, shall be in effect in the same manner," and so forth, would be broad enough to cover the appointment of advisory committees. Such committees are appointed under section 2 (a) of the Price Control Act. It says that "the Administrator shall, at the request of any substantial portion of the industry subject to such maximum price," and so forth, "appoint an industrial advisory committee or committees, consisting," and so forth.

I would think such appointments would be under an order of the Administrator and would be continued in effect under the provisions of section 18.

Mr. CORDON. I think the construction placed upon the act with reference to that matter is very important, because if industry advisory committees must be appointed again, and perhaps appointed with a different personnel, all the value that could come from the experience of the committees which have acted through the war period, will have been lost, and any action taken by the new committees would be so delayed that any opportunity to test the action of OPA with reference to the standards would be delayed so long as to make the committees almost worthless.

Mr. TAFT. I agree with the Senator; and I think my opinion is correct.

Mr. President, I wish to conclude by saying that I have felt from the beginning that it was somewhat too soon to take off all controls. It is unfortunate that this law expired on the 1st of July. I think if it had expired at the end of the year, by that time we would have reached a point at which all serious danger would have been removed. I have been afraid, however, that if all controls were removed we might find speculative increases in goods with respect to which there are still serious shortages. The principle of that statement is illustrated by rents. In the case of rents everyone admits that rents would probably double if controls were completely removed. The same thing is true with respect to a certain number of commodities, in my opinion. I have always felt that there should be a renewal of controls. Unfortunately we were faced in the beginning, as we have always been faced, with the choice between no control at all and control by an organization which in my opinion is completely wrong in many applications of the principles of the Price Control Act, and principles seem to have been adopted which are not in the Price Control Act. I had that problem in connection with the last bill. I have it now. I do not like controls. I do not like the discretion given to the Price Administrator. I would prefer to have a better measure. But in the final analysis my own conclusion is that it would still be dangerous entirely to remove controls; and rather than have no bill at all, I intend to support the conference report.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate, each with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 1253. An act to enable debtor railroad corporations expeditiously to effectuate reorganizations of their financial structures; to alter or modify their financial obligations; and for other purposes; and

S. 2304. An act to provide for the training of officers for the naval service, and for other purposes.

EXTENSION OF PRICE CONTROL—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 371) extending the effective period of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, anyone who has listened to the questions which have been asked since noon relative to the provisions of the conference report on the pending joint resolution, the faltering answers which have been given, and the conjecture as to what may happen, has ample evidence that the conference report is not clear. Members of the Senate, and particularly the Senate conferees, do not know what provisions of this measure might be interpreted by a board in a manner which would be unfavorable to a decontrol program.

If there was any doubt in my mind as to whether I would oppose the conference report, it was entirely removed by the very pertinent questions asked by the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. In view of the history of OPA officials in the past and their stubborn resistence to constructive price legislation, I think it would be impossible for a thinking person to vote for the conference report. Every Senator knows that this measure is no better than the interpretation of a board, which in my opinion will be averse to a decontrol program, averse to a program which would bring about maximum production. The truth of that statement has been demonstrated during the past 4 years.

The questions propounded to the majority leader reveal a pitiful situation. There are to be three decontrol agencies and six pricing formulas. Senators have asked whether certain businesses or individuals would be included under the provisions of the joint resolution. We do not know. I expect to touch on that subject. But first I wish to stress that we do not know what is in this measure.

I remember the words of the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] when he spoke on this subject recently over the radio. He stated that this measure would give the Price Administrator more power than ever before. Yet in all this confusion——

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I will gladly yield when I am through with my speech. I asked the Senator to yield a while ago, but he was unable to do so.

Senators speak against this report, but say that they intend to vote for it. Under its terms we are granting more power to the OPA. We are granting power to a Board. If the experience of the future proves to be anything like the experience of the past, we shall be giving power to a Board which will be averse to free enterprise, a Board which will not decontrol, a Board which will not permit profit in industry. We shall destroy maximum production. That is the kind of a Board we shall have.

This morning I received a clipping from a New York newspaper. It reads in part as follows:

> A Wall Street rumor that Chester Bowles may return to the revived OPA as a member of the Decontrol Board touched off heavy selling in the stock market today and prices cracked 1 to 5 points.

What would Senators think of him on this Board? Would they like it? Then add to that Board Leon Henderson, and down would go stock-market prices another 15 or 20 points. Then if a fellow-traveler were added to the Board, business in this country would have absolutely no confidence in such a Board.

I am not saying that the President would appoint such men.

Mr. PEPPER rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to complete my statement. After I have concluded I shall be glad to yield to any Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska declines to yield at this time.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I call to the attention of Members of the Senate the fact that they are voting for something in the dark, something they do not understand, something which will have a terrific impact on the economy of this country. And we are to rely upon a Decontrol Board. I wish Senators could know the problems which have come before those of us who have worked with various complaint committees. There have been many orders which have been absolutely impracticable. Many have not been understandable. Since 1936 more than 107,000 orders have been issued requiring 90,000,000 words to write them. And yet we expect to do business under the orders and directives of a decontrol board which I, for one, feel will not be in full sympathy with maximum production, which is the American way.

OPA officials are here taking notes. I think they ought to take notes. They will have a headache when they get this measure. I do not know how they are going to interpret it.

Last night there was published in the Washington Evening Star a cartoon depicting a certain many-headed animal being presented at the White House.

The comment of the President was, "There ain't no such animal." This is a conglomeration of compromises put together in a so-called Price Control Act which is not a price control act at all.

Mr. President, we are not extending the old act. The old act is dead. Not very long ago the Senator from Texas [Mr. O'DANIEL] told us time and time again that the old act was dead. The OPA act is dead, and we are now writing a new price stabilization act for the coming year. The proposed new act contains many loopholes. It is a surrender of power to the bureaucrats to a greater extent than ever before, even in time of war. Our entire trust must be placed in a board, which I think will be no more friendly than the OPA has been in the past. So I am against it. If we are to have a new price-control act, we ought to have an act which will control every factor entering into prices. This measure does not do so. There is no control over wages. There is no control over half a dozen items which enter into the cost of acquisition. Yet in the closing hours of the session we say, "We have done the best we can. We have made every effort we could. We will pass this act and give it to the businessmen, the farmers, the producers, and the processors of the country under the theory that it will stop inflation."

If we are to write a new price stabilization act, let us write one which is clear. Let us write one which is capable of interpretation. Let us write one in which Congress sets down the principles, rather than delegating congressional authority to a board.

Time and time again I have heard Senators say that we should overthrow bureaucracy, and that we should not delegate congressional power to bureaus and boards; yet it is proposed by this measure to grant to a board greater power than was given to any similar agency during the war.

The conference report submitted to the Senate presents an unparalleled departure from the legislative processes which this honorable body has heretofore employed in the discharge of its duties. It is so serious a matter that it challenges the very foundations upon which this segment of the legislative branch of our Government rests.

If the Senate condones what is here presented and what the report plainly reveals as having been done, it may just as well permanently delegate its legislative authority to the conferees who have signed the report.

By its action the Senate authorized an appointed number of Senators to meet with Members of the House for the purpose of ironing out the differences between the legislative enactments of the Senate in the Price Control Extension Act and those of the House.

The conference report submitted to the Senate, however, plainly establishes that our conferees, instead, proceeded to substitute a new bill in place of the one which had so painstakingly been adopted by the Senate. In so doing, our conferees not only disregarded all the proper limits of their authority, but plainly frustrated the purpose and intendment of their appointment.

Thus, there emerges a new legislative technique—at least it is new to me—brought forth by an ill-conceived stratagem which can find sanction only in the philosophy that the end to be attained thereby justifies the means.

Such a philosophy, if approved as a rule of conduct for the guidance of this Senate, can only result in the subservience of the Senate to the will of the Executive, and the disruption and disorganization of the balance which our Government was intended to have. We simply will not have that any more. If there is any doubt about whether the Executive has had something to say about the writing of the conference report, if the conferees will tell the truth, and I think they will, it will be found that he had something to say about the writing of the report, and so did the OPA authorities, insofar as the conference committee was concerned.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. If the Senator will permit me, I prefer not to yield at this point. I think I should not do so, inasmuch as I have already refused to yield when other Senators have requested that I yield to them.

Mr. HAWKES. I shall take only a moment or two.

Mr. WHERRY. I appreciate that and I appreciate the enthusiasm of the Senator in regard to this matter and the contributions he has made; but I should like to complete my statement first, and then if the Senator will ask me to yield to him, I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. HAWKES. Very well.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, our conferees did not proceed to iron out differences or to compromise on the matter of price control. In one fell swoop, they abjectly surrendered the principles which the Senate has time and again established by overwhelming affirmative votes.

I am speaking about the decontrol of meat and the decontrol of milk. The Senate voted overwhelmingly to decontrol them. The vote was 2 to 1 in favor of decontrolling them. Legislative integrity demanded that the distinguished majority leader, as well as our other conferees who were designated to represent the Senate, should have carried out the will and the mandate of the Senate which appointed them.

Our conferees, however, did not even report an impasse in their deliberations, and request further instructions from the Senate, before yielding the principles which this Senate established after countless hours of debate and effort. Neither did the Senate conferees disagree and demand that the conferees on the part of the House take the question of specific decontrols before the House and have the House vote upon them, as should have been done before the Senate conferees made any compromise, and came back with this report.

What I have just suggested is the usual procedure. The House had not acted upon that matter. So the conferees on the part of the Senate could have and should have stood their ground. They should have demanded that the conferees on the part of the House take back to the House the question of the specific decontrols as provided by the Senate, and have those matters voted upon by the House. But our conferees did not do that. They compromised before they reported to the Senate that there was a total disagreement, if there was. They now say, "Here is the conference report; take it."

In the report they have deleted the provisions for the decontrol of meat. That provision was adopted by the Senate by a vote of 49 to 26, almost 2 to 1, and the Senate also had voted for the decontrol of milk and dairy products by a vote of 51 to 27. But the conferees have omitted such provisions from the conference report. So all this talk about whether these commodities will be decontrolled or will be controlled is just so much poppycock, because, as I said, it is left to the Board. If we give the Board authority to control, it will control. There is no question about what the result will be.

Mr. President, reasonable men uninfluenced in their tasks could have readily resolved the differences between the Senate's views on this all-important legislation and those of the House, and reasonable minds—and if the conferees are not reasonable, they should resign—are always open to compromise on debatable issues; but I rise in protest against the manifest prostitution of the Senate's recorded position on the legislation which we all recognize as so vital to the sound economy of this Nation.

Let me quote what the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] said during the debate in the Senate, that he would do if he were made a conferee on the proposed legislation. The debate to which I now refer occurred when the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire and the distinguished Senator from Kentucky were attempting to resolve their differences about writing in a provision about grain. Someone suggested to the Senator that he accept a compromise and that the compromise be taken to conference and worked out there. The distinguished Senator from Ohio said this:

If I am one of the conferees I shall insist upon every provision the Senate places in the joint resolution. We are not going to rewrite the joint resolution in conference. In my opinion the conferees should stick by whatever the Senate places in it, unless the House is willing to vote on the measure and turn it down for some particular reason, because the House has taken no action. I dissent from the theory that we are going to put something in the joint resolution and then rewrite the whole measure in conference. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, July 12, 1946, p. 8755.)

That is exactly the position which I thought the distinguished Senator from Ohio would take. But the conference report comes back to us with those provisions deleted. Meat is not decontrolled; milk is not decontrolled. All this talk about letting the matter go to August 20, and then perhaps meat will be decontrolled and perhaps it will not be decontrolled is just so much window-dressing. No one can put his faith in a proposal such as this. No feeder will put his faith in it; no manufacturer will put his faith in it; and no one at all will put his faith in it. Such an arrangement will simply stymie production in the United States. Yet, in the face of this statement, which is more than an assurance; it is a positive representation made to the Senate upon the basis of which he was made a Senate conferee, the distinguished Senator from Ohio, has signed the report and now says he is going to vote for it, although I think it wrecks the decontrol provisions which were written into the joint resolution by the overwhelming vote of the Senate. Moreover, he agreed to delete from the joint resolution the specific exemptions which were written into it by the Senate, and by which he agreed to abide.

The technique which was employed by our colleagues on the other side of the aisle to subvert the will of the Senate is revealed in the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON].

It will be recalled that after he had turned to the majority leader and had said, "What about this," and after the majority leader replied, the Senator from Connecticut then said:

I may say to the Senator [Mr. BARKLEY] that I have decided to vote against the amendment because I am relying on the strong right arm of the Senator from Kentucky in the conference to do away with the meat decontrol amendment, and also the poultry decontrol amendment. Therefore I have decided, after considerable thought, to support the Senator's position so far as this amendment is concerned, and shall so vote. I believe that the seed which has been sown by the other side of the aisle will be harvested in November to their intense disappointment. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, July 10, 1946, p. 8573.)

Our distinguished majority leader performed exactly as some of our colleagues relied upon him to do. His strong arm is plainly evident in the language of the conference report. Those who expected him to ignore the express will of this Senate in rewriting the bill the Senate passed were in no wise disappointed. Their expectations were overwhelmingly fulfilled.

It would also have been more appropriate if the will of this body had been carried out, instead of the will and wishes of advisers to the Chief Executive. We have reached the point in this legislation where the will and views of individuals associated with the executive branch of the Government have been superimposed upon the Senate, and that is more dangerous a condition and more threatening to the security of our Nation than the absence of any price-control law at all.

This man Porter and this man Bowles think they can write the legislation which will apply to 130,000,000 people, and now an attempt is being made to have the Congress give them the authority to do so, without attaching any strings at all. What else will the Senate mean if it approves the conference report? Do we wish to have the Executive govern us? If so, there is no need for price control and no need to take such a long time in discussing and debating it, if we are then to let some representative of the White House tell us what the White House will accept, and make us feel that we must follow that dictation, for fear the White House will veto the measure. Mr. President, such leadership as that is weak-kneed, spineless, and does not meet the need of the legislative authority and the legislative branch of Government in passing upon legislation.

Nevertheless, it is significant to note that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] got tobacco decontrolled; that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] got poultry decontrolled; and that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] did succeed in getting somebody's version of the Taft amendment written into the surrender. And the cotton boys were untouched. I refer to it as a surrender because it is not a compromise. The rest of us, however, I presume, are supposed to take what is left. And, mind you, Mr. President, we are supposed to take it in good grace. We are supposed to take the rest of it as the hindermost part of the whip.

Mr. President, this legislation is not a party question, nor are the charges I have made matters for party or partisan consideration. This legislation is as important to the economy of the Nation as the legislative process, which the conference report has swept away, is to the stability of our Government. I trust that the votes Senators will cast will reflect due appreciation of that fact.

Mr. President, the conference report is a complete abdication of legislative authority. I think there are other reasons why it should not be adopted. The conferees have rewritten section (e), eliminating specific exemptions of meat, poultry, poultry products, eggs, milk, dairy products, and butter. It reads as follows:

(e) (7) No maximum price and no regulation or order under this act or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, shall be applicable with respect to poultry or eggs or food or feed products processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part therefrom, or in the case of leaf tobacco or tobacco products processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part therefrom, except that, after August 20, 1946, maximum prices with respect thereto may be reestablished pursuant to the provisions of paragraph (3) of this subsection (e), but only under the standards prescribed in paragraph (8) (C) of this subsection (e).

(e) (8) (A) No maximum price and no regulation or order under this act or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, shall be applicable prior to August 21, 1946, with respect to livestock, milk, or food or feed products processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from livestock or milk with respect to cottonseed or soybeans, or food or feed products processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from cottonseed or soybeans; with respect to grains for which standards have been established under the United States Grain Standards Act, as amended, or any livestock or poultry feed processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part therefrom.

Mr. President, it is significant that the conferees have provided for the decontrol of poultry, unless the Board decides to put poultry back under control. The conferees have taken affirmative action, and they have provided for the decontrol of poultry, and it is out of the picture unless the Decontrol Board puts it back under control.

But in paragraph (8) the situation is entirely different; the provision is stated in the reverse. The conferees say we are not going to provide for the decontrol of meat, and we are not going to provide for the decontrol of milk; no—unless there is a hearing and unless various other things are done and unless all of that is completed by August 20, and then the Decontrol Board decides whether controls should be left off. In one place the conference report provides affirmative action. In the other there is negative action or, rather, a failure to act. There is a reversal of position as between the two amendments.

The Senate had overwhelmingly voted to exempt these and a group of interrelated farm commodities from price control. Indeed all commodities under (7) and (8) were exempted, and they did not come in that order, and that decision was not made by the Senate.

The vote to exempt meat, poultry, and eggs was 49 to 26.

The vote to exempt milk and dairy products was 51 to 27.

The conference report completely wrecked the decontrol of these commodities and reestablished controls in this area of our economy which is so vital to the stability of our entire economic structure.

Our colleague, the able and respected Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] made the point on July 10, page 8551 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, that very serious potential repercussions would result from the decontrol of meats without the decontrol of milk.

The distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], and the distinguished senior and junior Senators from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES and Mr. TOBEY] pointed out on July 12, pages 8752, 8753, and 8754 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, that economic necessity demanded similar treatment for meats, poultry, milk, and grain.

The distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] in his speech on July 10, at page 8535 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in arguing for the decontrol of cottonseed and soybeans as a necessary incident to the decontrol of meat, pointed out the poor logic and unsoundness of anything less than consistent action in this area of our economy, and no one disputed his statement.

Our conferees, however, not only deleted some of these categories of products but pulled out others for separate treatment, and, in so doing, they opened the door for further discriminatory treatment by giving discretionary authority to the executive branch to recontrol these fields.

The Members of the Senate have a right to know just why its mandate was ignored, and particularly why such inconsistent and illogical action was taken. What factors did the conferees consider? What wisdom did they have with which the body of the Senate had not been endowed? What facts had they which the Senate did not know? What arguments did they consider in reaching a decision to give separate treatment to meats as compared to poultry products?

To argue that tobacco, and poultry products, meats, milk, cottonseed and feed grains can be variously dealt with is to deny what even a farm boy knows.

Let me remind the Members of the Senate that the Decontrol Board which will be established by the Chief Executive under the provisions of this legislation, will, in fact, be a Recontrol Board to the precise extent that the Senate and the House grant the Board discretionary authority in any field. The members of the Board will be appointed by the President, and will be responsible to the President, not to the Congress.

I dare say that not even the distinguished majority leader would seriously take issue with me on the proposition that it is evident from the entire course of the President's action, and from his every public utterance, that the administration's policy is to retain control rather than to restore to the Nation the benefits of free enterprise as rapidly as that may be done consistent with safety.

So, I have no hesitancy in predicting that the Decontrol Board will, in fact, be a Recontrol Board in every sphere in which such action is authorized as a matter of discretion in the legislation under consideration. As it is proposed in the conference report, the Recontrol Board will even have authority beyond anything which has heretofore been envisioned by the Congress, and it will be authorized to employ a new technique which has never been authorized before.

It will have the power to regulate and control profits, and will have the power to decide and determine what is and what is not a reasonable profit in connection with any nonagricultural commodity.

This is the first time Congress has ever made such provision. Chester Bowles has placed cost absorption on the shoulders of industry—and I shall later put the figures in the RECORD—but we have never ratified it by Congressional authorization. However, under the pending measure, it would be done, for in subsection (t)—the so-called Wherry amendment which was not only modified but wrecked—there is laid down a provision whereby the Congress authorizes the practice of cost absorption. So the newly proposed act, about which we boast as being a price stabilization act, turns out not to be that at all, but to be a profit control act. One man out of 140,000,000 is to be allowed to determine what profit the rest of us shall receive. There can be no doubt about that. If history repeats itself, that is exactly what will happen during the coming months of the life of this so-called OPA extension act.

The new criterion and the unparalleled standard which the Decontrol Board will be authorized to employ, when it is functioning in its decontrol capacity, would authorize the Board to reimpose ceiling prices notwithstanding we might have an abundant oversupply of the commodity. To me, that is very silly.

Subsection (d) (3) of section 1 (A) provides as follows:

(3) Whenever, after a reasonable test period, it appears that the supply of a nonagricultural commodity which has been decontrolled is no longer consistent with the applicable decontrol standard, the Administrator, with the advance consent in writing of the Price Decontrol Board established under subsection (h), shall reestablish such maximum prices for the commodity, consistent with applicable provisions of law, as in his judgment may be necessary to effectuate the purposes of this act. The supply of a nonagricultural commodity shall be deemed inconsistent with the applicable decontrol standard in any case where the prices of the commodity have risen to and after a reasonable test period remain at unreasonable and inflationary levels.

What does that mean? It means that the question of supply is to be determined by the price and, still worse, it is to be such price as the Decontrol Board finds to be unreasonable. That is the standard. Yet, because of economic conditions or factors beyond our control, if a man puts cattle in the feed lot and his labor costs and the cost of corn increased to such an extent that, by all rules of equity and fairness, he should be allowed an increase in the price of his product comparable to the increased costs which he has been compelled to pay, and if he charges more than the June 30 price range, it can be determined that the price is unreasonable, and even though there were 20,000,000 surplus head of cattle in the United States, cattle could not be decontrolled. That was the interpretation placed on that section by one of the ablest attorneys I have ever known, a man in whom I have the utmost confidence. I assert that if that section is examined it will be seen that the interpretation I have placed upon it is a very reasonable one.

It will be noted that under this provision of the act, the supply is to be determined by the price, and still worse, it is to be such price as the Price Control Board finds to be unreasonable. It seems obvious that although we may have an abundance or oversupply of any commodity, if the cost of production or replacement, because of other economic forces, was greater than the previously controlled price, it would readily be held to be unreasonable and automatically, under the bill, the commodity would be in short supply and subject to be recontrolled.

It should be perfectly evident to all Senators that not even the strong right arm of the distinguished majority leader authorized or penned this formula.

The one thing which manufacturers, processors, farmers, and other producers have asked of us is that we give them legislation which will enable them to deal with reasonable certainty in the realm of prices.

Mr. President, I wish to say to all Members of the Senate that recently I returned to my State, and the next day I went to my own home town. I asked some of those cattle feeders there what they wanted and what was bothering them. I asked, "Why do you not have cattle in the feed lots?" They replied, "Why, we don't know what the Government is going to do from one day to another. One day corn is $1.02 a bushel. The next day it is $1.32 a bushel, and the next day the price is still higher. How can we operate under those conditions?"

Mr. President, what is true with regard to the producer of meat is also true with regard to the producer of petroleum, the producer of milk, the processor, and the miner. The uncertainty of the effect of a measure such as this will not result in maximum production. It will stymie production because of the confusion which will be bound to result in interpreting the act.

The Senate proposed to restore to the Nation that reasonable certainty without which there can neither be progress nor stability. But, the conferees took it back. They have said and proposed that we too shall say to the producers of livestock, "you may have price control again on August 20; we do not know yet." They have said and they propose that we too say, "Poultry may not be under price control, but you, as a livestock producer may be controlled."

Mr. President, what do you think of that? Here is a man who buys feed, and who might engage in the production of milk, or who might engage in the production of beef. He is not controlled as to his poultry, but the man dealing in meat and the man who produces milk is controlled, in different areas, different segments of industry. It is proposed that we say, "However, probably, there will be no ceilings on dairy products or on feed; we do not know; but please go ahead and produce lots of hogs and beef cattle, because we must have production in order to lick inflation."

I will yield to any Senator who desires to speculate on the kind of answer such a statement would evoke from anyone concerned therewith.

The joint resolution in the form in which it has been brought back by the conferees is the worst possible threat to production. How can it be called sound in the face of unanimous opinion that volume production is the real answer to preventing run-away inflation? It will be worse in this respect than the monstrous control we have endured these past 12 months. We voted in the Senate to correct this problem, and remove this uncertainty. We must now reaffirm that conviction by turning down the report.

So much has been said before this Senate in recent weeks and months about black markets that one hesitates to bring the subject up again. The almost certain rebirth of widespread black markets, however, is unavoidably a major consideration in this matter. If we want to properly name the joint resolution, it should be called the "black-market extension bill."

Extending the black market is exactly what it will do between now and August 20. That is what it should be named, because when we control meat we are going along hand in hand with the black-market operators. The testimony before the committee, of those who know, is that 80 percent of the meat handled up to June 30, 1946, went through the black market. That is understood. That is admitted. Yet what are we going back to with controls? We are not going back to legitimate competition. We are going back to dealing hand in hand with the black-market operators and are going to again promote wholesale disrespect for law.

Before June 30, black markets had grown so bad in meats and butter—and previously they had been as bad or worse in poultry and eggs—that the United States Department of Agriculture was forced to begin open reporting of black-market prices in order to cover the markets.

Just think of that. That is an open admission by a department of the Government of the black markets operating so extensively.

This type of situation is bad, Mr. President, bad for public morale, bad for honest producers, bad for honest manufacturers and processors. It breeds disrespect for Government. It is dangerous from a public health standpoint. It breeds violation of income-tax laws. Above all, it penalizes directly all the virtues in business and among the public, which we must encourage in order to move forward toward a better Nation and a better world.

How does a black-market operator react to regulations which are on one day, off the next, back on the next, and maybe off again the next, and with an ever-decreasing force to control black-market operators? If he is human—and he is—he will figure that the chances are even greater than before not only that the public will keep him in business and protect him, but that OPA will not get around to catch up with him before the regulation is off again.

Mr. President, in order to save time, because I do not intend to detain the Senate a minute longer than is necessary, I should like to have printed in the RECORD at this point a letter from the Grange, which I offered nearly 3 weeks ago. The Grange says we should decontrol meat because law enforcement has broken down and is completely out of control. They conclude the letter by saying that anything that is completely out of control should be decontrolled in order to obtain respect for law on the part of citizens of the United States. I ask that the letter be printed in the RECORD at this point.

THE GRANGE VIEW

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEAR SENATOR WHERRY: You have asked in regard to the position of the National Grange on the present Senate bill extending the life of OPA. You pointed out that the Grange recommended that unless the OPA could give Congress adequate assurance that it would adjust its price-ceiling program so as to assure recognition of production costs, the agency should be abolished.

You ask if "in the light of the failure of OPA to give any such assurance with reference to meat, dairy, and poultry products" we would support abolishment of the agency, or would prefer to see its control over these particular products abolished.

Our position in regard to the extension of OPA has not changed. We believe some types of controls should be continued where, because of war-created or other abnormal shortages, production has not yet caught up with demand. Where production is being hindered by controls, we believe in an early and orderly removal of those controls.

The Grange had hoped that the Congress would develop a formula which would compel the OPA to comply with the spirit and the letter of the law and encourage maximum production as the most effective means of combating inflation. No such provision has been included in the measure as it passed the House or has been reported to the Senate.

We have sought assurances from the OPA of a price policy which would encourage rather than discourage production and have had no satisfactory assurances that such a policy would be followed. It is, therefore, our conclusion that Congress should remove from control those items:

1. Where control has hopelessly broken down or is retarding production.

2. Where the OPA has given no adequate assurance that it can restore workable controls.

3. Where the black markets resulting from such break-down are resulting in unsanitary conditions or loss of needed products.

4. Where producers are forced either to patronize black markets or go out of business.

In considering the amendment for decontrol of livestock, dairy, and poultry products, we must forego wishful thinking and be realistic. Conviction that controls on those items have hopelessly broken down should carry with it the courage to act decisively.

Sincerely yours,

ALBERT S. GOSS,
Master, the National Grange.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I realize that these remarks by me may be heard by someone who is encouraged thereby to go "black" on his operations. I hope, though, that it influences Senators as statesmen to reassert their considered judgment that we must wipe out these black markets once and for all by insuring decontrol, instead of practically legalizing them by this weak and uncertain aproach.

With respect to decontrol and recontrol there are other questions we need to have answered for us here by the gentlemen who bring back this report for adoption. At what levels will price ceilings be put back on? What will be the timing of recontrol in the various channels of distribution? It takes 2 weeks or more to fill up these channels. A great host of small dealers in meat, grain, butter, eggs, and countless other commodities now own high-priced inventories. Are we to slap roll-back prices on them and force them to go bankrupt in order to absorb the inventory losses? Sure, some of them made inventory profits, but we do not know who they were. Are we going to entertain claims against the Government for all the small cooperative grain elevators in the corn and wheat States?

And what about subsidies? Do we go back to milk and meat subsidies? If so, at what rates? If we do not plan to do so, why do we provide a billion dollars? Last year we, here in Congress, practically set the subsidy rates, and thereby removed a major uncertainty. This new proposal does neither. It does not get rid of subsidies, although definite proof is before us that subsidies are false economy, and do not encourage production.

Frankly, I do not know what this report calls for in respect to these matters. I do not think producers will know, and I do not think that processors and dealers will know. In my opinion there can only be one set of results from our enacting a measure such as this into law. It will be the most serious demoralization and disruption of our agricultural economy that any of us have ever known. Trade will be stagnated for an extended period.

Beginning immediately no one will purchase goods they cannot be sure of selling before August 20, for fear of the inventory losses. And after August 20, the same condition will prevail as long as the Board delays action. Even if the Board acts promptly, it will take another 2 to 3 weeks for the trade channels to fill up again. Thus, at a minimum we will have 4 to 6 weeks of stagnated trade in our leading agricultural products.

We have been so bombarded with scare propaganda on price rises in recent weeks that it is difficult for a layman to appraise properly just what has taken place. The broad outlines are clear, however. All dairy products have gone up to just about the amount of the subsidy.

That is a general statement, and of course there are exceptions to it in localities, there are exceptions to it in areas, but if the figures for the different areas throughout the United States are taken, and the price is averaged, it will be found that the general statement is approximately correct. I do not want to say one thing in my remarks that is excessive, in pleading for votes against the conference report.

Butter, for example, was selling for 56 cents a pound on the wholesale markets at the end of June. The same wholesale price has settled off at around 69 cents during the last few days. This new price is less than the old price of 59 cents, plus the subsidy of slightly more than 14 cents a pound of butter.

Fluid milk prices in most markets have gone up by just about the amount of the subsidy, including, in some markets, the subsidies to milk distributors. The production reports on butter are more favorable than they have been for several months. Reports are coming in that butter is available in such markets as Boston and New York for the first time in many months.

At this point I should like to insert the very latest figures, given to me by the Milk Producers Cooperative Association, which summarize the price today compared with what it was the last week in June, and summarize the price by areas throughout the country. If Senators will read this it will prove to them that the general statement I made about milk and dairy products is approximately correct.

I ask unanimous consent that the statement be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, as I came into the Senate Chamber this afternoon an editorial was handed to me which came from the Daily Mirror of New York City. I shall not take the time to read it, but it compares the OPA range of prices the last week in June, it gives the black-market range of prices on the same date, it gives yesterday's priees, and it gives the prices on butter, sirloin steak, round steak, rib roast, chuck roast, veal rib chops, and a list of others.

Let us turn to the first item, butter. In New York City the last week in June butter cost 67 cents a pound, if it could be procured. That was the fiction price. It could not be obtained. The black-market price was 95 cents. Yesterday's price of butter in New York City—and it could be gotten—was 74 cents, and today's price in New York City is 73 cents.

The market report has just come in. Butter is pouring into the market every day. Every housewife in America knows that for the first time in 6 months the counters are filled with butter, and if the controls remain off the price of butter will go much lower than the black-market price or the OPA price that was in vogue the last week in June.

The meat story should be familiar to all of us by now. I hope it is. I hope I have not worn out my welcome this afternoon. I have done my level best to bring this subject to the attention of the Senate on numerous occasions. I come from the Middle West. Eighty-five percent of the people of Nebraska are farmers. I know that percentage does not hold true in all States; but a large percentage of the people in the Middle West are farmers. They produce meat, they produce milk, they produce the staff of life. There is no group on earth that works longer hours or harder and receives less money for its labor than the group composed of the farmers. Do not ever forget that. If anyone does not believe so let him go out and operate a farm. He will get up earlier in the morning than most of our Government workers do and stay on the job much later at night. He will spend less time in bed and on holidays than do Government workers. I make that statement conservatively. People in the city of Washington have little conception of what a farmer has to go through in the raising of a crop. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] placed in the RECORD several days ago a statement to the effect that the man who produces milk, who enables it to be brought to everyone's door, who feeds and milks his cows, receives for all his work about 53 cents an hour. Yet we complain about the price of milk.

Mr. President, I am interested in meat, because I am interested in those who produce meat. I am also interested in the consumer, because if we can obtain maximum production we can lick inflation, and we can get meat for the consumer cheaper than he will ever get it under OPA. Oh, if I could simply get that fact over to the country. If it could be proclaimed over the radio. But what do we get? We get poisoned propaganda that prices are skyrocketing, that they have risen to new heights today in the central markets. That is all fear propaganda. We have fear peddlers everywhere preaching the scare propaganda.

Mr. President, a few moments ago I said I would not read an editorial which I have from the New York Mirror. I shall now ask the Senator's indulgence and patience, and shall read the editorial, because if fits right in with the matter I have just discussed.

The Phony Prophets.

That is the headline in an editorial in the New York Daily Mirror of Wednesday, July 24, 1946.

The American people belied the prophets of doom after President Truman vetoed the first revised OPA bill.

Prices did not spiral. They went up, with few exceptions, only in the amount of subsidy removed.

How I wish the people would understand that when subsidies are taken off, naturally the price must go up the amount represented by the subsidy. That is all there is to that. If we have had to pay more temporarily for our meat or butter, it was because we have had to absorb the subsidy which was formerly paid by the Government. But the price did not rise. What happened was that the subsidy was withheld and the consumers paid it directly; that is all.

Prices did not spiral. They went up, with few exceptions, only in the amount of the subsidy removed.

The American people did not go on an "inflation spree."

The American storekeeper did not gouge his neighbors and customers.

Buyer and seller behaved with admirable self-restraint. They gave the laugh to Red-inspired "buyers' strikes."

The angry warnings of the President, the breast beating of Chester Bowles, the screaming of the Communists and their stooges seemed pretty silly.

This is the Daily Mirror of New York City.

The Truman administration's score for wrong guesses remained perfect. Remember when it guessed there would be 8,000,000 to 10,000,000 unemployed?

Do Senators remember that? We had to pass an unemployment bill immediately, right away, without any delay.

CEILING WAS JUST A WORD

Food prices during the past year were not the published ceiling prices.

By one device or another, the black markets prevailed.

Without exception, food prices in New York yesterday were under black-market prices. They were higher than the ceiling price, which was always unrealistic.

I call them "fiction prices."

Ceilings, particularly as regards meats, produced a nominal price for an unobtainable commodity.

But goods were plentiful in the black market.

If to the ceiling is added the subsidy, which was paid out of taxes and is realistically part of the price, the cost of foods, particularly meats and dairy products, was always higher than the OPA ceiling price.

Yesterday, these were typical prices, as published in the New York Sun's box score.

Butter 67 cents under OPA the last week in June. The price in the black market was 95 cents. Yesterday's price 74 cents. Today's price 73 cents.

Sirloin steak. The consumers can get sirloin steak now for the first time in 6 months. Sirloin steak. OPA price—and this is the fiction price, when consumers could not even get a mouthful of meat—the range was 40 to 46 cents. The black market price—oh, meat could be gotten on the black market all right—the price range was 95 cents to $1.25. Yesterday's prices 63 cents. I am quoting from the Daily Mirror of New York of today. Sirloin steak, today's price 55 cents a pound.

Round steak, 40 cents to 46 cents under the OPA for the last week in June. The black market price $1. Yesterday's price 49 cents. Today's price 49 cents.

Rib roast. The OPA price the last week in June, 32 cents to 36 cents. The black market price 90 cents to $1.10. Yesterday's price 45 cents. Today's price 45 cents.

Chuck roast. OPA price, 27 cents to 32 cents. The black market price range 85 cents to $1. Yesterday's price 38 cents. Today's price 45 cents.

Ground beef—Senators know what that is. I have had a great deal of it in the last 6 months or a year. OPA price 28 cents. Black market price 75 cents to $1. Yesterday's price 35 cents. Today's price 40 cents.

Veal loin chops: OPA price 41 cents—when it could be obtained. Black market price 85 cents to 95 cents. Yesterday's price 55 cents. Today's price 60 cents.

Veal rib chops. OPA price the last week in June, 38 cents to 43 cents. Black market price 80 cents to 95 cents. Yesterday's price 47 cents. Today's price 52 cents.

This is from the editorial published in today's issue of the New York Mirror. I continue to read the editorial:

What was the reason?

No matter how one looks at it, this does not represent a spiral inflation. It does not represent gouging. It does represent self-restraint.

I agree with that statement thoroughly.

It also proves that two economic laws were functioning truly: The law of supply and demand and the law of diminishing returns.

OPA "liberal" and communistic—

This is printed in bold type.

OPA, "liberal" and Communist propaganda was designed to frighten the American people into believing that a run-away inflation was actually occurring.

This was a lie!

I am quoting, Senators, understand.

Government spending and Government borrowing plus increased wages without increased production are the causes of such inflation as is present in our economy today.

Passing of the "denatured" OPA bill won't cure it.

What it will do is secure some 34,000 OPA bureaucrats in their jobs for another year—to continue the process of Government spending and Government borrowing!

That is the end of the editorial from the Daily Mirror of New York, today's issue.

Mr. President, as I have said, the meat story should be familiar to all of us by now. Receipts of cattle and hogs at the principal markets have been unusually heavy and a full variety of the different cuts of meat have become available to consumers in the eastern markets during the last week or so for the first time in several months.

Everyone is quite agreed on that. Every time one passes a grocery store he sees great big streamers saying "Beef today." "Veal today." Everyone has to agree that today we have meat on the meat counters. That was not the case under OPA.

Naturally there has been some indecision and preliminary uncertainty with respect to prices. No one knew just how much meat consumers would buy or what prices they would be willing to pay after 2 or 3 years of subsidized prices and wholly inadequate supplies.

There is evidence in the last day or two that prices are settling off with trade becoming more normal every day. It is not at all unreasonable that there has been some degree of price fluctuation during this trial period of free markets. I admit that. I believe that the facts will show that livestock producers, the meat industry, and the public have demonstrated a statesmanlike attitude during these last 3 weeks and have demonstrated that the black markets can be licked quickly and effectively and that honest people can buy honest grades of meat at honest prices if livestock and meats are left free of control. I think the last 3 weeks have demonstrated the correctness of that statement. Senators must remember that we have a wheat crop of 1,100,000,000 bushels. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] is my authority for that figure which he has received from the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. REED. One billion one hundred and forty-five million bushels.

Mr. WHERRY. One billion one hundred and forty-five million bushels, which is the second largest wheat crop in the history of the United States. The estimate released a few days ago by the Department of Agriculture is that the corn crop will reach a figure in excess of 3,000,000,000 bushels.

Mr. REED. Three billion four hundred and seventy-five million bushels.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator. I do not want to make an extravagent statement. It is 3,000,000,000——

Mr. REED. Three billion four hundred and seventy-five million bushels.

Mr. WHERRY. I did not want to give any New Deal figures to the Senate. Three billion and how many million?

Mr. REED. Three billion four hundred and seventy-five million bushels.

Mr. WHERRY. Three billion four hundred and seventy-five million bushels of corn. That I believe is the second largest corn crop in the history of the United States.

Mr. REED. It is the largest crop we have ever had.

Mr. WHERRY. My statement is subject to change without notice. I will revise my statement and say it is the largest corn crop we have had.

Mr. REED. And one and one-half billion bushels of oats.

Mr. WHERRY. One and one-half billion bushels of oats. God has blessed us. We have tremendous crops of wheat, corn, and oats, and we have feed. There is no shortage of feed. We have 10,000,000 more cattle than the average for the 10-year prewar period. Is it not a pity that we cannot feed them the grain and give the people the meat? That is all there is to it. If the Senator from Ohio means what he says—and I am sure he does—there is no excuse in the world for not decontrolling meat. The surplus is here; the feed is here. Why hang on to controls? Why control meat? Why cause black markets? I appeal to Senators. That is not the American way. Let us get rid of controls when there is a surplus. Let us use the feed. It is here. There is nothing to worry about. If we will do as we have been doing for the past 3 weeks, my prediction is that there will be a wholesale—and wholesale means more than retail; it means unusual liquidation of cattle. The counters will be full of meat. That will be the quickest way to get prices down to meet the family income. The best feature about it is that we shall have meat, and we did not have it under OPA.

On the whole, it is highly significant to me that the editorial policies of most of the newspapers have shown a gradual shift in the past few days toward a feeling that these important food products should be left free of control, not as an experiment, but because producers and distributors have proved during the past 22 days that they can and will operate in the public interest if they are free from the entangling and burdensome restrictions and uncertainties imposed by subsidies and price ceilings.

I believe that is a statement that meets with general acceptance. There is no doubt about it. We have demonstrated it. It has been my position since I became a Member of the United States Senate that under the Price Stabilization Act the way to combat inflation was to get maximum production. It has been demonstrated in the past 3 weeks that we can get maximum production when the price impediments which have been imposed under the Bowles price-fixing program are removed. Certainly if we can retain all the advantages in the way of greater production with less Government expenditures for subsidies and more adequate supplies, which we have had in the past 3 weeks, then we should continue without price ceilings and give the farmers, the processors, and the American distributors their chance under a free enterprise system to help combat inflationary forces. That is the tried and true American way.

To keep faith with agriculture and agricultural industry the Senate must voice its firm disapproval of the hodge-podge of uncertainty which is presented to us today in the form of a conference surrender—not a compromise, but a surrender. It settles none of the problems which have been of such serious concern to us, and leaves those most affected by price regulations in a greater state of uncertainty than they have been at any time since OPA was started. I sincerely hope that those who joined with me in voting for the exemption amendments on the floor of the Senate 2 weeks ago will stand by their convictions and refuse to approve the conference report.

With respect to the so-called Wherry amendment, it is not pride of authorship which prompts me again to call it to the attention of the Senate. I ask that the simplicity of the Wherry amendment be considered in contrast to the magnificent compendium of averages proposed in the conference report, and which take the place of subsection (t) of the original Wherry amendment.

The legislation which this body authorized used the calendar or fiscal year 1940 as the base period for the structure of the prices authorized for the next 12 months. One of the reasons for selecting 1940 as the base period was that in that prewar year, when competition existed at all levels of our economy, discounts and mark-ups prevailing at every level were competitively established, and it was generally recognized that prewar discounts and prewar mark-ups, having been competitively established, were not inflationary and would not be inflationary in the future. But the conferees propose that we abandon that standard in a tremendous realm of price control and that we sanction the very evil which was practiced when Chester Bowles brought the Nation to the economic chaos with which we are now obliged to cope.

I referred to cost absorption in my opening remarks. If Senators believe that cost absorption is not advocated by the conferees, I assure them that they are misled and beguiled.

Paragraph (t) provides:

> In establishing maximum prices applicable to wholesale or retail distributors, the Administrator shall allow the average current cost of acquisition of any commodity, plus such average percentage discount or mark-up as was in effect on March 31, 1946.

With respect to Chester Bowles' cost absorption theory I quote from exhibit D. Exhibit D shows that there were 514 price increases from December 31, 1945, to and including June 30, 1946. Of those 514 increases, 302 had to be completely absorbed by the little retailer, the corner grocer, the baker, and candlestick maker throughout the country. There were also partial absorptions of price increases. What do we do when we establish the date of March 31, 1946? While it is true that we permit current costs, yet we freeze the mark-ups, with those absorptions in them. That means, for example, that furniture dealers who get their furniture from Michigan and other Northern States or from Southern States must absorb 12 percent of the cost. That is frozen in the 1946 price list as of March 31. If we had gone back to 1940, it would not have been frozen.

For the first time the Congress is authorizing the cost absorption program and policies of Chester Bowles, which we have never previously authorized.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point the table known as exhibit D.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JULY 11, 1946.

Mr. WHERRY. To approve the provision as it is now written in the joint resolution would be to perpetuate the evils of cost absorption and give legislative sanction to the continued disruption of the distributor segments of our economy. When Senators go to various towns and meet the retailers they will find that Congress will be blamed for authorizing for the first time the cost absorption policy throughout the whole United States.

As I previously stated, this is not a price stabilization act. It is a profit control act; and the Congress never intended it to be such. We shall again be confronted with the spectacle of all business being obliged and compelled to find means to evade and avoid the application of such folly. This will further tend to destroy respect for law, which is the foundation of a sound American society.

If I may return to the prices of meat as of today, certain information has just been handed to me. This information comes from a compilation of figures from the American Meat Institute and the Department of Agriculture. This table shows today's prices on all classes of beef on the hoof, the feeder realization, and the percentage change as compared with the last week of June 1946, under OPA price control.

With respect to choice steers, from 1,100 to 1,300 pounds, the average price on July 22 at the 12 principal markets was $23.50 a hundred. Those cattle furnish the best meat that can be obtained. We are not getting many of them today. Senators will have to take my word for that. According to the figures of the Department of Agriculture, for last year the percentage of prime cattle sold in the market was 14 percent. Bear that in mind. Those are the double A cattle, the choice steers, the prices of which hit the top. Those are the prices about which the fear peddlers are talking. The Department of Agriculture did not have the figures for this year. That class of cattle, constituting only 14 percent of all the cattle sold in the 12 principal central markets last year, the double A prime grade, brought an average price on July 22 at the 12 principal markets of $23.50 a hundred. The feeder received a subsidy of 50 cents a hundred. The processor got a subsidy of $4.50, but the feeder received only 50 cents. So if we subtract 50 cents from the price of $23.50 on July 22, the feeder realized $23 on the average, for 14 percent of all cattle sold, if the percentages are the same as for last year.

How does that compare with the price for the last week in June? The average price during the last week in June for that class of cattle which, as we know, were not on the market, was $17.80. In percentage, that represents an increase of 29 percent, on only 14 percent of all the cattle sold.

The next grade is what are called good to choice. Last year this class constituted 31 percent of all the cattle sold. That is where we get the good steaks which we take home. On Monday, July 22, the average price for that 31 percent of cattle sold on the 12 markets was $19. The subsidy was 50 cents, so the feeder realized $18.50.

What was the average price under the Bowles system?—$17.12. So actually there is an increase of only 8 percent on 31 percent of the meat sold on the meat counters of the country. That is an 8-percent increase. It is only eight-tenths of 1 cent a pound. That is all the increase there has been in the price received by the men who have fed the cattle. I wish the Senate to understand that.

Medium grade cattle constitute 27 percent of the total number of cattle graded. They are classed as the commercial grade. That is where we get the lower-grade cuts of beef, and that grade constitutes 27 percent of the total supply that is graded.

On Monday, July 22, at the 12 principal markets the price was $15.25 a hundred. The subsidy was 50 cents. The feeder realized $14.75. Now let us consider what the average price under Bowles was. It was $15.12. So this price is a decrease in the amount of 2 percent for 27 percent of the meat that is sold on the hoof today.

What about the Common grade of meat—and many of us are eating Common-grade meat today, regardless of whether we know it. On Monday the price was $13. There is no subsidy on that class of meat, so the feeder realized $13. The average price under Bowles was $13.78. So there has been a decrease of 5 percent from the Bowles price, as compared to the price on last Monday. Some persons have said that the prices on meat are skyrocketing, but there is a comparison of the prices on all grades of beef.

Mr. WILEY. And 80 percent of it was sold on the black market, under the Bowles system.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator from Wisconsin for that comment, which is entirely correct. Of course, I am comparing present prices with the theoretical price under Bowles. But if we wish to make the actual comparison, as the Daily Mirror did, we should compare present prices with the black-market prices, because last year 80 percent of the meat was sold in the black market. So we must remember that when we consider the conference report.

Now let us look at the market report. I have given the prices. I think this is a revelation. It shows that we now have what we were waiting for. This is the proof. Here is what is being done without price control. If I remember correctly, one of the fine statements made by the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] before he went to Paris was—although I cannot quote his exact words—"Let us have an experiment on meat." I think he used the words "trial and error," and he said, "Let us see whether we can decontrol meat." So the Senate voted to do that. But now, under the conference report, we shall not have a chance to do it. It is obvious that under the provisions of the conference report, no one will be able to justify the removal of controls from meat. Under the report, it will not be possible to do that.

Mr. President, I submit the comparative statement of prices, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President, what about the receipts of meat? I read from the market report. It shows that—

Salable receipts at 12 markets for first 3 weeks of July on cattle amounted to 771,000 head, compared with 411,000 head, last 3 weeks in June, and 552,000 in 1945.

What do you think of that, Mr. President? Yet we are told that meat must be controlled. We should give these people a chance to liquidate.

The report also states:

Calf receipts at 12 markets, same periods, as follows: 154,000—

For the 3 weeks just ended, as compared with 103,000 under Bowles, and 109,000 a year ago.

Mr. President, rather than read the remainder of the report, I submit the entire report for printing in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Salable receipts at 12 markets for first 3 weeks of July on cattle amounted to 771,000 head compared with 411,000 head last 3 weeks in June and 552,000 in 1945. In other words, cattle receipts for first 3 weeks in July up 88 percent from last 3 weeks in June, and up 40 percent for comparable 3 weeks a year ago. Calf receipts at 12 markets, same periods, as follows: 154,000, 103,000, 109,000. In other words, calf receipts up 50 percent from last 3 weeks in June and up 42 percent from comparable 3 weeks in July year ago. Sheep receipts for same periods, 385,000, 664,000, 414,000, off 42 percent from last 3 weeks in June (marketings were encouraged by the ending of subsidies) and off 7 percent from comparable 3 weeks in July. Hog receipts first 3 weeks in July amounted to 930,000, compared with 313,000 last 3 weeks in June and 554,000 for comparable 3 weeks in July a year ago. In other words, hog receipts were up nearly 3 times, 197 percent from last 3 weeks in June, and up double from year ago, 105 percent.

Market supplies of cattle and hogs this morning continued to exceed substantially supplies for the comparable period of a year ago. Larger livestock receipts mean increased meat production, and increased meat production has resulted in the largest supply of meat available for consumers since last January.

Salable receipts of livestock for the first 3 weeks in July have shown tremendous increases over the last 3 weeks in June and the comparable 3 weeks in July 1945. During both latter periods impractical and unenforceable price-control regulations were in effect.

Cattle receipts at 12 markets for the first 3 weeks in July totaled 771,000 head, up 88 percent from the last 3 weeks in June and up 40 percent from the comparable 3 weeks in July 1945. Hog receipts for the first 3 weeks in July were at record levels for this time of the year, being nearly 3 times the receipts for the last 3 weeks in June, when OPA controls were still in effect, and more than twice the receipts received at 12 markets for the comparable 3 weeks in 1945.

Reinstatement of controls on livestock and meat may have the effect not only of drying up immediately these large supplies of livestock coming to market but also discourage any future production thus jeopardizing the meat situation for the spring and summer of 1947 especially in view of the indicated all-time record corn crop of 3,500,000,000 bushels.

A report on the livestock market this morning is summarized as follows:

Cattle receipts at 12 important markets today amounted to 53,400 head, off 39 percent from the large receipts of a week ago but still 28 percent larger than a year ago. Receipts for the first three days at 12 markets amounted to 192,600 head, up 12 percent from the same three weeks of a year ago.

The Chicago office of the USDA comments on the cattle market yesterday as follows:

"The actual top on steers mounted to within 35 cents of the recent all-time record peak, as one load of Choice to Prime 1,177 pounds. Iowa fed offerings commanded $26. These cattle stood head and shoulders above the average run of Choice steers as indicated by the fact that the next highest price was $25.35. Most Good and Choice fed steers and yearlings brought $21.50, including 1,025 pounds. Yearlings up to the latter price. Common and Medium native and southwest straight grass steers in loadlots cleared unevenly from $12.50 to $17.50, including Medium 950 pounds. Missouri offerings at $17 on which the best bid was $16.25 at the recent low point. Quite a few loads of steers fed grain on grass and grading Medium to Good found outlet from $18.50 to $21."

The cattle market opened active at Chicago this morning up 25 to 50 cents when compared with yesterday's close. Early top was reported to be $26.25 per hundredweight for only 7 loads of fancy cattle, which compares with an extreme top yesterday of $26 brought by one load of Choice to Prime fed steers and with the top of $26.35 paid last Wednesday. A large number of cattle are still selling at prices well below last week's peak, in spite of sharply decreased receipts.

Receipts of calves at 12 markets this morning amounted to 12,400 head, off 19 percent from the comparable receipts a week ago but were 49 percent larger than receipts for the comparable Wednesday a year ago. Calf receipts for the first three days of this week were up 47 percent for the comparable three days a year ago.

Sheep and lamb receipts at 12 markets of 40,200 head, were off 22 percent from the large receipts on Wednesday a week ago but were 6 percent larger than the receipts for the comparable day a year ago. For the first three days of this week sheep and lamb receipts were off 11 percent from a week ago but were up 11 percent from the comparable 3 days a year ago.

Receipts of hogs at 12 markets this morning amounted to 48,300 head, which were 34 percent less than receipts for the large receipts on Wednesday a week ago but were 65 percent larger than receipts for the comparable Wednesday a year ago. For the first 3 days hog receipts have amounted to 128,800 head, up 23 percent from the comparable 3 days a year ago.

Hog prices at the Chicago market this morning were reported steady 25 to 50 cents higher than yesterday's close, with a top of $22 per hundredweight. Sows, which now comprise one-third, or 40 percent of the supply, are also selling at 25 to 50 cents higher prices, with a top of $20 per hundredweight.

The effect of liberal increased supplies of all meats and consumer resistance to the extremely high prices charged by black-market operators is shown by the fact that upper limit quotations on the key New York market have dropped from $13 to $15 per hundredweight. The Government wholesale meat trade report today indicates that some in-between sales of beef on the New York market are under $1 to $2 per hundredweight lower than yesterday. They report the supply of beef and veal very liberal, pork around normal but more than sufficient. Demand is very slow and prices for beef and veal and pork are weak.

Mr. WHERRY. Now let us consider the situation as to hogs, which supply fats. The poor people need fats. They must have fats as a part of their diet, and they must get fats either from butter or bacon. Such meat is a necessary part of their diet. We find that for the 3 weeks just ended, hog receipts amounted to 930,000 head, as compared with 313,000 head for the last 3 weeks of June, and as compared with 554,000 head for the corresponding 3 weeks a year ago. So three times as many hogs come in during the last 3 weeks as came in during the same 3 weeks in the month of June, and yet we are told that meat must be controlled.

I think the figures I have submitted are positive evidence that meat should be decontrolled. I think we should not wait. I think we should decontrol it now. I think the feeders of hogs and the feeders of cattle should have assurance from the Senate that it will not keep them in a state of confusion and in all this uncertainty.

Mr. ROBERTSON. And remember that 80 percent was sold in the black market.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. President, as the distinguished Senator from Wyoming said a short time ago, in Wyoming 50 percent of the lambs are contracted for now. So those people are not going to take the chance. There is plenty of grain and there is plenty of livestock. All that it is necessary to do is to bring them together, and meat will be produced. But the producers are not able to do that because of the impediment of price control.

Mr. President, I should like to have printed at this point in the RECORD further memoranda relative to the livestock and meat situation.

There being no objection, the memoranda were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORANDUM FURNISHED BY AMERICAN MEAT INSTITUTE TO MEMBERS OF CONGRESS, JULY 12, 1946, REGARDING CURRENT LIVESTOCK AND MEAT SITUATION

Market receipts of cattle at twelve of the principal livestock markets of the country today amounted to 17,300 head, which is about one-third smaller than the unusually large marketings of last Friday, but more than double cattle receipts for the corresponding Friday a year ago.

A summary of the week, however, shows the total cattle receipts at the same 12 markets this week amounted to 277,000 head, which is 87 percent larger than receipts at those markets for a week earlier, 36 percent larger than the market supply in the corresponding week a year earlier, and almost twice as large as receipts in those markets in the same period of the last week in June, which was the last week of the life of OPA.

Even more striking is a comparison of the market supply for the 2-week period since price controls were eliminated on livestock and meats. Total cattle receipts at the 12 markets for the first 2 weeks of July, which amounted to 425,000 head, was 53 percent larger than receipts at those markets in the last 2 weeks of June, and 19 percent larger than those in the corresponding period in July last year.

The Chicago cattle market opened this morning slightly higher than prevailing yesterday. The top this morning was $23.25 per hundredweight, for only 11 head. This compares with a top of $23 for the two previous days. However, since this price is paid for only an exceptionally small proportion of the total cattle market supply (frequently less than 5 loads out of a 100 or more loads), such exceptional sales should not be considered as the real trend or level of the prevailing cattle market because such quotations really are misleading as a measure of the cattle market. Most of the cattle sell substantially below this so-called premium level and cattle prices for most classes and grades at the end of this week were only slightly higher than prices prevailing at the end of the preceding week.

The behavior of the cattle market during the past 2 weeks is about what would be expected in view of the abnormal and dislocated conditions that naturally prevailed after 4 years of artificial and restrictive controls imposed by OPA, and the substantially curtailed market supply of cattle available in recent weeks, especially in the last 2 weeks of June.

As soon as more normal conditions are restored and the distributive pipe lines have filled up to reasonable normal levels, an orderly supply of livestock may be expected to be shipped to market and prices will become adjusted to such normal and natural circumstances. This situation, however, cannot be expected to happen instantly. It must take some time.

The hog market yesterday reflected increased available supplies, especially for the heavier-weight hogs and sows. Although the market top yesterday at Chicago was $17.75, most of the heavier weights of barrows and gilts declined about 25 cents per hundredweight and sows were from 25 to 50 cents lower yesterday than in the preceding day. Approximately one-third of the hog marketings at this time of the year consist of sows. Some hogs were carried over unsold yesterday at Chicago.

The hog market today opened stronger with an early extreme top of $18.25, but the more typical price was around $18. The top price at the beginning of last week was $18.50.

Receipts of hogs today at the 12 markets, amounted to 44,000 head, were substantially smaller than receipts earlier this week, although larger than the market offerings on Friday a year ago.

Total marketings of hogs for the current week at the 12 markets and also at a number of important market centers in Iowa and Minnesota were 52 percent larger than the market supply in the same period a week ago and 79 percent larger than the market supply in the corresponding period a year ago. Total hog marketings for the first 2 weeks of July at 12 market centers have amounted to 615,000 head, which is double the market supply in the corresponding 2-week period a year ago, and almost four times as large as marketings in the last 2 weeks of June—the period immediately preceding the demise of OPA.

A spot check of retail meat prices as advertised this week end in various cities of the country shows meat being offered at prices well below old black-market prices. For example, consumers in Chicago were being offered rib roasts at 41 cents, sirloin steaks at 49 cents, round steaks at 48 cents, and roasts at 35 cents and pork loin roasts at from 35 to 37 cents. In St. Louis, top grade rib roasts were being offered at 50 cents. In Kansas City, hamburger was offered at 20½ cents with lamb legs and rib lamb chops at 39 cents and lamb stew at 25 cents. Philadelphia had AA sirloin steak (bone-in) at 49 cents, ham at 48 cents, and spring leg of lamb at 45 cents.

A forecast of the probable supply of meat for civilian consumption this summer, which was made recently by the United States Department of Agriculture, may be of interest at this time. This review of the prospective meat situation reads as follows:

"Supplies of meat for civilian consumption this summer will continue quite short of consumer demand at present ceiling prices. If the general level of food prices were to rise only moderately and controls on meat prices were removed, retail meat prices might be expected to rise sharply for a few weeks. By fall, when production increases seasonally, retail prices would be likely to settle to an average perhaps 15 to 20 percent above present ceilings. If subsidies to processors are removed, a substantial increase in retail prices would be necessary before any increase would be received by farmers. With tight feed supplies, meat production would not increase much from the rate expected under present prices."

MEMORANDUM FURNISHED BY AMERICAN MEAT INSTITUTE TO MEMBERS OF CONGRESS, JULY 19, 1946, REGARDING CURRENT LIVESTOCK AND MEAT SITUATION

The free play of the natural law of supply and demand, unincumbered by unnecessary and restrictive price control regulations, resulted in sharp price declines in yesterday's livestock market, with the United States Department of Agriculture reporting a "general cattle trade collapse" and hog prices dropping $3 per live hundredweight from the previous day's top "in one of the sharpest price reactions in trade history."

The beneficial effect of increased meat supplies, coupled with strong consumer resistance to former black-market prices, is shown by the fact that upper limit beef price quotations in New York City, as reported by the United States Department of Agriculture, yesterday dropped $11 per hundredweight from the peak for good grade beef carcasses. The United States Department of Agriculture reports, in an early flash from the New York market today, that another $4 to $6 drop in wholesaler dressed beef quotations has occurred from yesterday's close.

A spot check of retail meat prices, as advertised in newspapers in different parts of the country yesterday, indicates prices to consumers were well below old black-market prices. For example, consumers in Chicago were being offered ground beef at 35 cents a pound, beef short ribs at 25 cents, beef pot roast at 39 cents, bacon at 50 cents, and sirloin steak at 49 cents. In Cleveland, pork loins were offered at 36 cents and beef rib roast at 40 cents. In St. Louis, newspaper advertisements listed rolled beef sirloin at 45 cents, lamb stew at 20 cents, rib roasts at 42 cents, ground beef at 39 cents, and whole or half hams at 49 cents. In Cincinnati, legs of lamb were advertised at 41 cents, sirloin steak at 47 cents, and hamburger at 33 cents.

A report on the livestock market this morning is summarized as follows: Cattle receipts at 12 markets today continued large for Friday, amounting to 24,900 head, up 53 percent from a week ago and more than three times the receipts for the same day a year ago. Total cattle supplies at these markets for the week were 25 percent larger than receipts a week ago and 77 percent larger than for the same period a year ago. This is the third consecutive week that cattle marketings have exceeded those of the preceding week. This confirms the contention made right along that, with price controls removed from livestock and markets, meat would become increasingly available for American consumers.

The extent of the collapse of cattle prices yesterday is summarized by the United States Department of Agriculture for the Chicago market as follows: "Today's general trade collapsed. Even the top on Choice steers dropped to $25.65, with the practical top at $25. However, none of these steers had the beef yielding merits of the several loads at $26.25 and $26.35 paid Wednesday. Nevertheless, it was a 50 cents to $1 lower market on Choice yearlings and weighty steers; with Common, Medium, and low-Good kinds not only $1 to $1.50 lower but many Medium to low-Good grassy and short-fed light kinds without bids at the close. Much of the same condition featured Medium and low-Good heifers; the supply that sold standing $1 or more lower, with even strictly Good and Choice kinds 75 cents to $1 down. Average Choice heifers sold at $21.50 and high Choice mixed offerings stopped at $24. Strictly Good beef cows and heiferettes lost 50 cents on top of crumbling declines on Wednesday. But this proved to be a relatively small loss compared with the $1 to $1.50 break on cutters and common and Medium beef cows, a liberal proportion of which were without bids at the close. Most beef bulls dragged at $2 lower prices than last week, with sausage offerings $1.50 lower."

Cattle prices this morning again dropped sharply with most grades quoted from 50 cents to $1 lower than the substantially reduced prices prevailing yesterday. The early top on cattle in Chicago this morning was $24, which was off $2.35 from the extreme top paid here for a few head Wednesday. The Government also reports this morning that indications are that there may be a considerable hold-over of cattle today unless further price reductions occur in the market.

Receipts of calves and sheep and lambs also were unusually large this week. Calf receipts were 18 percent larger than last week and 73 percent above a year ago.

Hog receipts at 12 markets today amounted to 34,000 head, which is a reduction from last Friday but is 75 percent larger than Friday a year ago. The large salable supply of hogs today, however, will be augmented with a heavy carry-over from yesterday at a number of markets. At Chicago, 4,000 hogs were reported carried over from yesterday. Total hog receipts for the week were slightly smaller than the large receipts of the preceding week but were more than double the supply for the corresponding week a year ago.

Hog prices at Chicago this morning opened slow, steady with yesterday's close, with sows selling about 50 cents lower. The top today at Chicago was $19.65 which compares with the top earlier this week of $22 per live hundredweight. The toboggan in hog prices yesterday was described by the United States Department of Agriculture as follows: "In one of the sharpest price reactions in trade history, hog values were off $1.50 to $2.50 today. The comparison is with the general trading Wednesday. Even at the decline buyers refused to take all offerings and at the close approximately 4,000 hogs remained unsold carrying bids at least $2.50 or more lower. The practical top of the market dropped to $20 after having reached $22 on Wednesday, similar weight hogs had to sell late in the day at $19.

The following table compares the price of the upper limit quotations for each grade of dressed beef at New York City on Thursday, July 18, with upper limit quotations for Friday, July 5 (largely representing prices charged by former black-market operators).

Beef carcass prices New York City

[Dollars per hundredweight, dressed]

	Thursday, July 18, 1946	Friday, July 5, 1946	Decrease
Choice	$46	$55	−$9
Good	44	55	−11
Common	42	50	−8
Utility	38	40	−2

Upper limit quotations reported by the United States Department of Agriculture.

These upper limit quotations, of course, do not reflect the selling price of the bulk of sales, but they do illustrate strikingly the extent of the slash of the black-market prices since price control was removed in the major meat consuming center of the country.

The experience of the first 3 weeks without price controls on livestock and meats is convincing proof that a tremendous increase in supplies of meat is being made available on a much more equitable basis and at reasonable, competitive prices which are lower than black-market prices prevailing prior to the elimination of price controls. The industry is well on its way to returning to stable conditions notwithstanding the fact that it had to recover from "famine conditions" prevailing at the time controls were eliminated at the beginning of the month. Meat distribution pipe lines, which were almost exhausted in the closing days of price controls, had to be replenished. This takes time, but it is being done.

MEMORANDUM FURNISHED BY AMERICAN MEAT INSTITUTE TO MEMBERS OF CONGRESS, JULY 22, 1946, REGARDING CURRENT LIVESTOCK AND MEAT SITUATION

The market supply of both cattle and hogs today was somewhat less than for the comparable day a week ago and prices were steady to moderately higher. However, marketings of cattle were still substantially larger than at this time a year ago and reports from large meat consuming centers indicate that the meat distribution pipe lines are being filled up and that there will be even more meat available for consumers this week than there has been in many, many weeks.

Cattle receipts at 12 midwestern markets today amounted to 92,300 head, which is about 8 percent less than the receipts at these markets on Monday a week ago but 17 percent larger than the corresponding Monday a year ago.

The Chicago office of the United States Department of Agriculture comments on the sharp drop in cattle prices on Thursday and Friday of last week as follows: "Augmented by a liberal carry-over from Thursday, burdensome supplies of common, medium, and good grassy and short-fed steers and yearlings sold 50 cents to $1 lower than Thursday, when buyers could be found, but many loads and lots carried bids which suggested an even greater decline. The break, meanwhile, has operated to throw increased numbers of yearlings and typical two-way cattle with weight into feeder channels, but at prices $3 to $4 or more lower than packers were paying for the same kind of cattle early this week. * * * Insofar as cows are concerned, a large part of the sharp advance scored over the last 2½ weeks has been all but wiped out in the last 2½ days. Many distress sales today were as much as $1 lower than Thursday with the general market on all grades $1.50 to $3 under the recent high time. Canners and cutters bulked at $7.25 to $10 and most common to low-good beef cows went at $10.50 to $14.50."

The cattle market opened at Chicago this morning at steady levels for steers and yearlings with cows 25 cents to 50 cents lower than at the close of last week. The early top was reported to be $24.75 per hundredweight for a few loads of fancy steers which compares with $24.50 last Friday and with the extreme top reached early last week of $26.35. Only a relatively small number of cattle sell for these so-called top prices. Most cattle sell at much lower levels.

Receipts of calves at 12 markets this morning amounted to 18,600 head, up 4 percent from a week ago and up 59 percent from the same day a year ago.

Sheep and lamb receipts at 12 markets also were up today, amounting to 60,200 head, 8 percent larger than a week ago and up 29 percent from a year ago.

Receipts of hogs at 12 markets this morning amounted to 34,200, off 29 percent from the market supply of last Monday and 12 percent less than receipts for the comparable Monday a year ago.

The early top on the hog market at Chicago this morning was $20.50, about $1 per hundredweight higher than the practical top of $19.50 paid last Friday, but still $1.50 per hundredweight below the top of $22 reached the early part of last week.

In a review of the general market conditions for the week, the United States Department of Agriculture report for western dressed meats at New York indicated since July 1 outside prices (upper limit quotations) have dropped as follows: "Beef, $5 to $11 with good and choice grades off most; commercial to choice vealers, $6 to $11 with good and choice off most; commercial to choice lamb, $3 to $5 with good and choice off most; pork loins, $5 to $7; Boston butts, $4."

The Department of Agriculture concludes that "since the bulk of dressed meats have been selling at near or outside price ranges for many months," average prices are considerably lower in spite of the price advances shown by the established meat packers. On Friday, last week, the Department of Agriculture reported another drop in the upper limit quotations for beef carcasses at New York City so that Choice beef by the end of last week had dropped $13 per hundredweight and Good beef $15 per hundredweight from the peak reported on July 5 (and representing the black-market price, at which the Department of Agriculture states, that the bulk of dressed meats has been selling for many months). This indicates that former black-market price levels are being effectively destroyed under free economy by increased volume and by resistance on the part of consumers.

The situation at the week end proves that, without OPA controls, beef cattle, on which prices had been run up well above ceilings by black-market operators, are seeking reasonable levels, both in prices and supply. It also proves, as the meat industry has contended all along, that without the protection of artificial price barriers set up by OPA regulations, black-market operators cannot compete with the established meat industry and its know-how in economical and efficient operation.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I am sorry to have taken this much time. I believe what I have said from the bottom of my heart. I want to help this administration. I want to help get meat on the table. I want to help the consumers. There is no politics insofar as my position is concerned. There is no selfishness about it. It has been demonstrated that the situation will be taken care of if the administration will give us just half a chance.

Now let us consider section 18. Remember all the questions that have been asked about it. We recall the question which was asked by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], who ended his statement by saying that there will be a lot of headaches as the result of section 18. The question, "What will happen under section 18?" is one of the $64 questions involved in this matter.

We find that under section 18, the conferees are asking the Senate of the United States, as I think, to bankrupt every grain elevator in the United States.

Mr. President, please note what subsection (2) of section 18 provides. I read it:

All regulations, orders, price schedules, and requirements under the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended—

Except what, Mr. President?

(except regulations or requirements under section 2 (e) thereof relating to meat, flour or coffee)—

Those three—and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, which were in effect on June 30, 1946, shall be in effect in the same manner and to the same extent as if this act had been enacted on June 30, 1946.

Mr. President, all the Senators who asked questions about what will happen to the men who have grain under contract just as soon as this conference report is signed by the President should realize that it will make it mandatory that the Price Stabilizer put into effect the prices which were in effect on the last day of June, under the OPA, and that those who have the grain must sell it at the legal price or else they will be black-market operators. Those persons will not have a chance to clean up. They will have to sell the grain and take a loss, if they are to keep within the law. That is exactly what the conference report will require. It cannot be interpreted in any other way.

Mr. President, in the face of the intent of the Senate, why should the Senate go back to the price levels as of June 30, 1946, and the prices which were in effect on that day? The consequences of the enforcement of the provisions of section 18 are so plain that no Senator requires any elaboration upon it.

Insofar as the provisions of the proposed legislation require the Price Administrator to make any change in any maximum price, such provisions "shall not be deemed to require such change to be made before the thirtieth day following the date of enactment of this act."

In other words, after the conference report is agreed to, no one can apply to the Price Administrator for a change of price, for the conference report will preclude the Administrator from doing anything about it before 30 days have elapsed. So the elevator men will not be able to obtain relief; they will simply have to sell at the OPA price which was in effect on the last day of June.

What difference will a contract make? Of course, if someone has a contract which he will agree to maintain, and if title to the grain has passed and if the man who is subject to the contract will pay for the grain in accordance with the provisions of the contract, that will be all very well. But every grain operator and every small elevator man who bought grain at present prices will be compelled by the conference report, if it is enacted, to charge the legal price which was in effect on the last day of June 1946. Do not let anyone tell you otherwise, Mr. President. That is exactly what that provision of the conference report means. But our conferees would, nevertheless, have the Senate of the United States roll back all prices to those which prevailed on June 30, 1946, except those relating to meat, flour, or coffee, as soon as the President signs this measure.

It is contended by the attorneys for OPA that section 2 (e) of the original Price Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, relating to meat, flour, or coffee, is put in this measure so that the subsidies will not be paid after June 30, 1946, and that that is the intention of this provision. But I ask anyone in the Senate Chamber whether this measure can be interpreted differently than the way I have interpreted it, namely, that the minute this bill is signed it will require that all segments of industry so affected shall immediately comply with the regulations and the orders and the price ceilings that were in effect on June 30, 1946.
